

THE NORTHVILLE RECORD.

XLV. NO. 1

THE RECORD: NORTHVILLE, MICH., FRIDAY, JULY 31, 1914

$1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE.

BIG TIME HERE

NEXT WEEK

WELL GAMES WILL BE HOTLY CONTESTED WITH PROFESSION-ALS ON THE DIAMOND.

The indications are that the baseball and race tournament to be held here next week Thursday, Friday and Saturday, will be one of the biggest events known in Northville for some time.

The entire towns of Farmington and Redford anticipate coming, as well as a large delegation from Wayne and Dearborn.

The Farmington ball team has engaged Carl Stimpson to play short stop and several other professional players have been secured by the other teams who are to compete for the big cash prize. Harley Warner, one of the U. of M. athletes, comes home to play with the team from overseas. It is also rumored that several of those on the Tiger team which plays in Detroit that week, have been engaged by the Wayne aggregation Dearborn having secured the services of one of the substitute outfielders.

PARMENTER HAD NARROW ESCAPE

BULLET FROM HOWARD BENT-LEY'S REVOLVER WENT THROUGH FLESH IN AB-DOMEN.

ROYAL OAK PEOPLE HAD A QUAR-REL AT WALLED LAKE LAST FRIDAY.

A quarrel over the return home of a wife to Royal Oak from a cottage at Walled Lake is the reason given for the shooting of a bullet through the abdomen of a man at Pontiac last night.

Mrs. Bentley is a niece of Mrs. Parmenter and was visiting with them at the Walled Lake cottage. Bentley went to Pontiac last night to see her husband, who had gone to the cottage to see his wife, and urged her to return to Royal Oak with him.
Bentley says Parmenter came in and dispute arose and Parmenter attacked Bentley.

The Play-Singers---Chautauqua's Best Lady Concert Company---Who Will Appear at Our Chautauqua

Story telling is an art as old as the race. To tell stories in music is an exceptional art. The Play-Singers make their instruments talk. There is the universal language of harmony. Every nation understands a musical message. Rich and poor, high and low, young and old enjoy the descriptive numbers of the Play-Singers.
Few knew how to look at a picture until instructed. Without guidance many do not enter into an appreciation of the best music. The Play-Singers make it plain. It is a frequent expression heard after one of their programs, "Well I never knew there was so much in music. I can now appreciate it."

One of the Lyceum bureaus which engaged the winter tour of the Play-Singers wrote after the season was over that this was the greatest musical success they had ever booked.

The program committee has such confidence in this company that they have decided to give them the entire time of the afternoon program for the second day. They will also give another concert in the evening preceding the lecture by Governor Vessey.

WITH CENTRAL CHAUTAUQUA MEET IN NORTHVILLE, AUG. 16-20.

FARMINGTON EDITOR WAS "ASLEEP AT THE SWITCH"

As a rule, country editors are not of the sleepy kind of folks, but, on the contrary, have to take even their regular repose with at least one eye open, in order to be sure of making a living and keeping up with the procession in their chosen vocation. But, occasionally the most wide-awake ones are liable to be caught napping if they overdo the non-sleep business—especially unmarried members of the profession who are suffering with the "fatal" wounds inflicted by Cupid's arrows.

A case in point is found in the recent experience of Editor Price of the Farmington Enterprise, who is—ought to be—convinced by now that he can't hold too frequent prolonged evening interviews at a certain residence not far from the west end of town, keep in touch with all the social entertainments going and perform the manifold duties incumbent upon him as general factotum—and then some—of a village paper, without eventually coming to grief for want of sufficient sleep. And Editor Price is a pretty wide-awake chap, too, but one morning last week he got up very early and did a few days' work, preparatory to taking a day off and attending the races. Having been up late the night before because of one of those "professional" visits, previously referred to, he decided that he might as well utilize the time required for the D. E. R. car ride to Detroit for a much needed nap—or else he couldn't help it. Anyway, he went

A BOYS' SCHOOL AT STATE FAIR

SCIENTIFIC FARMING WILL BE TAUGHT THERE THIS YEAR SAYS MANAGER DICKINSON.

"We cannot do too much for the country boy and the country girl, they should stay on the farm and we must make them realize it is the best place to be," says G. W. Dickinson, Secretary-Manager of the Michigan State Fair. "Nowadays, with the telephone, the automobile, the rural free delivery and the centralized school, children in the country enjoy all the advantages of city children and they are not brought into constant contact with the evils of city life. Many young people think farming is just work, like ditch-digging.

The State Fair school, which will be one of the features of this year's fair, serves to correct this impression.
The boys are taught that farming is as scientific and as highly organized as any business or profession and that a person can get to the top by it as quickly as by any other way."

"In every school house in Prince Edward county, Va., the following creed for the American country boy is posted. To me it puts the matter in a nutshell as I was brought up on the farm, and I would like to see the country boys' Creed posted in every rural school in Michigan."

"I believe that the country which God made is more beautiful than the city which man made, that life out of doors and in touch with the earth is the natural life of man. I believe that work with nature is more inspiring than work with the most intricate machinery. I believe that the dignity of labor depends not on what you do, but how you do it; that opportunities come to a boy on the farm as often as to the boy in the town; that life is larger and freer and happier on the farm than in the city; that my success depends not upon my location, but upon myself; not upon my dreams, but upon what I actually do; not upon luck but upon pluck. I believe in working when you work and playing when you play and in giving and demanding a square deal in every act of life."

LEAVES THE FIELD TO CONGR'MAN KELLEY

CONGR'MAN S. W. SMITH WITH-DRAWS FROM RACE IN HIS OLD 6th DIST.

Congressman S. W. Smith of the old 6th District has withdrawn from the race for the Republican nomination for Congress and leaves the field clear to Congressman P. H.
Kelley.

Mr. Smith's letter, announcing his decision to retire, reads as follows:
"To the voters of the sixth congressional district. Entertaining the conviction that I have held in recent campaigns that I would not aspire for a renomination if there were other prominent candidates for the position, I have decided not to be a candidate for renomination."

"As it is well known, the recent legislature, in redistricting the state leaves the state with two members, viz., Mr. Kelley and myself, serving in the present congress. Mr. Kelley who is now in his first term, is desirous of being renominated."

"In declining the candidacy for a renomination, I am frank to say I had an ambition to serve another term to round out 20 years, but I can forego that. I thank my friends who have been kind enough to voluntarily circulate my petitions, which have been generously signed, expressing a desire to again honor me with another term, and also for the hundreds of letters tendering most cordial support."

The Unhappy Pair

Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Company.

By Edward Boltwood.

Richard is the most bashful person I have ever met, excepting myself. It is so easy for any girl to embarrass him, and of course especially easy for me. There is a good deal of Richard, and when he is embarrassed he frowns and pinks up and looks perfectly lovely. So I was very much disappointed to see that he didn't pink up a bit when I first told him that they had decided on a day to announce our engagement.

By "they" I mean my family—Aunt Justina and Aunt Gertrude and Bess who have been running Richard's and my engagement ever since he told Aunt Justina that he had to marry me or die.

"Well, let 'em announce it," he said. "What do we care?"

"But you don't see," I explained. "They are going to give an afternoon reception to pet and patronize."

"Pet who?" asked Dick.

I noticed by his grammar that he was beginning to be scared.

"Pet us, you goose!" I said.

"Must I be on hand?" said he.

I tried to freeze the way Aunt Justina does in church.

"I didn't know, Polly," he said, crestfallen and nice. "I have never been announced before. Why can't we be engaged and announced and married all by ourselves and let everybody else go to the—"

"Richard!" I shouted, just in time, but he finished the sentence in his mind, and I guess I did.

You will hardly blame us when you understand about Northover, where I live. It is a sleepy, beautiful village and it hasn't much to do except to look at the views and discuss pronunciation.

There are lots of girls in Northover, and also girls who have grown up, and never married. This makes it rather awful to be engaged in Northover.

Northover people are dear and generous and neighborly. If you have a great trouble, they all pitch in to help you with it. And if you have a great happiness, they all pitch in to help you with it, too, until you want to scream.

After the engagement was decided and Dick had gone back to New York, Aunt Justina and Aunt Gertrude and Bess were very anxious about it. We all four were as chipmunk happy. When we had finished crying, we had dinner and there was a tomato soup.

Richard liked a chair from Aunt Polly, and Aunt Gertrude, with a meow, said, "I will give you a recipe."

She meant to be pleasant. I knew, but I had a little shiver on my back, bone, just the same. I could feel those pleasant coming along at every meal.

That I should let myself be bothered so by my dearest family made me ashamed of my horrid, bashful disposition.

The night before the engagement announcement Richard came and stayed at the Northover Hotel. Our guests' rooms were full of relatives—Uncle Jerry, and Mrs. Uncle Jerry, and Cousin Miranda. Richard was introduced, and pinked up splendidly.

Polly, we are a pair of childish fools," said Richard. "That party to-morrow can't last so very long."

"It will last fifty times longer," I said, "than the family introduction this tonight."

"That fresh clerk at the Hotel has given me one shot already," growled Dick. "I wanted to punch his face."

In the forenoon, the only sign of Richard was an enormous box of roses I had a terrible fright when it occurred to me that he might be ill, or that he might have a telegram to go to New York. I couldn't eat any lunch, and my backbone shivered without a moment's rest. The afternoon tea was at five o'clock, and at three I cried and told Aunt Justina that I was going to be down. Aunt Justina looked at me queerly and felt my temple. I didn't know it until afterward, but it seems that my mother's sister used to have hysterics, and once walked in her sleep.

Well, I locked myself in my bedroom and just circled around like a bat. At five o'clock Bess knocked on the door to tell me that Richard hadn't come or sent any word. I heard carriages crunching on the driveway, and company voices. For a minute I must have gone crazy with the desire to run like people in a panic, for when I recovered my senses I was outside of my window, on the sloping roof of the side piazza, and I couldn't get back!

I ducked behind the slope of the roof and dropped by a trellis to the ground. My dress was torn, and I was a sight. I scurried through the hedge into the back lane to our pasture. A brook runs across the pasture, and up the brook is a lovely hiding place under the trees. There is a shaded pool, and a tiny waterfall, and a big flat rock. It is the place where Dick told me how much I loved him. I decided to walk there and tidy myself, and then go home and trust to Providence.

A man was lying on the rock, smoking a pipe. He jumped up.

"Polly!" he said.

It was Dick.

I hope I shall not again be so mad at anybody so long as I live.

"You—you coward!" I called him. I would have said "despicable," but I never could pronounce it.

"I know," said Dick. "I'm a coward. I'm a quitter."

This confession rather took the wind out of my sails. Besides, I had to laugh. Dick looked so ridiculous. He was dressed for an afternoon tea, but his long black coat was rumpled, and his shiny silk hat was rolling into the brook.

"Oh, your poor hat!" I said.

We both reached for it and he caught my hands instead of the hat.

"Can you forgive me?" said Dick, sort of tremulously. "I lost my hat. But, honestly, I was going to the tea after I'd smoked one pipe. How did you guess that I was here?"

The whole thing was so absurd that I covered my face and shook.

"Lord!" groaned Dick. "Don't cry, Polly!"

"I'm not," I said, choking.

"You are," said he. "You have a right to. I'm an ill-mannered idiot and a boor. Let's go home and be announced. Look at your dress! All because you had to hunt me up. You witch, how did you know I'd take refuge here? I am an ill-mannered—"

"No," said I. "And if you are, I am one too. I ran away, I didn't know where you were."

He started and smiled slowly. Richard has a heavenly smile, and there is plenty of it. Then he sat down beside me on that beloved rock and the brook did all the sensible talking that was necessary for quite a while. You can have no idea how quickly the time passed, unless you have sat on a rock under similar circumstances. When the factory whistle sounded faintly, I jumped.

"Six o'clock!" I gasped. "The tea! Come on!"

"It's six-twenty," said Dick, looking at his watch. "There's a church-bell ringing."

"Must be a fire," I said. "In Northover, everybody goes to a fire."

Dick chuckled.

"That's good," he said. "The reception will be thinned out, sure. Hardly anybody will be left—we can sneak in quietly—and—"

I asked him what kind of a story we could possibly tell Aunt Justina.

"Listen," said Dick. "I'll tell the story, and take the entire blame of it too. I happened along under your wing down this afternoon and asked you to walk before the reception. You came. I twisted my ankle on a boulder and that delayed us. How's that? Ad right, I guess. But, lost of all, Polly, we've escaped the reception, escaped the chatter, and the head-banking, and the announcement of everything. It's the biggest luck I ever heard of!"

I was so startled away by this good fortune that I forgot about my locked bedroom door. We said good—of the brook, and decided that it was wonderfully poetic for us to have been engaged and announced on exactly the same spot. Richard began to limp so awfully that he put his arm around my shoulder for a crutch. It was pleasant walking that way, and we didn't cut through the hedge but turned down the lane into the main street. At the corner Dick stopped short and pointed.

"Good gracious!" I screamed.

The Northover hose-cart—Catatract, Number One—and the ladder thing—Hercules, Number Two—were in front of our house. The lawn was packed with people, like a circus ground.

"Hurry!" said Dick, grabbing my wrist.

He tore along the sidewalk. It was the quickest cure of a sprained ankle you ever knew. Mr. Mincer, the constable, was sitting on the ladder truck. When he saw us, he shouted and waved his hat and rang the gong. The crowd in the yard yelled and laughed as we raced to our piazza through a little path they made for us.

On the piazza were the chief of the fire department, and the chairman of selectmen, and Sheriff Hoppock, and ever so many others. The open doors and windows were jammed with the afternoon tea people. They cheered, too, and laughed when we ran up the steps.

"Any damage?" panted Dick.

"Damage!" said Uncle Jerry on the broad grin. "Just as if a happy pair couldn't announce their engagement without raising a riot!"

"What do you mean, sir?" said Dick.

"Aunt Justina!" I sobbed, but I hung tight to Dick's elbow.

"Justina is just coming to," said Cousin Miranda, with a bottle of salts. "It was my fault, Polly. We broke in your door. We couldn't find you—and it was terrible—and I telephoned for police or somebody—and they must have misunderstood me—but—"

"Three cheers for Miss Polly Randall!" trumpeted the chief of the fire department.

Dick and I faced about. I never realized before what a large population there was in Northover.

"And for Mr. Richard Chapin!" belated Sheriff Hoppock.

They roared. They dinged the bells on the fire-wagons. They formed a line which reached across the street to shake our hands.

"I wonder if there's time to call out the Triumph Drum Corps," said the chairman of the selectmen.

Well, it was over at last. My fingers ached from congratulations, and Dick had pinked enough, as Uncle Jerry said, for an Alpine sunset. Aunt Justina had forgiven us. We were on the piazza in the twilight, watching Hugh, our old gardener, patch the places in the lawn where the announcement-party had cut up the turf.

"It was a lesson," I said. "I shall never blush again."

"I can't," sighed Dick.

POPE PIUS X GIFTED COMPOSER

Spends Leisure Hours Studying Music and One of His Productions is Famous.

HIS HYMN CALLED EXQUISITE

Director of Sistine Chapel Choir Tells of Excellent Work by Pontiff.

Rome.—The report that the Pope is a gifted musician and often spends his leisure hours writing and studying music, has been fully confirmed by a most unusual announcement.

One of the Pope's latest compositions shortly will be given before a few intimates of the inner circle of the Papal Court. Mgr. Lorenzo Perosi, the Sistine Chapel music director, told a correspondent the Pope, besides being a musician, is also a poet.

"Some time ago," said Mgr. Perosi, "he wrote one hymn dedicated to St. Joseph, his name saint, and afterwards set it to music. The composition was shown to me by his Holiness several days ago. I found it so exquisite, both in form and inspiration, that at first I doubted whether my judgment was not influenced by my love for the Pontiff."

"I then summoned my illustrious colleague, Don Giocondo Fini, and submitted the composition to him with our saying who the author was. His opinion fully confirmed mine, for he said: 'The verses are worthy of any Latin classic and the music is originally melodic and highly pleasing.'"

"The composition, which was for a quartet, was executed by the Sistine Chapel singers and orchestra March 19, St. Joseph's Day."

WHY DRINKERS CLIMB

Sheriff Finds Beer that Eats Up a Frog in a "Speak Easy."

Wilkesbarre, Pa.—Sheriff Lewis P. Kniffen has discovered the secret of the prohibition States. He has found the reason drinkers in "dry" territory climb trees like squirrels.

A year ago the sheriff raided an alleged "speak easy" and confiscated several bottles of liquor. Among them was a quart of beer, into which a frog had crawled while the bottle was being filled. The sheriff put it away for "evidence" and forgot it until recently when he found that the beer was strong enough to eat the frog, the animal having dissolved and disappeared.

Macon, Ga.—The Rev. G. H. Tidwell, pastor of a Baptist church, was killed at his home when a pistol dropped from his pocket and exploded as he was leaning down to kiss his 2-year-old baby good by.

The minister carried the pistol so his young children might not play with it. The bullet entered his brain and Tidwell died in an hour.

Rapidly Forging to Front

One of the most progressive of Detroit's is the Bullock-Green Hardware Co., who operate a chain of five stores, and who won distinction as a leader in the hardware and builders' supply business of the city. Five stores scattered over the city for the convenience of the buying public. The wonderful growth of the city's population has had its effect on this line of business and the thousands of new families who have come here and started new households and the wonderful amount of building has made the hardware and building trade boom as never before.

This concern maintains one standard and that is "quality the highest, prices the lowest." Operating these stores gives them unequalled buying capacity, thus enabling them to secure the very lowest jobbers' prices and quote the very lowest prices to the trade. Roofing is their one great specialty and the many rural people who have availed themselves of the celebrated "Ru-Ber-Oid" an "Ko-Lord" roofing that is sold exclusively in Detroit and its suburbs by them will quickly appreciate the quality of the merchandise offered.

Farm supplies, builders' supplies, and everything in hardware will be found here in great stocks. For information or prices write the main office 1120-24 Fort St. West, Detroit, Mich. and they will gladly give you the desired information, or have a special representative call on you, wherever you are located.

GREAT PUBLISHER DEAD.
Following a stroke of paralysis Rev. Dr. William B. Palmer of St. Louis, editor of the Christian Advocate, died at the home of his sister, Mrs. G. W. Bright, in Richmond, Va. Dr. Palmer had been in every country on the globe and was a leading figure in the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He assisted in establishing Colegio Palmar in Mexico and the Palmar Institute in Japan. He inherited lands in Virginia, where he was born, worth $10,000,000, but rather than dispossess poor squatters he gave them the property.

ANOTHER LIE NAILED.
Biddleford Journal: The old, old story that Marie Antoinette's hair grew gray during the night after she was condemned to be executed has at last been consigned to the category of historic myths. It is now declared that her hair was gray long before she was imprisoned, and that it showed gray at the time of her execution because she had been deprived of her preparations during her term of imprisonment.

STILL WORKS AT AGE OF 104; HELD JOB 81 YEARS.
Philadelphia, Pa. — Jake Hoebach rounded out a pleasant celebration of his one hundred and fourth birthday by eating a half section of a juicy cherry pie. Jake is employed as a farm hand on the country estate of D. H. Kirkner III. in Roxborough. He has held his present job for eighty-one years, and has never once tired of his work.

PLENTY OF FANS THERE.
It may be too hot to work in a comfortable chair in a shady office but not too hot to sit on the hard and sunny baseball bleachers.

THE OLD ERA AND THE NEW.
Japan now presents to the world the spectacle of the only eastern nation where the generation which is now coming into control has grown up under the influence of the full flood of western thought. The fathers of the Meiji era introduced the trappings of the modern state, the forms of a constitutional government; they founded schools and built factories; they established a modern army and navy. "Japan must be strong," they said, "if she is to exist as an independent, self-respecting state, and to be strong she must have the apparatus for making money and for self-defense."

VICE WAR FOLLOWS DETECTIVE'S DEATH

Swann's billiard hall and Major Funkhouser.
CHICAGO.—(Special)—The shooting last week of Detective Stanley Birns in Swann's billiard hall during a police vice raid has caused the police to redouble their efforts to wipe out the Twenty-second street segregated district. Two investigations have been started and announcement made of a police shake-up, with an increase of 1,000 men to strengthen the force.
Chief Gleason, of the police department, has started a war on vice, which he says will be the biggest thing of its kind in Chicago's history, while State's Attorney Mayne Hoyne says he will do some investigating on his own account.
Major M. L. C. Funkhouser, of the morals squad, has promised shortly to issue a report embodying shocking revelations of vice conditions and the machinations of the vice bosses.
W. C. Dannenberg, morals inspector and the director of raids in the vice regions, has announced that his activities will be doubled and promises a raid for every resort discovered.
Mayor Harrison has intimated that he will hurry back from his summer home at Huron Mountain, Mich., to help in the new crusade.
In the meantime, politicians who look to the segregated district for support are busy hunting cover and fighting for a soft pedal on the rising protest over the exposed conditions.

MEXICAN NATIONAL PALACE HAS HAD FIVE TENANTS IN LITTLE MORE THAN THREE YEARS; HOW LONG WILL GEN. CARRANZA STAY?

At the left, Francisco de la Barra (top) and Francisco Carranza; Mexican national palace; Victoriano Huerta and Francisco Madero (center); right, Venustiano Carranza and Porfirio Diaz.
MEXICO CITY.—(Special)—In a little more than three years five presidents of Mexico have held forth in the national palace. In another month another president will be installed. The sixth to take the reins of government since the beginning of the Madero revolution late in 1910 will be Venustiano Carranza, commander-in-chief of the Constitutional army. Speculation is already rife as to whether he will be strong enough to bring peace to the distracted republic and wise enough to solve her many problems.
On May 25, 1911, Diaz resigned the presidency. Francisco de la Barra was chosen provisional president until an election could be held. Madero was inaugurated on Nov. 6 of the same year. A little more than a year later Madero was killed and Huerta became provisional president on Feb. 18, 1911. On July 16 Huerta fled, giving the reins of government to Francisco Carranza.
Close observers of conditions in Mexico believe that if Carranza can permanently establish friendly relations with Villa, the Constitutionalists' chief of the head of the peaceful abdication of Diaz. He represented the latter in peace parleys with Madero.
In the same election that made Carranza president Carranza was re-elected a justice of the supreme court, a post he held at the time of the Madero assassination.
When Huerta was made provisional president following the killing of Madero, Carranza was one of the keenest critics of the man who looked for expert advice. Carranza showed himself to be a man of high character and high ability. He is highly respected and loved by the people. He is a member of the Mexican aristocracy.
Carranza was practically unknown outside of Mexico prior to the spring of 1911. He had for a few years previous to that time been a justice of the supreme court of Mexico and of the which he owed to the friendship of Porfirio Diaz. It was in the spring of 1911 that Carranza gained a reputation outside of Mexico by bringing

LIGHTNING GUILTS CHAIN.
BUT ROPE SAVES COW
LENTSVILLE, N. C.—Lightning perpetrated quite an unusual freak here during a storm. Harden Evans had a cow tied with a chain which had been lengthened with a piece of rope some three feet in length and this piece of rope was fired to the halter.
The lightning struck the post to which the chain was tied, completely shattering it, and followed the chain down to where the rope was fixed. The chain links were melted into a solid mass and could easily be broken apart with the hand.
The rope saved the cow.

ELECTRIC PROGRESS.
London Free Press: The idea that we have about reached the limit in electrical development is not borne out by the predictions made at the National Electric Light convention at Philadelphia. Experts who are world-famous told the delegates that within ten years the $500 electric automobile, with an upkeep of $10 a month, would be here, and that vegetable growth could be increased 75 per cent by the use of electricity as a stimulant.

AMERICAN DIAMOND MAN FINDS GEMS IN PARIS HIGH.
PARIS.—E. M. Gattle, an American diamond merchant, says that although he never saw times so hard in France, fine gems are abnormally high in price. They are, he said, in the hands of rich concerns, and the only chance to obtain them is to get acquainted with a broker or some one who needs money. A member of the diamond syndicate explained to Mr. Gattle that the conditions are not due to the workings of a trust, but that the mines no longer are producing first-class stones.

COST OF KILLING IN WAR.
San Francisco Star: The cost of killing in modern warfare is rather high—about $15,000 to kill a man. In the Boer war it cost $40,000 to kill a man, and in the Balkan war it cost $10,000 to kill a man. In the Canal Zone Colonel Gorgas spent $24.30 to save a life. Sanitation in the Canal Zone cost only 5 per cent of the expense of building the canal. It is cheaper to save life than to destroy it. Colonel Gorgas saved 6,130 lives by spending the average cost of killing one man in war—$15,000.

UNITED STATES LEADS WORLD.
The wealth of the United States income-producing property of all kinds, including land, factories and railroads—is now not far from double that of any other country on earth, according to Sir George Paish of the London Statist. He figures that the increase in wealth of the four chief nations in the last century has been 550 per cent in Britain, 400 per cent in France, 700 per cent in Germany, and 8,500 per cent in the United States.

STOCKHOLDERS WANT SOME OF HIS MONEY.
Charles F. Brooker, of Litchfield, Conn., is one of the New Haven railroad directors who have been sued for $306,000,000 by minority stockholders of the road. The suit followed closely after the report of the interstate commerce commission, which alleged that the directors of the New Haven had wasted many millions of the road's money. The minority stockholders claim that the amount wasted in illegal transactions was $102,000,000. Under the Sherman anti-trust act, the New Haven company is entitled to recover from the defendant directors three-fold that sum, or $306,000,000.

WOULD LIMIT COAL OUTPUT.
Duncan McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the Illinois Mine Workers, addressing the State Economy and Efficiency Commission, said there should be a law in this country the same as in Germany restricting the opening of new coal mines. Forty thousand of the 90,000 members of the union are idle because of the shutting down of mines and are facing starvation because the union's relief funds are low. During last year 18 mining companies failed.

WANT NATIONAL LEGISLATION.
Federal legislation as a substitute for the "blue sky" laws of the different states was voted by the National Association of Supervisors of State Banks at Atlantic City, N. J. The superintendents believe the new currency law will be successful. T. J. Smith of Frankfort, Ky., was elected president and Harry M. Smith of Maine, secretary-treasurer. The next meeting will be held in Oakland, Cal., during the last week of May, 1915.

FACTS ABOUT SLEEP.
Elephants sleep standing up. When in a herd a certain number will always stand watch while the others sleep. Bats sleep head downward, hanging by their hind claws.
Birds, with few exceptions, sleep with their heads turned tailward over the back and the beak thrust beneath the wing.
Storks, gulls and other long-legged birds sleep standing on one leg.
Ducks sleep on open water. To avoid drifting ashore, they keep paddling with one foot, thus making them move in a circle.
Foxes and wolves sleep curled up, their noses and the soles of their feet close together and blanketed by their bushy tail.
Lions, tigers and cat animals stretch themselves out flat upon the side. Their muscles twitch and throb, indicating that they are light and restless sleepers.
Owls, in addition to their eyelids, have a screen that they draw sideways across their eyes to shut out the light, for they sleep in the daytime.

MEAT PRICES SOAR.
Despite the enormous grain crop packers in Chicago declare meat prices will rise above all previous records because of scarcity of cattle. A price of 26 cents to the butcher is predicted.

CABIN LINED WITH MONEY.
When Charles Perrine, of Newton, Kan., aged 73, was taken from his cabin to the hospital, where he died, it was thought he was a pauper. His relatives found his cabin contained more than $5,000 in different hiding places. In the clothing he wore $1,800 was found.

HUNTER FINDS MONEY.
Searching for Fox He Unearthed Coins and Valuable Jewels.
Boaz, Mo.—While trying to find a fox which had run into Frazier's cave on the James River, a mile west of Boaz, Herbert Burlison found a battered tin can which was sealed and quite heavy. It contained three gold watches, four rings, a diamond stud, twenty-three $20 gold pieces and $2,000 in Confederate bills.
Immediately after making this find, Burlison was arrested on a charge of bootlegging. He is now serving time on the charge. Nearly every boy and some of the men of the neighborhood, have started digging in the floor of the cave for more lost treasure.

Teachers Rout Bear With Flashlight.
Goshen, N. Y.—Miss Margaret Connelly and Miss Laura Fitzgerald, young school teachers who live here and teach school at Mount Eve, a distance of ten miles from Goshen, encountered and vanquished a large bear on their way to school.
The teachers leave Goshen by train each morning, and after they had left the train and were on their way to the schoolhouse they met the bear in the road, and the animal disputed their passage.
The young women were provided with pocket flashlights to enable them to see the path in the dark of the early morning, and they flashed these upon the bear, which thereupon retreated up the road, backing away from them until they reached the school in safety.
The young women still are fearful of meeting the animal, which is supposed to be lurking in the vicinity.

"Movie" Show Is Stopped By a Rat.
North Manchester, Ind. When a rat crawled into a moving picture machine here, it touched both poles of the electrical connection, was electrocuted, short-circuited the machine and stopped the show until the operator located the trouble.

Discover Radium in Montana.
Three miners of Butte, Mont., have discovered one of the first large bodies of radium-bearing ore ever found in the Northwest, their find being located in Beaverhead County, Mont.

FURIES FIRE BURNS COTTAGE.
Two members of the militant suffragette arson squad attempted a few days ago to burn the cottage at Ayre, where Robert Burns, the poet, was born January 25, 1759. One of the furies was captured by the night watchman.

We have an idea the servant problem would be simplified a lot if the employer problem should receive a bit of consideration. If you people who have trouble keeping cooks, laundresses and maids would get wise to the fact that they are human beings, whose feelings, emotions and interests ought to be taken into account and whose station in life should be forgotten to some extent, it would require something more than a light provocation or irritation to divorce them from your home. If you would quit calling them servants and making them feel like slaves, a big start would be made toward the solution of the problem. How long do you suppose a self-respecting man would remain in your husband's store if he were called a servant and treated as you treat the women who come into your home to earn an honest living? And why differentiate between the woman who cooks your food and the man who sells this food over your husband's counter, so long as one works as well and behaves as well as the other?

SUSPENDER IS 80 YEARS OLD.
Youthful Factory Employee Invented Modern "Gallus."
The suspender is 30 years old. To Erastus Brigham Bigelow, a youth in a cotton mill, belongs the credit for inventing the modern elastic suspenders, which he termed "elastic braces for trousers." Of course the "gallus" was used before then but it was an uncomfortable, unyielding harness. Bigelow patented more than fifty inventions and became wealthy but most of his money was acquired in the manufacturing business and not from his patents.

LEAVES THE FIELD TO CONGRESSMAN KELLEY

"I feel deeply grateful to the people throughout the district, who have honored me with the longest service ever given to a member from that district. I feel especially grateful for the indorsement of my work in Congress, which was given in the last election, which is the largest vote I ever received when one recalls that I was opposed by an active candidate from both the democrat and progressive parties.

Principles in Favor.
"During my incumbency of 18 years I have endeavored always to keep abreast of the times and to work and vote for such measures as I believed would best conserve the interests of our district, state and nation.

"I believe that at no time in recent years have the principles of the republican party been viewed with greater favor by all classes than they are at the present time, and I hope Mr. Kelley will receive the vote of every one who desires a return to our former prosperity.

"With best wishes for a people that have grown very near and dear to me, I beg to remain, as ever,
Sincerely yours,
SAMUEL W. SMITH."

Served 18 Years in Congress.

Samuel W. Smith, republican, of Pontiac, was born in the township of Independence, Oakland county, Michigan, August 23, 1852. His education was acquired in the Clarkston and Detroit public schools. He taught school six years. He commenced the study of law in 1876 and admitted to practice in 1877. He was graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan in the class of '78, since which time he has been engaged in the practice of his profession at Pontiac until he became a member of congress. He was elected prosecuting attorney of Oakland county in 1880 and re-elected in 1882. He was a member of the state senate in 1884; was elected to the 55th, 56th, 57th, 58th, 59th, 60th, 61st and 62nd congress, and was re-elected November 5, 1912.

Mr. Smith is well known in Northville where he has a host of friends. The happy outcome for the nomination is very pleasing in that it does away with a hard contest between two most splendid men.

FAREWELL RECEPTION.

Many deserved compliments were paid Rev. Slough and his family for their work here, and all seemed solicitous for their success in whatever field they may be called in the future.

HAVE YOU MADE YOUR WILL?

One of the things that, almost without exception people seem to have a repugnance toward, is the making of their wills. So many men put off this very necessary business until death stares them in the face, that it has come to be looked upon as one of the final things of life, when, in reality, there is no business transaction that requires all that is best in the mental faculties, more than does the proper disposal of what, in most instances, represents the best mental and physical efforts of a man's or woman's lifetime. Many otherwise very practical and sensible folks seem to have a feeling that to make their wills is an acknowledgment that the end of life is near, but, after all, the act, in itself, was never known to hasten the coming of the end by a single moment. Of course, all wills are not wisely made, but this fact, in too many instances is precisely the result of the testator having waited until his mental vigor was weakened by sickness. "Being of sound mind," every owner of property, the succession of which is not already provided for by other legal means, should arrange for the disposal of his holdings, large or small, as he would, in his best judgment, desire. In the intricacies of laws which must cover a veritable multitude of different circumstances, it all too frequently happens that the most terrible injustice is done, and those who are entitled to comfortable provision are left destitute, by reason of lack of a will.

The fact that wills are so often broken, or that they are not always fairly made does not obviate the duty of every property-holder to provide for the disposal of what he must one day leave behind.

SOME DIRTY STREETS.

The streets of Northville may have presented a more dirty and filthy condition than at present but if so no one seems to be able to remember when it was. In the vicinity of the drinking fountain, on Center street, the sewer grate, the forepart of the wheel was filled with dirt, paper, and filth to a deplorable extent, and all along the business streets papers and dirt abound in an alarming way. There is scarcely a sewer opening in the village but what is stopped up and danger lies exist along walks and drives since the recent washout. There is a general complaint against this neglect on the part of village officials and it is thought that some remedy should be forthcoming.

W. R. C. NOTES.

Our Corps has met with an irreparable loss in the death of one of our most faithful and enthusiastic members, Mrs. Craft. Although prevented many times from attending our meetings by her advancing years and feeble health, her heart was always with us in all our enterprises, and her welcome presence whenever possible. Wife and sister of brave soldiers, no truer patriot ever lived than she. "We shall meet, but we shall miss her." The memory of her sweet and cordial ways will linger with us all as long as life shall last.

The annual picnic, held last Friday afternoon at the home of Mrs. and Miss Tremper, proved a very enjoyable occasion, in spite of the thunder storm that drove everybody indoors except a few valiant ones who had no fear of the crashes and flashes, and so remained on the spacious porch and watched the falling rain. The picnic supper was, as usual, most varied and delicious. Nearly fifty members and a few guests participated in the pleasant meeting.

W. R. C. members should keep in mind that on Friday afternoon, August 14, we are to have "An Afternoon with the Bids" at Mrs. Lester Cook's pleasant home. This is one of the series of social events begun last year in the interest of the financial department.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank the neighbors and friends, church and fraternal organizations, and Hig h school for the beautiful flowers sent during the illness and death of our loved one, and for their many acts of kindness. To those who so generously furnished comforts we also extend our thanks.

MRS. DANIEL CRAFT
DIED MONDAY FORENOON.

Mrs. Anna Hutton Craft, wife of Daniel Craft, one of Northville's well known civil war veterans, passed from the earthly life Monday, with her seventy-seventh year nearing its completion, and after a wedded life of sixty years. She was a cousin of the late L. W. Hutton of this place, also an aunt of Prof. John Loeffler, formerly superintendent of schools here.

Mrs. Craft was a woman of excellent mental ability, which she maintained to a degree that made her a most interesting acquaintance. Her sweet, cordial personality made her a favorite with all who knew her. She was a worthy member of the Methodist church, and of the W. R. C.

She had been a resident of Northville for about ten or twelve years, coming here from Dryden. The nearest surviving relatives are the husband and one sister, the two children born to Mr. and Mrs. Craft having died many years ago, one in infancy and one in young manhood. The funeral was held from the home Thursday morning, her pastor, Rev. R. M. Pierce, conducting the services. By request, the members of the Relief Corps attended in a body, accompanying the family, by funeral car to Oxford, where the burial took place. Members of the G. A. R. officiated as pall bearers.

to sleep. And once in the arms of Morpheus Rip Van W. hid nothing whatever on the young editor for sound slumbering. Nature was determined to make up that lost restorative repose. The car sped teeteringly and swayingly Detroitwards. Stops and starts; toots and jingles, embarkments and disembarkments disturbed him not. Detroit was reached. Street calls, city noises, folks walking over his feet or bumping against his hat, all failed to phase him.

The interurban station stop and start and the return Farmingtonwards transpired, and still he slept. The conductors considerably retrained from any special efforts towards waking him, knowing he needed the sleep, but finally, concluding that possibly the D. U. R. might kick against carrying even an editor back and forth all day on one ticket managed to rouse the sleeper, somewhere in the vicinity of Redford, on one of the return trips. After getting off the car and partaking of a few cups of coffee, the newspaper man, with the proverbial enterprise of the cult, made a fresh start, and finally reached Windsor, a wakefuler and wiser man.

tempted to grapple with him. He was unable to get away, he says, and drew a 22-caliber revolver from his pocket to intimidate the charging man. This failed, and he says he then turned his back to Parmenter and when the latter clinched with him, fired twice under his arm.

One shot went through his shirt sleeve just missing the arm and the other through his side. The wounded man drove an automobile to Northville, where his hurts were treated by Drs. D. B. Henry and T. H. Turner, and then drove back to the cottage Bentley and his wife returned to Royal Oak.

Bentley went to Deputy Sheriff Lewless at Walled Lake and gave himself up. He remained with the officer all night and went to Pontiac Saturday with him and told his story to Prosecutor Doty.

As no complaint has been made by Parmenter, and no warrant asked, the prosecutor advised Bentley to return to his home and remain in the village until developments, if any occur.

It appears from Bentley's statement that there has been some trouble between the two men before, but he maintains he did not seek the trouble of last Friday.

A warrant charging assault with intent to murder was issued by Justice Don Stockwell on Tuesday.

Parmenter tells a somewhat different story from that told by Bentley the day following the shooting. He asserts that he did not attack Bentley, but that he had arranged to have his Bentley, who had been ill, he said, at the cottage with the Parmenter party and that her husband came to the place and talked roughly to Mrs. Parmenter; that he told him he would have to stop such talk; and that Bentley then shot him twice with a revolver.

"The Chautauqua is the most distinctively American thing in this country."

HON. THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

"I believe that a considerable part of the progress that is now being made along the line of political and moral reform is traceable to the Chautauqua."

HON. W. J. BRYAN.

"The Chautauqua has become a great people's university. No man can hope to successfully and speedily form and reform the public opinion which is behind all government and progress in religion and social reform without employing the resources of the Chautauqua platform."

DR. FRANK GUNSAULUS.

"I feel deeply grateful to the people throughout the district, who have honored me with the longest service ever given to a member from that district. I feel especially grateful for the indorsement of my work in congress, which was given in the last election, which is the largest vote I ever received when one recalls that I was opposed by an active candidate from both the democrat and progressive parties.

Principles in Favor.
During my incumbency of 18 years I have endeavored always to keep abreast of the times and to work and vote for such measures as I believed would best conserve the interests of our district, state and nation.

"I believe that at no time in recent years have the principles of the republican party been viewed with greater favor by all classes than they are at the present time, and I hope Mr. Kelley will receive the vote of every one who desires a return to our former prosperity.

"With best wishes for a people that have grown very near and dear to me, I beg to remain, as ever,
Sincerely yours,
SAMUEL W. SMITH."

Served 18 Years in Congress.

Samuel W. Smith, republican, of Pontiac, was born in the township of Independence, Oakland county, Michigan, August 23, 1852. His education was acquired in the Clarkston and "Detroit public" schools. He taught school six years. He commenced the study of law in 1876 and admitted to practice in 1877. He was graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan in the class of '78, since which time he has been engaged in the practice of his profession at Pontiac until he became a member of congress. He was elected prosecuting attorney of Oakland county in 1880 and re-elected in 1882; he was a member of the state senate in 1884; was elected to the 56th, 56th, 57th, 58th, 59th, 60th, 61st and 62nd congress, and was re-elected November 5, 1912.

Mr. Smith is well known in Northville where he has a host of friends. The happy outcome for the nomination is very pleasing in that it does away with a hard contest between two most splendid men.

FAREWELL RECEPTION.

On Friday evening of last week a large number of friends of Rev. S. J. Slough and family gathered at the Baptist parsonage for a farewell reception. Delicacies in the shape of ice cream and cake were served and a pleasant social evening followed. Short addresses were made by the pastors of the other churches and by several of the laymen.
Many deserved compliments were paid Rev. Slough and his family for their work here, and all seemed so solicitous for their success in whatever field they may be called in the future.

RHODA'S SECRET

By SYLVIA CHESTER

CHAPTER I

It was a February morning in Paris. The sun was shining brightly in a clear sky, and the streets and boulevards were crowded.

Rhoda Dering found some difficulty in making her way, and the servant with her kept up a ceaseless flow of grumblings as she toiled along with a heavy basket. Rhoda paid no heed to her servant's words. She walked as quickly as possible, and she appeared as unconscious of the admiring eyes that followed her as of the servant's discontent.

At last they reached a house in one of the smaller streets. Rhoda took a key and a letter from the concierge and led the way up the long flights of stone stairs. It was nearly at the top of the house that she stopped and unlocked the door that gave access to a small suite of rooms.

The little salon was gaudily furnished, the crimson velvet of the chairs and sofa was faded, the walls and ceiling were in sad need of repainting; it was a dreary room, without a touch of beauty or refinement about it. On the marble-topped table before the window there were two candlesticks, with the candles half burned down, and a pack of cards.

Rhoda took off her hat without looking at the maid.

"You had better make haste and get luncheon ready. I will dust the room," she said, in cool high tones. It was a characteristic voice, strong and clear, but curiously hard.

The woman put down the basket with a thump on one of the chairs. "I'll cook no more meals in this place!" she exclaimed, in shrill tones. "Pay me my wages! You can do for yourself for the future. I'll do no more for you!"

"You know quite well that I cannot pay you your wages and, until you get them, you must stay here," answered Rhoda calmly. "Paris is no place for you to live in without money."

"Where's my money, then? Give me my money!"

You shall have it when I have it to give to you. You may be quite certain that I will get rid of you on the first opportunity."

Mother that's obtained by cheating at cards is pretty sort of money to give to an honest girl. Oh, you think I know a thing. Well, I do! You thought you would like a capital English domestic girl who couldn't understand and care for anything but I know what you are, and your father too, and I'll tell my money!"

I agree with you that it was a great mistake that you hired you," returned Rhoda without looking at the servant. She was standing by the fireplace, looking at the letter in her hand that she had given to her. She put it down and slightly turned towards the girl, who was sitting on the basket, and said, "What's the matter?"

When I'm to have my wages," said the girl sullenly, without moving. "You said last time when I have the money. Go and get the luncheon ready."

The servant took up the basket and then put it down and burst into tears.

If you give me a kind word, Miss Dering, now and then, I wouldn't mind but I can't stand it and I won't stand it! And I have your father and that Monsieur Lefroy, and it isn't a place for a respectable girl to be in!"

Rhoda looked at the girl gravely. "Do you remember where I met you?" she said.

The servant's sobs sounded louder. "I was all that lady's fault! She promised me a good situation. I came to Paris with her, and then, a month after, she gave me notice!"

"Do you ever think what might have happened to you if I had not met you that evening? Paris is no place for an ignorant girl to be alone in."

"I want to go back to England," muttered the girl sullenly.

"You shall go back as soon as I can pay your fare. I am as anxious to get rid of you as you can be to go!" Rhoda answered sharply. "Now go away with that basket!"

The girl, still sobbing loudly, carried the basket into the inner room, and Rhoda took up the letter again. It was addressed to her father, with an English postmark, and many foreign postmarks showed that it had been following them about.

Rhoda was still looking at the letter when a footstep sounded outside and her father came in. He was like Rhoda, tall and slight, with a pale handsome face. His hair was still black, and he would have looked a young man still but for the haggard lines on his face. Rhoda held out the letter without speaking. Her father took it carelessly, but his face changed as he saw the handwriting.

"My brother at last!" he said quickly, breaking the seal. "Well, I thought my last letter would fetch him."

He read the letter, and then, with a laugh, he turned to Rhoda.

"Read it, my girl. It concerns you more than me."

The letter was written in a small formal hand. There was a crest on the top of the thick white note paper, and the motto "Hold truth dear."

Rhoda read: Dear Arthur: I have carefully read your letter about your girl, and I see the force of what you say. You tell me she has been educated in a convent, but is still a Protestant. I am glad to hear that this is so. I thoroughly agree with you that your life is not one that should be shared by an innocent girl. My first thought was to suggest to you that you should get her a home in some respectable English family, but my wife wishes her to come here. My own daughter is just eighteen; Rhoda will be able to help her with French and music. You say she is proficient in both. Of course it is quite understood between us that any communication on your part with Rhoda will lead at once to her losing the home I offer her.

I am yours, etc.

George Dering

"A pleasant letter from a brother to a brother, eh, Rhoda?" said Mr. Dering, as Rhoda folded the letter and placed it upon the mantelpiece.

"When does he think that I left the convent?" she asked.

"That's the joke of it, my dear. He thinks you are still there—that you have been there since your mother died, twelve years ago."

"That means that you told him so."

"Exactly."

"Why?"

Mr. Dering had seated himself upon a chair by the window, and Rhoda turned towards him to ask the question.

"If I had told him you left the convent two years ago, do you think you would have received that invitation?"

"Do you wish me to accept it?"

"By Jove, I do! Look here, Rhoda, you are a clever girl and a handsome girl. I want you back at Dering; things are pretty well played out here. You see what our luck is, and how our funus stand. I intend you to make your fortune at Dering."

"As a governess to my uncle's daughter?"

"Well, not exactly like that. Do you remember what I told you of your aunt Millicent?"

"Of course."

"Well, she's at Dering. Flatter her little weaknesses, my dear, and get your name down in her will. That's one way of making your fortune."

"She is not much older than you," returned Rhoda.

"Not much, certainly. But that's only one way out of the wood for you though. You can make a good marriage."

"You mean that I should marry you?"

"Yes, there is that to think of, the girl answered quietly. She paused a moment, and then said, 'I suppose you don't think me a bit of a thing, do you?'"

"By Jove, I don't. You are a bit of a thing, a lamb and a wolf. You were looking the perfect sister of the convent when I met you."

"All this, and more, I said. The only way out of the wood for you though. You can make a good marriage."

"The hand covers the answer. The first attack has been crowned with success. Rhoda, my girl. Now it is our turn. More Amie will receive you for a week or so. Write from the convent an answer to that letter. Say how glad you will be to embrace your dear relatives, scatter a few French expressions over the backs of all your happy convent friends and the dear ones. Avoid all reference to me. Then off you go to Dering under some safe escort, get under the same roof with my dear sister Millicent and in a month my clever daughter will be first on her list of favorites. Then will come a season in town, a brilliant marriage and then—why, then you can think of your old father."

An alluring prospect," said Rhoda, with a bitter smile.

"It's a perfectly safe thing, my dear. I should like to bet on it."

The cards are more against us than you realize," the girl answered.

"How am I to play the part of a girl fresh from a convent? I have lived with you for two years."

I have all your convent letters to me, my dear, you shall read them and take them with you. Then recall what you were like two years ago—what a truthful, innocent, sweet-faced little maid you were!"

A look of intense bitterness passed over Rhoda's face. She did not speak, but she took up her uncle's letter again and read it through. Her father watched her, drumming with his fingers on the table beside him.

"It's our only chance, Rhoda," he said, after a moment. "I am played out and it's time I left Paris. I didn't like the looks of Marche, and I like all this morning, I believe they suspected something last night."

I am sure they did," Rhoda interpolated quietly.

"I must be off to Monte Carlo," Mr. Dering continued, "and Lefroy is going with me. You know you hate going there."

"I do not intend to go," the girl answered. "I am going to England—to Dering."

Mr. Dering jumped up, struck his hands together, and a look of great relief passed over his face.

"That's a good girl! The fact is, Rhoda, I couldn't take you to Monte Carlo this time. We shall be a low lot, and I must keep you out of it somehow!"

"I have never had a chance," the girl said, half to herself. "Why shouldn't I take this chance?"

"You would be a goose if you did not take it, my dear! All you have to do is to forget the past two years of your life and be a little conventional again!"

"Yes; that is all I have to do," she returned, with a bitter smile. She took up her hat and gloves. "I must look after the luncheon," she said. "Sarah is clamoring for her wages again."

"Confound the girl! What on earth made you have that girl, Rhoda? Celline was worth twenty of her!"

"Celline was Celline!" said Rhoda, with a bitter smile.

Mr. Dering shrugged his shoulders.

"Let us hope the time is coming when you can afford to be particular, Rhoda. Lefroy is coming to lunch."

"You can hardly call me particular," the girl said. "I sit at the table with Mr. Lefroy!"

Mr. Dering took out a cigar and began to light it as he answered: "If you were not going to Dering, you would have another proposal made to you, Rhoda."

"Pray of what kind?"

"From Mr. Lefroy."

Rhoda turned with a sudden look of intense scorn on her dark face. Her father laughed.

"You are going to Dering my dear, or I should have advised you to accept it. I owe Lefroy five thousand francs."

"You know I hate him."

"But you must have married him, my dear, if you had not gone to Dering!"

"Never!"

"Well, we need not discuss it. You see we are agreed about my little plan. By the bye," he added, as Rhoda moved towards the door, "how old are you, Rhoda?"

"You know."

"But you do not, my dear. You are twenty. I look leave to alter your age by two years. No woman can object to be two years younger than she is!"

Rhoda turned back into the room and shut the door. She sat down by her father and laid her hand upon his arm.

"Father, I do not think I can do it. I shall not be able to play my part. Write, or let me write, and tell uncle George the truth. Tell him that I have shared your life for these years. He cannot refuse to have me ever if he knows the truth!"

Mr. Dering laid down his cigar and put his hand over hers.

"My dear," he said, in a very gentle tone, "I have been a reckless and careless father to you and I want you to have this one chance. I know you, I want you to know it. You are full of good sense. The truth is the only way out of the wood for you."

"I have just heard the good news, mademoiselle, he said with a low bow. You leave me no choice, but an English home is to be made glad by our loss. I cannot believe that Rhoda is home."

"Thank you, Mademoiselle Lefroy," Rhoda returned, with a slight bow. "I am glad to go to England."

"How glad England will be to receive you! How glad the fortune of your dear family! You will be able to enjoy the long winter evenings, and the beautiful tales of your travels."

"Rhoda is taking notes for that purpose," her father broke in. She will have many stories to tell them all."

"I am surprised," Mr. Lefroy went on. "Forgive me, mademoiselle, for being so surprised, but I thought—"

"You see, Lefroy," Mr. Dering again broke in, "what surprises you is an old tale with us. They have wanted Rhoda for years but she would not leave her father. I am not invited to Dering. That might surprise you indeed."

"They are very good and kind, your English relatives. If I appear surprised, mademoiselle, it is that you have waited so long."

"Your surprise is quite natural, Mr. Lefroy," returned Rhoda quietly. "A scarlet spot of color had come into each cheek, and her eyes were dark with anger, but her voice was very calm. "Luncheon is ready," she added, turning away and addressing her father. Will you come into the other room?"

"I had hoped so much that you would come with us next week," the Frenchman went on, drawing a step nearer to her.

Mr. Dering glanced at them both and then busied himself with his cigar-case. Mr. Lefroy went on in a low tone.

"Can I not persuade you? England is cold; English people will not understand you. Mademoiselle, I entreat you, do not go to England!"

"England is my native country," Rhoda answered, meeting his passionate gaze with cold steady eyes. "I go to my own people, Monsieur Lefroy. My father will join me soon. I hope I have no wish to leave England again."

"You have no pity for the friends you leave behind?"

"I have no friends. There is no one in the world except my father who has the right to claim that title."

"Not your dear English friends?" said Lefroy, with a low bow. "You forgot them—your kind good English relatives."

"I should have said, 'out of England,'" the girl returned.

"You do not fear any enemy?"

"I fear no one."

Lefroy bowed and crossed the room to open the door for Rhoda. As she passed, she looked straight at him.

"I fear no one, Monsieur Lefroy," she repeated steadily.

up correspondence with any English friends."

"Weren't you?" returned Mr. Dering shortly.

"A lawyer perhaps? They are very troublesome correspondents, those lawyers."

"A letter" from my brother George," the other answered, with a glance at the Frenchman's face. "An invitation to Rhoda."

M. Lefroy raised his eyebrows slightly.

"Are we on such terms with our brother? I congratulate you, my friend Dering."

"Thank you! Rhoda is going almost at once."

There was silence for a moment. Then M. Lefroy said carelessly: "A long visit?"

"A life long visit in all probability," Rhoda will live in England in future."

There was another silence. Mr. Dering watched the Frenchman's face furtively, but it told him little. M. Lefroy spoke first.

"I had the honor a few days ago, to make certain proposals to you. Did I express myself clearly on that occasion?"

"Quite clearly, my friend."

"Then why does mademoiselle go to England? Am I to understand—"

"You are to understand, my dear Lefroy, that I feel very deeply the honor of the alliance you propose, but it cannot be."

"And why?"

Mr. Dering shrugged his shoulders.

"A girl has fancies about such things. I wish Rhoda to choose for herself; and, to speak quite frankly, my friend, she does not choose you."

"But you give me no chance. I hoped that in this journey together—"

Mr. Dering interrupted the Frenchman sharply.

"It's out of the question. Take your answer, Lefroy. You and I go alone. Your marriage with my daughter is utterly out of the question."

The Frenchman drew back in his chair with a sudden jerk. It was the only sign he showed that the words had moved him. There was a deadly calmness in his tone and manner, as he answered:

"You speak strongly, mon ami. Have you looked at the game thoroughly?"

"I know your cards. Play them all. Do your worst."

"You are excited, too much excited. Allow me to withdraw from my position. I congratulate mademoiselle on her good fortune. You have a very good brother, my dear friend."

He got up as the door opened behind him and stepped forward to meet Rhoda.

"I have just heard the good news, mademoiselle, he said with a low bow. You leave me no choice, but an English home is to be made glad by our loss. I cannot believe that Rhoda is home."

"I had hoped so much that you would come with us next week," the Frenchman went on, drawing a step nearer to her.

Mr. Dering glanced at them both and then busied himself with his cigar-case. Mr. Lefroy went on in a low tone.

"Can I not persuade you? England is cold; English people will not understand you. Mademoiselle, I entreat you, do not go to England!"

"England is my native country," Rhoda answered, meeting his passionate gaze with cold steady eyes. "I go to my own people, Monsieur Lefroy. My father will join me soon. I hope I have no wish to leave England again."

"You have no pity for the friends you leave behind?"

"I have no friends. There is no one in the world except my father who has the right to claim that title."

"Not your dear English friends?" said Lefroy, with a low bow. "You forgot them—your kind good English relatives."

"I should have said, 'out of England,'" the girl returned.

"You do not fear any enemy?"

"I fear no one."

Lefroy bowed and crossed the room to open the door for Rhoda. As she passed, she looked straight at him.

"I fear no one, Monsieur Lefroy," she repeated steadily.

TELLS CHARACTER BY FINGER NAILS

Manicure Girl Reveals Characteristics of Women From Hands.

NO TRAIT CAN BE CONCEALED

Sure Guide to Would-be Wooers if Signs Are Learned.

Men, do you know that the easiest and surest way of finding your real affinity is by the nails? If you want to be happy though married just take the trouble to compare finger tips before asking the question, and then you will have a chance to live the fairy-book existence—"happy ever after."

A girl with long, almond-shaped nails that are pink-tinted and have each a perfect white moon is apt to be a bit lazy and careless. If she should marry a highly strung, nervous man, they would both be miserable.

A girl of this type requires lots of sleep and possesses no imagination. She may be perfect physically, but is usually by no means so mentally. She should marry a jolly, fat man, who will allow her to do as she pleases. He should have a good income and be content to let things run themselves.

A short, thick nail, with a heavy rim of cuticle, denotes a religious temperament. Usually such women feel they have a "mission" in life. Consequently they should marry a "missionary" if possible, because men in other careers will have little sympathy with such aspirations. They have enough trouble in making a living and leading a sane existence.

Small well-shaped and strong nails, with large moons and a healthy pink color, denote a woman of marked individuality. She usually marries more than once, and the man she is most likely to be happy with has no extraordinary traits of character, but is good, kind and very affectionate.

Narrow, thin nails, with no moons, usually indicate the type of woman who is born to serve. Such a woman should marry one of those big good looking, normal men who sit down, be moan their fate run their fingers through their hair, and declare the whole world is against them, just because business is poor. They need just such a nice little woman to con sole them and tell how clever and great they are.

Heavy, thick short nails, with ragged cuticle, belong to that type who works with one eye on the clock and her mind on Saturday afternoon. She would be happy with any nice, good looking, chap who could take her around and give her a good time.

Round, thin nails, dark in color, with no cuticle, usually betray the telephonic type. She should marry a man who can talk her into anything she wants. It is the bad habit that she cannot wear a telephone around her neck. She is very likable and a man would take a great change on his life's happiness in entrusting it to her. Yet, strange as it may seem these girls often marry quite well.

A good sized nail, oval in shape, deep pink in color, with thin cuticle and nails imbedded in the flesh, shows the woman who will rule men and always work her own sweet will with them.

But she will pass up many a good offer while young and much sought after because she likes to play the game of chance.

When she is about 30 and comes to realize that her prospects are rapidly growing dimmer she will make the best of what remains. She usually marries a man that she would not have considered in the beginning, but she makes a good wife because she is wise.

Then there is the medium-sized nail with hardly any cuticle, small white moons and a natural pink color, denoting good health. This is the typical American nail.

She is of medium height, has a perfectly molded form, lovely skin, brown hair, blue eyes and a free, delightful manner. She is an individualist, a democrat and has a mind of her own, all due, no doubt, to her peculiar training. She has a quick, ready wit and is able to take care of herself under all circumstances.

Moreover, she is extremely versatile and possesses great adaptability. She can dine at Sherry's one day, Child's the next, and then go right back to Sherry's without the least disturbance to her aplomb.

She is seen so often and in such numbers that she seems to have been overlooked by artists and playwrights. Yet she is the distinct American type, produced from her Scotch, Irish, English and German ancestry.

She could make any man happy who is lucky enough to win her love.

The broad, short nail with torn cuticle belongs to the woman of 40 and over who has turned miser. Such a type of woman forgets her youth. Fearful of the future, she seems to feel that, with plenty of money, she will be able to buy affection and happiness when old. This poor woman makes money her God, and her greatest happiness consists in saving a dollar.

A nail worn thin from much polishing, short and pointed, with perfect moons, may be known as the cabaret nail. The owner of this goes to a different restaurant every night and feels very sorry for girls who stay at home in the evenings.

All the various types of women in the world's history have had their imprints, the representative modern type should now have hers.

She is the business woman, skillful highly trained, clever, attractive and successful. She earns and spends her money like a man. Perfectly independent, she won't let one do any service for her. When addressing her one feels like saying "young fellow."

Yet she is quite feminine. I know one such girl who earns $10,000 a year, but who insists that the only future for a woman is marriage. This fascinating type usually keeps her nails short and round and has a very bad cuticle.

The direct antithesis of this character is the one whose smallness nearly make one weep. Her nails grow long and narrow and are full of ridges. She wears them pointed and painted. She is known along Broadway as a small grifter.

You yourself have observed her many times on the street cars. She is the girl who starts an angry argument with a friend as to who shall pay the fares. Then, as the conductor is about to take her money, she deliberately drops it on the floor and the other girl pays. "Ten cents saved," she says to herself.

Your ambition to raise estimation of your friends is very audacious, Oscar. An easy way to turn the trick is to ask their advice about things or pretend that you are intensely interested when they make you the goat of a one-sided conversation.

The Farm Hand

"I don't see, lanthe, why you persist in going to the country every season," said Mrs. Montague, frowning slightly.

Lanthe, a tall, graceful girl of 20, smiled wisely. "I think you have a faint idea why I go," she answered.

Mrs. Montague flushed a little and looked uncomfortable. "Well, I know I'm fond of Mr. Dean, and if you knew him I'm sure you'd like him, too. No one can blame me if I want to see my only child comfortably settled. Some time, sooner or later, I shall have to give up my little girl, and I had rather give her to him than to anyone else. He's a man everyone likes and trusts, somehow."

Lanthe slipped her arm about her mother's neck very tenderly. "I know, you think only of my good, mamma dear," she murmured. "But you won't have to give me up for—oh, a long time yet, I hope."

"Mrs. Norcross will be so disappointed, lanthe," said Mrs. Montague after a moment of silence. "She has set her heart upon your coming with me."

"I don't want to visit Mrs. Norcross, mother—I might go if Mr. Dean wasn't such a frequent caller at her home. And I do want to go down to Mrs. Kingsley's again."

Mrs. Montague saw that it was useless to say anything more, so she quietly changed the subject, but there was something strangely like a twinkle in her eye which her daughter did not notice. The girl was already making plans as to her summer in the little country village.

The following week found Lanthe Montague at the Kingsleys. Mrs. Kingsley had been an old schoolmate of her mother, and for the past two summers the girl had spent a few weeks at her home. Her chief reason for going was that she did not want to meet the man whose good qualities her mother was always exploiting.

It was the haymaking season and the Kingsleys had several farm hands. Two of them Lanthe remembered seeing the previous summer, at the third, a tall, fine-looking young man, with a highly intellectual face, was a stranger. Lanthe looked at him frequently in astonishment. At the end of a month she began to fear that she was thinking of him more than she should, and when two months had elapsed she was obliged to confess to herself that she was really beginning to care for James Clifford.

"I don't know why I ever came to this place," she told herself in disgust, throwing down the book on the grass. "I wish I'd listened to mother. It would have been better to have gone with her and not Mr. Dean and—no, it wouldn't. After all, there's no one like James Clifford, even if he works on a farm. But I mustn't think of him any more. Mother would be so disappointed in me, and I owe her so much."

Just then a step sounded behind her, and turning quickly she beheld the object of her thoughts.

"I have something to say to you, Miss Montague," he said, seating himself beside her on the settee. "Miss Kingsley has told me that you think of returning home to-morrow."

"Yes," she answered briefly. This was an unheard-of liberty for him, to sit beside her, and she tried to look displeased, but she made a miserable failure of it.

"You must have seen that I love you, lanthe," he began boldly, just as if he had been her equal. "If you can only care for me a little I shall be the happiest man on earth."

Lanthe was silent, but she thought rapidly. She must not listen to him, she told herself. It would break her mother's heart. If she should promise to marry James Clifford. Still he was a noble man, and she loved—yes, she loved him with her whole heart.

"Are you angry, lanthe?" he asked when she did not speak. "I understand—you don't care for me and—"

Lanthe looked up shyly. "I haven't said—I didn't care," she faltered.

"Is it possible that you care for a poor man?" he asked, reaching over and taking one of the small hands in his own.

"It makes no difference to me—whether you are rich or poor," she answered softly.

"I've something to confess, lanthe," he said after a moment. There was an anxious look on his face. "I'm not what you thought me." He went on: "I've deceived you, but say you'll forgive me."

"I don't understand," interposed the girl in bewilderment.

"I'm not a farmhand—my name is James Clifford—Dean, the man you didn't want to meet, he went on. I learned from Mrs. Norcross that you were coming here and it was not difficult for me to guess why you didn't care to visit her with your mother. As Frank Kingsley and I used to be good friends at college, I came here, and pretended to be one of the farmhands. I was curious to see the girl who didn't want to see me. And from the moment I saw you, lanthe, I have loved you. You'll forgive me for the deception, won't you, dear?" he pleaded.

Lanthe looked into his face with a smile. "There's really nothing for me to forgive," she murmured happily. Priscilla Campbell.

DETECTIVES SEEK FURTHER EVIDENCE IN BAILEY MURDER CASE; MRS. CARMAN, ENJOYING HER LIBERTY, SURE SHE WILL BE FREED

FREEMONT, L. I.—(Special)—Convinced that Mrs. Carman cannot be convicted unless further damaging evidence against her is introduced, detectives employed in the case are industriously searching for further clues.

In the meantime Mrs. Carman is enjoying her liberty on bail, and asserts her confidence that she will be freed when the case comes to trial.

The grand jury's indictment was based very largely on the testimony of Celia Coleman, a negro maid in the Carman home, who swore that shortly after the shooting Mrs. Carman came into the house in a state of unusual excitement. While this testimony is probably sufficient to procure an indictment, it certainly is not strong enough to convict.

The statement of Farrell, the tramp, who said he saw a woman answering to Mrs. Carman's description at about the time of the tragedy, near the window of the Carman home through which the shooting was done, is also regarded as of little value so far as procuring a conviction is concerned.

Two other witnesses before the grand jury whose testimony probably help rather than injure Mrs. Carman's case at a murder trial are Mrs. Helen Corby and Dr. Runcie. Mrs. Corby, a daughter of Mrs. Ida Powell, who is a sister of Mrs. Carman, was at the Carman home on the night of the murder. She says she saw nothing to arouse her suspicions that Mrs. Carman had killed Mrs. Bailey. Dr. Runcie was the first one to be called after the shooting of Mrs. Bailey. He extracted the bullet from the body of the murdered woman. He says he saw nothing to cause him to believe that Mrs. Carman had been responsible for the tragedy.

Friends think her innocent. The friends and neighbors of the Carman at Freemont are almost unanimous in their belief that Mrs. Carman is innocent. When asked why, their best answer is only this: "Florence is not the kind of a woman who would do such a thing."

The Carman's friends agree with Mrs. Carman's view, as expressed on several occasions during the past few days, that her only fear for the future is that she may be "framed up" by detectives.

To unprejudiced persons who have followed the case since its beginning her so-called fears sound ridiculous. As a matter of fact, the unprejudiced ones believe she is a mighty fortunate woman not to have been indicted for first-degree murder, in the light of the strong circumstantial evidence and the strong indications of a motive. But, nevertheless, the "frame up" complaint still persists both on one part and that of her friends.

The finding of the grand jury of an indictment in so small a degree as that of Mrs. Carman's case with bitter comment from the relatives of the dead woman, much as it pleased the Carman and their friends. Mrs. Corby, the mother of Mrs. Ida Powell, said: "I am not clamoring for vengeance but I do not believe this woman should be allowed to go free. I got off with a life, as she may it be tried on first degree manslaughter and then found guilty in the second degree."

William H. Bailey, the dead woman's husband, said: "That is my wife, too. I do not wish to question the righteousness of the law officers, but it seems to me that the woman who killed my wife is going to escape proper punishment."

Bitter Analyst-Detectives.

Mrs. Carman loses no opportunity to call attention to the fact that William H. Bailey was employed by the district attorney, and professes to believe that the private detectives would build up a case against her on perjured evidence.

"Do you actually believe," asked a reporter, "that a detective, or two or three or more detectives would deliberately concoct perjured evidence to convict you instead of seeking to find the murderer of Mrs. Bailey?"

"Yes, I do," she responded emphatically. "Those private detectives would do anything."

"Did you ever catch Celia Coleman, the colored maid, in a lie?" asked the reporter.

"No," replied Mrs. Carman. "She always seemed honest. She was a very quiet girl. But Celia had some trouble with her head. She used to say a mole on her head troubled her. Now you can see a colored maid to say almost anything and everybody knows a detective kidnapped her."

Mrs. Carman apparently believes that he was deprived of her legal rights, then he was not allowed to go before the grand jury, and this will form part of her plea when he is brought to trial in September.

"Of course I had a right to appear before the grand jury," she maintained. "Then refusal to hear me was an injustice. Just look who they heard—a colored servant and a tramp—and they wouldn't hear me."

Continuing, she said: "That refusal is unworthy of belief. Do you think a tramp like him could have seen what he says he saw and go to New York and get a case of first-degree murder and come back here and tell the sheriff the facts?"

Mrs. Carman also protested against the manner of her arrest. She said it could have been done quietly, but was accomplished in a manner reminiscent of a circus.

WILL BE A GREAT FAIR

The Michigan State Fair Promises to be the Best Ever Inaugurated Premium List Out

The 65th annual exhibition of the Michigan State Agricultural Society will be held September 7th-18th at Detroit, under the popular caption of the Michigan State Fair.

Secretary-Manager, Dickinson has made strenuous preparations for this important event and folks in Michigan, and all surrounding states, are evincing lively interest in the coming event—which will afford a list of attractions never before equaled for the amusement loving public.

The premium list is one of completeness and the finest ever issued by the association—the premiums aggregate fully $150,000, which is a high-water mark for any state or similar fair. Many special features have been added to the list unique in many ways—china and fine arts have been added—premiums in the livestock department and special departments have been liberally increased so that exhibitors now are in position to put down some very liberal exhibition awards indeed.

Naturally there is particular interest in the horse racing, for the Michigan State Fair management have always maintained a racing program second to none. For every lover of racing there will be feature every single day well worth the attention of the public. In addition to the splendid horse races the management have gone ahead on their liberal program for the best and richest automobile event that will cause inter-state attention. Among those to appear in the auto races are such world famous speed demons as "Wild Bob" Burman, Diabolo, Ratner, Heane, Peimann and many other famous professionals and amateurs.

On the Midway every effort has been made to present a clean lot of unique and entertaining amusement far above the average found at fairs. The management has been busy for many months scouring the country for those features that will appeal to every one, nothing the least objectionable will be found—but at the same time there will be plenty of excitement and thrills. The plan this year is to have a general inspector and manager of Midway shows to see that everything is just as represented—and there will be one of America's foremost exponents of carnival shows to handle the details—the whole Midway attractions being under the C. A. Wortham Show Co.'s direction.

Then the free attractions include some of the very finest organizations and individual acts ever presented to the American public. The world-famous Kitties Band, which has no peer as a public entertainer, will be featured daily with concerts of the highest order. Negotiations are under way for the best aeroplane operators that dare the high heavens, in feats which cause the beholder to gasp in wonder—loop the loops—lofty tumbles, riding up-side-down and other mid-air thrills will be carried out. Then there will be the most gigantic balloon aggregation possible, with balloon feats that have never before been demonstrated.

There will be a babies' Health Contest, with Mrs. Geo. G. Caron, president of the Detroit Board of the Children's Home Society as superintendent. This is the first contest of the kind ever held by the Michigan State Fair and already widespread interest has been manifested in the event. There is a very large and attractive set of premiums offered in this connection and all parents are urged to have their babies entered, as the contest is both educational and highly instructive, helping to raise the standard of health and happiness among infants. Taking it all in all those who attend the Michigan State Fair at Detroit this fall will receive the best time of their lives.

CHAUTAUQUA TICKETS
CHEAP FOR SEASON

ABOUT TWENTY CONCERTS AND LECTURES FOR ONLY $1.50.

One of the most careful buyers among our successful business men, was heard to say the other day, that he considered a Chautauqua season ticket, "a good buy." When asked for an explanation he picked up from his desk one of the beautiful souvenir booklets containing the program and announcements of our coming Chautauqua. He said, "I have read carefully, I have decided that I want to attend every session and hear every number on the program. It all seems too good to miss. Now if I pay twenty-five cents each afternoon and thirty-fives each evening, for admission it would cost me a total of three dollars. By purchasing a season ticket I am not bothered by any delay or change making at the gate, I am ready for any and all sessions and it only costs me one dollar and a half. This is an immediate saving of one half. My wife and I can both have season tickets at the price single admissions would cost one of us. Furthermore, said he, you will notice these tickets are transferable. Now that means that if I am prevented by some circumstance from attending a session of the program, I can give my ticket to some worthy person, and have the satisfaction of doing a favor." As he turned to wait on a customer, this far-sighted business man, remarked, "You can depend upon it, I am going to use that ticket to the limit. Somebody is going to ride in on it every time the tent is open."

It occurs to us that the logic of this shrewd business man is irresistible and worthy of following. The calls for season tickets are gratifying the promoters of our Chautauqua and the outlook is very flattering. We would advise our citizens to purchase now, as the season tickets in the hands of the committee can be sold by them for $1.50 but if purchased of the Chautauqua management the regular price is $1.75. The good purchaser buys at the right time and the right place. DO IT NOW.
