LIBRARY OPENING SUCCESSFUL EVENT

JUNIUS BEAL'S RUSSIAN ADDRESS WAS DECIDEDLY INTERESTING.

GOODLY SIZED CROWD OUT TO BOOM THE LADIES' EFFORTS FOR MORE PATRONS.

The "Library opening" last Saturday afternoon, proved a most successful affair both in point of attendance and interest. A large audience was present and the program was greatly enjoyed from start to finish. The work of the library and its aims were briefly presented by the president of the association, Mrs. F. S. Harmon, and charming musical and literary numbers were given, besides the feature of the occasion an illustrated address on Russia by Regent J. E. Beal of Michigan University. Mr. Beal's talk was listened to with the closest attention and many points of interesting information were given that would not have been available through published accounts. Mr. Beal, although versed in six languages, confessed himself unable to learn that of Russia, but this fact detracted in no sense from his entertaining description of places and incidents.

His talk was a free gift to the library association, for which the ladies of the board feel grateful beyond expression, as also to the singers and the reader who contributed so largely to the success of the occasion.

As a gratifying sequel to the meeting, a dozen library cards were sold, some to new members and some as renewals.

GEN. GEO. SPALDING DEAD AT MONROE

WAS CONGRESSMAN FROM THIS DISTRICT FOR TWO TERMS.

HIS EFFORTS GAINED FOR NORTHVILLE THE PRES- ENT BEAUTIFUL GOVERNMENT BUILDINGS.

General George Spalding, a former congressman, and leading citizen of Monroe, died early Tuesday morning. He suffered a stroke of apoplexy Sunday night.

Mr. Spalding was born in Scotland 79 years ago, coming to America later with his parents and settling near Monroe. He was teaching school when the civil war broke out and he enlisted at once as a private. He received various commissions until he was finally brevetted brigadier-general at Nashville in 1865.

Later in life he was made representative of this district, serving in congress from 1896 to 1899. It was thru his efforts while acting as representative that the new U. S. Fish station buildings were constructed in Northville.

FORMER PLYMOUTH POSTMASTER DEAD.

Lafayette C. Hall, who retired from the position of postmaster of Plymouth seven years ago after an incumbency of nearly ten years, died at his home in that village last week at the age of 89 years. He had lived in Plymouth 19 years, and was greatly esteemed there as a citizen and friend. He is survived by his wife, who was Miss Emma Gorman of Corunna before her marriage.

PINCHED FOR BORROWING CAR.

George Cook, formerly employed in the Park House, helped himself to the new Ford automobile, belonging to Don VanSickle while it stood in the McKahan garage early Wednesday evening and went for a ride. He had previously asked Mr. McKahan if he might borrow it and had been refused. So as soon as the latter left the garage Cook stepped in, entered the car and was off with it. Mr. McKahan noted its absence upon his return and Marshal F. N. Pefferin was notified.

Some time later Cook drove thru town with a man from Novi whom he asked to take a ride in what he said was his car, newly purchased. The man Cook had run into a horse while enroute from Novi and smashed up the wind shield of the car.

Officer Pefferin at once arrested Cook and he was placed in the town jail until Thursday morning, when a trial was held before Judge Noble.

The man pleaded guilty and was sentenced to a $25 fine with $5 costs or a term of 90 days in the Detroit house of correction. He paid.

This is a serious offense in the eyes of the law. To enter and drive away in any vehicle, without the owner's permission and even without the intention of stealing, one is liable to a fine of $500 or 2 years in the house of correction, for the second offense, the first offense having a lighter penalty.

LIVES ARE WORTH MORE THAN MONEY

CONGRESSMAN F. H. KELLEY MAKES STRONG SPEECH AT STATE FAIR GROUNDS.

URGES BIG NAVY TO KEEP ENEMY OFF OUR SHORES IN CASE OF TROUBLE.

"The United States need never fear invasion," declared Congressman Patrick H. Kelley, of the naval affairs committee of the house of representatives, to an audience of 15,000 people at the state fair Friday.

Mr. Kelley said that since 1903 the policy of maintaining a fleet equal to or slightly superior to that of any great military power in the world, and that this policy had been rigidly adhered to. He quoted figures to show that the United States navy, at the outbreak of the European war, was, on the whole, at least the equal of Germany's navy, and that probably it was the equal now. He denied the possibility of any nation transporting 500,000 men across the Atlantic or Pacific oceans in the face of the opposition of even a mediocre navy. He cited one of the aspects of the European war to emphasize the difficulty of transporting troops by water in the face of opposition.

"Germany, from her position, has full control of the Baltic sea," he said. "Her navy is four times that of Russia, and yet she has been unable to take Riga, or land troops near there."

"We should by all means keep a navy at least equal to that of any great military power," said Mr. Kelley. "It war should ever come, and should let money do our fighting, and not sacrifice the lives of our boys. Battleships cost money, but it is better ourselves on the sea to the point where our navy could be annihilated or bottled up and a large force landed here for land battles, when we know that in Europe land battles a million men are sometimes killed or wounded in one great battle.

"We should build submarines. They can be built quickly, are comparatively inexpensive and would render impossible the landing of an expeditionary force and would keep hostile fleets at a respectful distance. I did not mean we should neglect to build dreadnaughts, but we are building them fast enough now to keep pace with any navy except that of England. I was in a submarine recently, 67 feet under water. The biggest dreadnaught draws only 20 feet, so what nation would dare convey any force like 500,000 men in troop ships across an ocean no matter how strongly convoyed by ships of the line, when the submarine could go under the big ships and sink the troop ship?"

"I am opposed to a large army, that is, any army numbering 500,000 to 1,000,000. It would be expensive, needless and calculated to arouse a military spirit that might plunge us into war. I am against teaching military tactics in the public schools, for that would breed a war spirit. It would give the boys a false perspective. They would place too high a value on military prowess. I do not oppose military teaching in more advanced schools, where boys of more advanced age attend, who would not be unbalanced by the training."

"I am in favor of world peace, and sympathize heartily with the ideas of Henry Ford. But it would be folly to disarm until all nations agree to do so. After this war, the European nations may be willing to listen to us. They need to be educated, we do not. We are not an aggressive nation, any military preparations we make are to repel possible invasion, not to conquer the world."

BOGART-PETERSON.

Another wedding of interest to Northville people is that of Ray Bogart of this place and Miss Carrie Peterson of Highland Park which occurred Thursday evening.

The ceremony was performed at 6:30 o'clock at the home of the bride's sister, Mrs. Otto Dalley, in Highland Park. Included in the bridal party were Miss Ella Wigle of Ypsilanti as bridesmaid, Roland McGuire of Flint as best man, and little Geryl Bogart of Novi as ribbon bearer.

Mr. and Mrs. Bogart are spending a few days in the Yorkes cottage at Walled Lake. They will be at home after October first in the Christensen house, corner Grace avenue and Lake street where they have furnished and ready for occupancy.

Mr. Bogart graduated from the High school in 1912 and is now employed in the office of the American Bell & Foundry Co. He is the second son of Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Bogart.

The bride has made many friends here during her numerous visits with her aunt, Mrs. E. J. Cobb. She taught school near Plymouth last year.

Northville people in attendance at the wedding were Mrs. N. E. Bogart, Mr. and Mrs. Edward Bogart, Mr. and Mrs. E. J. Cobb, Mr. and Mrs. F. S. Harmon, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Schoultz, and Miss Margarette Wiener.

AMBLER-KENYON.

The marriage of Miss Leota Kenyon, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. M. L. Kenyon of this place and Sherrill W. Ambler of Detroit, was solemnized in the Methodist church Saturday evening at 7:30 o'clock. Rev. R. M. Pierce performed the ceremony in the presence of the immediate relatives of the two parties.

After the services a dainty luncheon was served at the Kenyon home on Dunlap street. The young couple left late in the evening for Detroit, going from there to Ohio to visit friends.

Both the bride and groom have many friends here, the former having lived in Northville nearly all her life while the groom moved to Detroit with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Mark Ambler, only a few years ago. Mrs. Ambler graduated from the High school in 1913 and has acted as organist in the M. E. church for some time. She is also a singer of more than local repute.

Mr. Ambler has a responsible position with the Dodge Bros. Motor Car company of Detroit, where they will make their home.

The bridal couple have the best wishes of their Northville friends for a happy future.

NEW TIME TABLES ON THE D. C. R.

On Tuesday, September 21, the fall and winter timetables of the several Detroit United Lines go into effect. On the Orchard Lake division it is expected that the fall time table of about a year ago will be in effect. A full announcement is promised later.

IYA MAE CHAPPEL MARRIED.

A very pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. R. R. Darwin, "Meadow Spring Farm," Pinckney, Saturday evening, Sept. 11, when their foster daughter, Iya Mae Chappel, was united in marriage to William H. Gardner also of that place.

The bride wore a handsome gown of white net embroidered in pearls over white satin and carried a bridal bouquet of white chrysanthemums. A color scheme of pink and white flowers predominated in all the rooms. After congratulations and a dainty supper they left amid showers of rice and good wishes for their new home in West Putnam, which the groom had all in readiness for the bride.

Among the many useful and numerous presents was a beautiful piano, a gift from the groom.

Only the immediate relatives and friends were present at the ceremony performed by Rev. A. T. Camburn, pastor of the Pinckney M. E. church.

Miss Chappel lived in Northville for some years and was a graduate of the Plymouth High school. She will be remembered here as a very sweet and charming young lady and her friends will wish for her unbounded happiness. The groom is a prominent and prosperous Livingston county farmer.

An Ann Arbor Interview.

Mr. Howard Tells His Experience.

The following brief account of an interview with an Ann Arbor man over two years ago, and its sequel, will be read with keen interest by every Northville citizen.

Frank E. Howard, 504 W. Washington St., Ann Arbor, Mich., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble and was confined to my bed most of the time. I could not turn over while lying down without having acute pains in the small of my back. If I managed to get up, I was only able to get about by using a cane. I could not sleep well on account of the frequent desire to void the kidney secretions and I was caused great distress by a burning sensation. Finally, I began to suffer from rheumatic pains, which made my case ten times worse. By chance, Doan's Kidney Pills ended all my suffering."

Over two years later, Mr. Howard said: "I am glad to confirm all I ever said in praise of Doan's Kidney Pills. I can add that I have used this medicine once or twice since with the best of results."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Howard has twice publicly recommended. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

The supreme court of Michigan has decided that Oakland county is "dry." At last spring's election the county showed a majority of 13 in favor of the dry. The vote demanded a recount, which, when finished, gave the victory to the "wet." It was found that the ballot boxes had been tampered with and badly so. The matter was taken to the supreme court. The decision makes Oakland county "dry" for the next two years.

school is his business not his diversion. To the realization of these ideas everyone can help. For example, there are 377 students in school. If everyone should stay out one day per month only, there would be a loss of 377 days per month, or 3,770 per school year. In other words if one student lost that much schooling he would lose 18 school years of his entire school life. Now, although these 3,770 days (18 school years) are scattered over 377 students the total loss is about the same. A day lost has a variety of bad results for the student who loses it as well as the other members of his class. So please assist us by requiring the attendance of your children, except for very good reasons. By encouraging absence or tardiness of your child you can strike a serious blow at our efficiency.

The world is waiting for young men and young women physically upright.

We will do our best with the facilities at hand to give athletes their proper emphasis so assist in physical development. Mental keenness, which is sometimes that to be the school's only function, we will develop with all the power and intelligence we possess.

Moral uprightness we hold to be one of the highest goals toward which we are to guide the students under our charge. We realize the tremendous responsibility we have for the good or evil characters which may develop in the school as a result of their training by us, and we share with every inhabitant of Northville the responsibility we all have as examples to these youthful imitators. We all, teachers, parents, and neighbors, must set an example, not a terror. Let us make school effective character after school life is done.

SYNOPSIS.

CHAPTER I.—Jim Haviland becomes an expert gambler as a boy, and gets a job with Mike Garven, a confidence man and gambler. Garven becomes a promoter of fake companies, and makes his headquarters in New York. He has a small army of "con" men. Garven manipulates a check in such a way that he could send Haviland up for ten years for forgery, as he makes it a rule to have the power of life and death over his men.

CHAPTER II.—Haviland meets Alice Walton, whose father is in New York to promote a Virginia power plant.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY CHAPTER III.

The Master's Lash Cracks.

Did you ever try not to think of a thing and have it bound you and pound its way into your brain every second? I guess you have, I guess every one has.

It's a mighty hard thing for the brain to find a different groove when your thoughts, and actions, and desires have been something a nice little channel for years.

I didn't get much sleep that night, but I won the fight or rather the heavy eyes of the girl won it for me.

Ever since I'd tried that simple old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, I could not get it out of my mind.

And here I was, the next morning, in a room where I had been for the first time in my life, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Yes, I was. I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

And I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, and I was thinking of the old man with his two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

before he'd given me cigars, and both times had lived to be nightmares.

"What is it this time?" I growled at him.

Not a line in his face changed. His eyes dropped to the crushed tobacco on the floor for a moment, then raised to mine. He lit his own cigar carefully.

"Jim," he began in that never-changing voice, "remember the day on the circus grounds that you hit me for a job? I took you then because you looked like a boy who had his temper buried so deep under his common sense that it'd never dig its way out. Temper is what gets men in jail, Jim; childish, senseless temper has sent men to the electric chair. I don't want to see yours again, Jim."

"What do you want?" There was viciousness in my voice, and he recognized it; but there was not even a waver of the cigar smoke that curled from his lips.

"I've got a job for you." They were the same words that he had used over the telephone, and in the same voice.

"I won't take it. I'm going to stay right here in New York for a week." "This job is in New York," he said idly sketching off the big blotter as he always did when talking.

"Why can't one of the other boys do it?" I belched.

"None here," he added, another line to the sketch.

"Let's face it, then. He looks enough like a crook to do anything."

"He's just what he looks," came idly from the bent head. "You're not what you look."

"Out with it," I snarled impatiently. "Get it over with!"

He drew a scratchpad toward him and went on with his infernal sketching.

"It's easy money, Jim, the easiest money you'd been up against in a long time. Good money, too; a nice, bit for you, Jim, and the boob is dead anxious to fall. It's that two hundred and fifty thousand old Walton has."

Heaven! I saw red then! The dancing devils flared before my eyes. That old man's money! The money that had been waiting for me!

"That's your rotten son!" I must have screamed it, but the door was thick, and no one knew his job.

I jumped on him, fingers itching for the feel of his windpipe between them. The Harvard man he whipped from somewhere, flung it off into my stomach as I ran against the barrel.

I didn't give an inch, but a fraction of an inch.

The black eyes had it into mine, the black eyes had it into mine, the black eyes had it into mine.

What had I done? The first short burst of anger had been mine. Then I'd seen him. And the man and the woman who were with him. I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them. And I'd seen them.

owner because he and his neighbors control the stock.

"They can vote it as they see fit, hold all the directorate, places, and really own the company. It is merely a question of old friends and neighbors controlling it instead of northern people. Tell him, of course, that the Swellons lose nothing, because they will get their dividends on the remainder of the stock. He'll fall strong."

"You want me to pull a deal like that?" I half shouted. "Selling fake stock in a concern we have no connection with? Forged stock?" I sneered. "Do you want to crack rocks with me?"

He leaned back to get a view of his sketch, added another line of two, and answered me.

"The years haven't taught you much, have they, Jim?" It wasn't really a question; it was only a flat-tongued statement. "You ought to know me better than that. But you're not supposed to know, as I do, that in the western part of Virginia, about two hundred miles from the Little-Hazel river, is a little Hazel creek. It's only about two feet wide, and it flows through a useless marsh most of the year, where land can be purchased very cheap."

"In fact, thirty acres, cost a man I sent down there only thirty dollars. The creek has a natural water fall. I think there's a drop of a foot and a half over some fallen logs."

"Now I have an idea that if it was properly developed Little Hazel creek would furnish power. The corporation papers for the Little Hazel Power Development Company, of Little Hazel creek, went up to Albany yesterday."

"Of course the papers are specific in their location of Little Hazel creek, but the stock certificates are dated New York, where the main office is to be. Don't you think Walton is familiar enough with the Little Hazel Power Development Company to buy those shares without bothering about details of incorporation?"

I listened in a sort of daze to his words as the light broke and the damnable ingenuousness of it hit me. The innocent old man with his thoughts of years on the Little Hazel river naturally could think of no other Little Hazel.

I knew he would jump at the stock of the Little Hazel Power Development Company, because there was only one Little Hazel to him. And when he asked me:

"When the Swellon Company began work he discovered that the stock he had bought for his neighbors was on a worthless marsh creek two hundred miles away."

He could do nothing. The company had been properly organized. The incorporation papers made plain the fact that the plant was to be built on the river and not the river he knew so well.

There would be no redress, no way on earth that he could touch Mike Garven.

And as I sat there thinking, I remembered the old man's gentle voice as he would before the stuffed swine bodies of those hideous, boar-constrictors.

"Snakes that walk instead of crawl"—snakes that he couldn't be sure existed. I felt again the shadow of the girl's body against mine, once again I saw the look in her eyes.

I was at his desk, my hands, white knuckles, clutched at its edge as I leaned forward to shoot my defiant words in his face.

"By Heavens, I won't! And you won't either! I'm going to warn that old man. I'm going to tell him every thing that you have told me about the affair."

I stopped. The gray eyes that had been staring into mine dropped something made mine follow them. I looked down at the sketch he had drawn as he talked.

It was of a convict, in his cursed stripes, but the face was mine, and over the head in great scrawled letters was: "Forgery!" beneath it was: "Ten years!"

The last of the master had cracked.

CHAPTER IV.

Playing the Game.

Why didn't I kill him as he sat there? Why didn't I throttle him before he could make a move toward the gun he had thrown back in a drawer?

Because I'm a coward! Just as much of a coward as you are; no more, no less. Murderous rage hits us all at times, and we think we could kill without a qualm.

If we have a gun in our hands, and the trigger snaps in the first instant of our rage, then we've committed our murder.

But with our bare hands on the throat of him we would kill the rage recedes at the feel of the flesh, it leaves us as we see the agony of the victim's face.

That's true. Only the brute can hold on after the first impulse comes. And then we thank God for the rasping breaths of the man whom we have choked. Oh, it's easy to talk of killing. You're probably sneering, from the depths of your easy chair, at my lack of nerve. But you don't know; you don't know!

Perhaps you're asking why I didn't tell him to do his worst; why I didn't let him send me to jail. He could have done it. The whole plant had been arranged with just that in view. I'd realized it all the while, but it never bothered me till the show-down came.

It would have been a noble thing, owner because he and his neighbors control the stock.

"They can vote it as they see fit, hold all the directorate, places, and really own the company. It is merely a question of old friends and neighbors controlling it instead of northern people. Tell him, of course, that the Swellons lose nothing, because they will get their dividends on the remainder of the stock. He'll fall strong."

"You want me to pull a deal like that?" I half shouted. "Selling fake stock in a concern we have no connection with? Forged stock?" I sneered. "Do you want to crack rocks with me?"

He leaned back to get a view of his sketch, added another line of two, and answered me.

"The years haven't taught you much, have they, Jim?" It wasn't really a question; it was only a flat-tongued statement. "You ought to know me better than that. But you're not supposed to know, as I do, that in the western part of Virginia, about two hundred miles from the Little-Hazel river, is a little Hazel creek. It's only about two feet wide, and it flows through a useless marsh most of the year, where land can be purchased very cheap."

say you, to have gone to jail for ten years rather than take two hundred and fifty thousand dollars from the father of the girl I loved. Noble? Perhaps.

"But, wouldn't it have been a lot more foolish? That old man's money was ready to be taken by the first slick worker that came along. Do you suppose sending me to jail would have satisfied Mike Garven? Not on your life!"

Another one of his men would have been put right on the job, following up the lead I'd made. Just give me the benefit of the doubt, please.

It's mighty easy to lay back and figure out what a person ought to do; it's a whole lot different when you get there yourself.

"The stock certificates ought to be ready day after tomorrow," Mike took up the conversation where he had left off, his pencil working on another piece of paper.

"Good by," I choked, jamming on my hat.

"Good-by, Jim." He spoke without looking up; and there was no triumph, or gloating, or even satisfaction in his voice. I don't think he had ever known an emotion.

Outside of his office I leaned weakly against the building and wiped the sweat from my forehead. I was still shaking from helpless rage, and I needed a drink.

In a nearby cafe I happened to glance at a clock and was amazed to see that I had still time to keep my engagement with Alice and her father.

"Somehow it seemed an eternity since I had been in that quiet lobby smoking and dreaming. How did I have the nerve to face them?"

My years of training had nerved me to it, I guess. And at the hotel Alice hailed me gaily, her winsome face alight with joy as I approached.

"You're ten minutes late, she censured laughingly. "Where have you been, Sir Galahad?"

"Business date," I lied easily. Oh, but those years of playing my confidence game stood me in good stead now.

"See the busy business man," she teased grimly like the child she was. "Father is also performing his morning duty, though he has complained of the Bombon every single day we've been here."

"Good whisky, to those who appreciate it," I smiled, "as almost as hard to find in New York as good friends."

"Unless one is very, very lucky," she said with soft stammering smiling at me. "I spent two long days of dreadful loneliness in this big city before Providence sent you, my friend."

The straightforward frankness of Alice had the lash of whip across my unprotected face. A good friend! God save the world!

But the years of gambling and playing of "con" games had made impossible of two second nature, for I smiled my thanks, as Alice's father must have smiled, I think.

But I didn't smile.

For a moment we sat in silence side by side on the broad leather settee there in the lobby, he with her chin resting on her knuckles, her elbow on her knee, watching my every move and woman who hunted or walked up and down with eyes alert with interest.

"Mike Garven," she said suddenly, seriously, "have you ever had a dream—a beautiful dream that you have seen shattered, but still refuse to let the dream shatter, because another dream comes, which restores the pieces and builds it anew once more?"

A dream? No. But hideous reality. "Yes," Mike's sharp intake of breath seemed to force the word.

But she was too deep in her thoughts to notice.

"Perhaps my words do not make the idea quite clear," she went on, still in that mingling tone of voice. "But the power plant on the Little Hazel river seems to have been a dream always. But it was a dream that included daddy and old Uncle Calvin and Mr. James and the others, while the reality is of strangers who are not of us or with us."

"But isn't it better that way?" I asked gently. "The men who will have charge are business men. They can make the power-plant a lot more productive and powerful than could a body of men who were not familiar with the details of such a scheme."

Her look was instantly reproachful. "You don't think that daddy, and the others could make a success of it?" she exclaimed in wonderment.

"Then there came just a shade of scorn in her voice. "Perhaps they aren't the kind of men New Yorkers would consider capable of a thing like that, Mr. Haviland, but the ones who need the power and would pay for it are southerners."

She drew herself up proudly. "Their business methods may not be the methods of New York; they would lack the chicane and trickery perhaps, but there would be something infinitely greater—the inherent trust of neighbor for neighbor—the shoulder-to-shoulder friendship that has never died down home."

Contrition came to her then. "I beg your pardon—I forgot. Will you forgive my discourtesy?" Her little hand was on mine; her eyes pleaded with her voice.

"Forgive you?" I longed to shout. "I'd forgive you anything—I love you!"

But my voice had its practised evenness as I said: "I didn't mean that he wouldn't be capable of running the plant. The trouble would be in its financing, as he has already discovered."

ed. Even if he had gotten the money there would have been numberless details of organization, the issuance of bonds, floating debts, and sinking funds of which he can know nothing because he has never had any experience in that line. A credible speech, I thought.

Her eyes shone. "That is why I am talking to you like this, Mr. Haviland," she declared. "You know all about those things. Is it too late now to have that dream come true?"

"Why," I exclaimed in bewilderment, "the Swellons have bought the property and water rights?"

"I know they have," she answered, a curious hesitation in her voice. "But isn't there some way to give the money back to them—and with you to help us?" She sounded helplessly.

I looked the amazement I felt. This was a phase of feminine nature I'd never encountered before—this casting aside of everything for an ideal.

"Oh, I don't mean anything dishonorable," she cried. "But you know so much about stocks, and this is to be a stock company—I know, because father and the others are to get ten per cent of the total money, besides the two hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

"This is new!" I exclaimed. "Have you told father of your business?" I continued. "He has been so busy with his work, but I have never mentioned it to him. You can't understand the terrible things of business, and planned for years to build a ship, then giving it up on a whim because of one mislaid piece of paper to turn round and find the missing piece has been behind you. That is what he did. He had believed the dream he had dreamed so long to be hopeless, and then he met the one person he needed you."

"As there is a person if only in his mantle of invisibility who stands by it to own to put this into the hands of others that will make his life a success?"

"As I set there it seemed to me that there must be a personal devil, for the earnestness of this girl-child her words, thoughts, actions, were leading me ruthlessly onward to where I must play the game Mike Garven had planned—the game I would have cut off my right hand to lose."

"There may be a way," I said, and my voice sounded hard and dry.

"There is! You can do it!" All the wonderful lights that I knew and loved seemed to be sparkling in her eyes. "You will!" they pleaded up into mine.

DOUGHT SCHOOL TEACHERS TO HAVE A UNION? QUESTION TROUBLES CHICAGO

Should school teachers be permitted to form a union? This question is stirring Chicago, and a court fight impends. On one side is School Trustee Jacob Loeb, who is leading the battle to have the Chicago Teachers' Federation outlawed. Miss Margaret Haley is president of the federation, and is putting up a fight for its continuance. Mrs. Ella Flagg Young, superintendent of Chicago schools, is believed to favor the federation.

NEW USE FOR WINDFALL APPLES

APPLE SIRUP

A Method of Utilizing Windfall and Cull Apples—Directions for Making This Palatable Product.

Experiments by government canning specialists show that a very palatable apple sirup can be made from apple culls. While it may not be practical for the average farmer to produce apple sirup on a commercial scale, the home manufacture of apple sirup for the family's winter use will furnish a profitable outlet for a large number of culls and windfalls which can not be marketed.

Apple sirup made by the following method is a very palatable product. It has a flavor much like the thick sirup of fully ripe apples, but is often found when apples are filled with a little sugar. As shown by experiments, this apple sirup can be used in coloring with good results, as well as for fruit purposes.

Reducing Apple Cider to Sirup.

Wash apples and remove all decayed and worm-eaten spots. Press out juice as usual for cider making. Be sure the juice does not ferment or grow, as only sweet cider should be used for sirup making. The sterilizing reducing vat or kettle should be a third larger than required to hold contents.

Add 5 ounces of powdered calcium carbonate to 14 gallons of apple cider. Powdered calcium carbonate (pearl-ash of lime), commonly called precipitated chalk, is a low-priced chemical available at any drug store. Boil in kettle or vat vigorously for a period of 75 minutes. Pour the liquid into vessels, preferably glass jars or pith-balls, allow to stand 6 to 8 hours, or until perfectly clear. Pour the clear liquid into the serving kettles. Do not allow sediment at bottom to enter. Add to the clear liquid one level teaspoonful of blue carbonate and stir thoroughly. The process is completed by boiling down rapidly to a steady liquid consistency gauge or candy thermometer and bring to 220 degrees F. or without thermometer, reduce bulk to one-seventh of original volume. To see whether it is cooked sufficiently, test as you would sirup of candy, by pouring a little of it into cold water. If boiled enough, it should have the consistency of apple sirup. It should not be cooked until it becomes like candy when tested. When the test shows that the sirup has been cooked enough, pour it into fruit jars, pith-balls, etc., and allow it to cool slowly. Slow cooling is important, as otherwise the suspended matter will not settle properly and the sirup will be cloudy.

A good way to insure slow cooling is to sink the vessels full of sirup in a bucket or a wash boiler of hot water. They may also be placed in a wooden cask or tub, the whole filled with water. The water should be changed frequently during cooling. It is called "bath of Mary" and is a compound of lime with the liquid acid of the apple. When the sirup is cooled it should be stored in fruit jars or bottles in position and lighter. Then place the bottles or cans of sirup in hot water and sterilize for 12 minutes in hot water or steam in an outfit.

HOW TO MAKE DAINTY PLANTS FOR PICNIC

During the warm days when the heat and fatigue of our daily tasks make us long for a breath of country life, a flavor of the unaccustomed lends relish to life.

A day's outing is just the thing and the luncheon forms one of the most important requisites for the day's pleasure.

Paper plates, cups and napkins and a set of aluminum knives and forks and spoons, will equip the lunch basket for many a summer outing, at very little weight.

The different edibles should be wrapped in waxed paper, the condiments in pasteboard cartons or pails, all of which can be thrown away with the exception of the knives, etc., when used.

Here are some recipes appropriate for the picnic basket:

Walnut Dainties.—Work a 10-cent cream cheese until smooth, using a wooden spoon, and season with one-eighth teaspoonful each of paprika and salt, add four green olives, stoned and chopped. Shape into twenty-four balls, using a teaspoonful of each, roll in hard crackers, powdered and sifted, and flatten.

Place halves of walnut meats on each piece. Pack in layers on waxed paper with cardboard between.

Stuffed Tomatoes.—Dip tomatoes in hot water and remove the skin, taking care not to cut the tomato. Place on ice, and when chilled, remove the inside and stuff with Neufchatel cheese, well blended with mayonnaise and finely ground green peppers. Chill thoroughly before packing; then wrap each one in oiled paper and seal. When ready to serve, slice and lay on a bed of lettuce.

Berry Cases.—Cream one-third cupful of sugar, then add two eggs, beaten light, and one-fourth cupful of sweet milk. Measure three cupfuls of pastry flour (after sifting), add four teaspoons of baking powder and 1/4 teaspoon of salt; stir into liquid and turn on a floured board or marble, adding flour enough to make a soft dough (but not more than is necessary to make the dough possible to handle).

Roll to about one-fourth inch in thickness; sprinkle with nutmeg and cut in large round shapes. Bake on inverted buttered muffin-rings in a quick oven until light brown, and to prevent breaking, remove from rings while hot. These can be used to hold any fresh fruit, and are especially good with berries.

Club Sandwiches.—One medium-sized Spanish onion or several spring onions run through a food chopper; then one cucumber, ad last, four or five slices of crisp browned bacon. Mix all together with mayonnaise to moisten and season well. Place a lettuce leaf on a buttered slice of bread; add a little of the chopped mixture, then a slice of tomato; spread again with first mixture, add another lettuce leaf and a slice of bread. Wrap and seal.

THE TABLE

Sweet Potato Salad.—Boil three large sweet potatoes and peel. When cold cut them into one-half inch cubes. Cut three stalks of celery of endive into small pieces, add a small onion sliced in thin rings, and season to taste. Dress with French dressing and garnish with parsley.

Nut Muffins.—Two cups bread flour, four teaspoons baking powder, one egg, one-third teaspoon salt, one-half cup sugar, one tablespoon melted butter, one cup milk, one cup chopped walnuts. Sift flour, baking powder and salt together; beat egg, add sugar, beat again; turn in butter and milk; combine ingredients; stir in nuts, and bake in muffin tins in fairly hot oven for twenty-five minutes.

Sure Recipe for Bread.—Boil twelve medium potatoes at noon. Use potato water, and if old potatoes are used, add four mashed well to water. Pour this over three-fourths cup sugar. Soak one compressed yeast cake in half cup warm water and when potato water is lukewarm, add yeast and stir. Set one-half day or until bedtime, then add warm water to make two quarts of liquid. Add one-half teaspoon salt, three table-spoons sugar and enough flour to mix hard. Stand where warm over night. First thing in morning cut and form into loaves for second rising, and then bake from fifty to sixty minutes.

Glimpses of Married Life

BY MRS. EVA LEONARD

"The way to do this is to divide up." The doctor threw a fresh log on the bonfire. "Let each couple be responsible for an evening's entertainment."

"All right," "great stunt," came in chorus from the loungers in the fire-lit circle.

"I'll bring a croquet set," laughed Parsons, "and spread our entertainment over the whole week. Is it agreeable?"

"Where on earth would we play?" objected Jo. "The land here reminds me of the old relief maps at school."

"That's where the art comes in. Croquet on the level is too tame, but when you really have to study the lay of the land it becomes exciting."

"If you can make croquet exciting, come on," yawned Dick. "You'll have to show me before I'll believe it, anyhow. Nell and I have a stunt we'll pull off tomorrow evening."

Nell looked surprised, but everybody else was satisfied.

"We'll take the second evening," said the doctor. Olive nodded. "That leaves only the Scotts; Parsons is playing off his."

"Well," said Mr. Scott cautiously, "we'll take the last evening, or if we can't squeeze it in then we'll do a stunt in town or the first thing next year."

The next evening Dick got into Scott's auto in town, loaded with two suitcases. "What's this?" the men asked him.

"Ask me no questions and I'll tell you no lies," replied Dick. "I want to get out at the farmhouse a half mile this side of camp and buy an egg for shampooing Nell's hair."

They couldn't get anything out of him, and he disappeared into the farmhouse with a boy who met him and carried one of his suitcases. Nell did not seem anxious about him, and everybody else was soon occupied with setting up the croquet set Parsons had brought.

"Olive gets the first shot," they decided when the game was ready. "All right," she agreed. "Now, I want to get through this first arch, but it's on the hillside, so I'm going to try shooting up the hill and get a slant through."

Olive shot, and her ball rolled neatly around the arch and off across the starting grounds. Jo and Nell had no better success. Mrs. Scott elected to look on and restrain the enthusiasm of Gyp, her Spitz dog.

When Parsons had failed, the doctor took a hand. He swung his mallet nonchalantly and passed through the first two arches.

"Bravo!" cried everybody. "This is too easy," said the doctor. "I'm going to make a handicap of it. He went all round the ground making a hole by pounding with his mallet before every wicket."

Dick lounged in when they were eating and gave no explanations, even under a hot cross-questioning. Just as they were finishing dinner Parsons jumped up excitedly.

"Holy smoke, what's that?" he shouted.

"How beautiful," agreed all the women.

Around the bend in the river, swimming sinuously near the other bank, came a great green snake no less than twenty feet long. It had a huge head raised from the water, and glowing yellow eyes. As they watched it passing, Scott happened to look at Dick; he was grinning broadly. Scott slapped him heartily on the back.

"Well, how did you work that?" he asked.

Everybody turned to look at Dick, then inspected the serpent.

"He blew up a garter snake with a tire pump," suggested Parsons.

"I know," cried Olive, as the serpent disappeared lower down by wriggling up the bank. "It's pine boughs or a rope and somebody swimming under a basket with a lantern or something."

"Right," agreed Dick; "you're a peerless detective."

"It's a peerless trick, anyhow," said Jo. "I never saw anything lovelier."

"Did you think of it yourself?" inquired Parsons.

"Parsons is jealous," taunted the doctor, "because he couldn't work his own game and I took the honors."

"Anyhow, you can't say my stunt was flat," returned Parsons warily.

WICHITA UNION MEN

OPEN LOCAL OFFICE

Expect Big Building Contribution From Local Graduates.

To raise Detroit's share of the $1,000,000 needed for the Union building at Ann Arbor the Union campaign committee of Detroit has opened headquarters at 6 Michigan building. J. Griffith Hays, Jr., is in charge of the office.

With more than 3,000 graduates and former students of this district, Detroit is expected to raise a large share of the money needed for the erection of the building. For the best 60 days a committee of 50 of Detroit's most enthusiastic University of Michigan men of which Henry E. Bodman is chairman will do energetic work.

PUSHING CENTRALIZED SCHOOLS IN LENAWEE

Adrian, Mich.—Local school authorities are conducting a campaign in the interest of centralized schools. The campaign has been successful in three townships which have voted on the proposition. At present the people are being carefully educated to the new plan, so that successful progress can be made in all parts of the county.

School authorities are slowly coming to the conclusion that the centralized school plan will advance side by side with the good roads movement. With the abolishing of the district schools it is necessary to find some means of travel or transportation for students not near the school. Lack of good roads in various parts of the county has been checking the movement to some extent.

CONGRESSMAN KELLY IS RIGHT.

For sane, sound common sense as applied to the "preparedness" question, Congressman Kelly's ideas, expressed in his talk at the state fair, must commend themselves to every patriotic citizen.

His statement that a strong naval equipment such as the United States has had and which now is in need of strengthening and improving is all that is necessary to keep invasion at bay is both reasonable and true. His plea for the use of money for submarines instead of human lives to use in a great army for the protection of our country should appeal to every thinking person, and the enormous difference in loss of life between army and navy battles—should actual fighting ever come—is too well known to require comment.

Mr. Kelley's argument against militarism as a factor in our system of national instruction was also sound and sensible. The entire speech was an example of patriotic good sense that could not fail to add much to the speaker's already great popularity with the thinking public.

MICHIGAN'S 1915 STATE FAIR.

The sixty-sixth annual fair of the Michigan State Agricultural society has passed into history as one of the best ever. The large attendance even under the wet weather handicap, has again demonstrated the interest of the people of this and other states in our state fair and the wisdom of having a permanent location for our greatest public function of the year. The fair received added confirmation in the ever increasing facility with which the situation is handled in all its phases, and in the improvements that come each year as the result of experience. We all remember the transportation difficulties that once were and now are not, and the muddy walks are now so largely replaced with cement, of which we are promised a whole lot more next year. The efficiency of the entire management has been exceptional under President Aitken and Secretary Dickerson, and the selection of Mr. Haggerty as the new head of the society insures a continuance of improvement in all directions.

Until the society ladies of Oxford played a bloomer-base ball game there last week the men of the town didn't realize what a beautiful part of the village had hitherto been hidden near the outskirts. The gate receipts went up thirty and the girls' biggest love letters were made before the gates.

The girls who are drilling boys in a patriotic auto race and the boys who are in a coop in an arena at the state fair grounds this week after all didn't take any more chances than some other girls do when they take over a husband.

Highway Commissioner George Francis of Farmington has been doing some fine work this year in road repair work and especially in the scraping of the Grand River road after rain storms. The Grand River road has a tremendous amount of traffic and it takes constant care in order to keep it in as good a condition as it has been all the season. On nice days it is not uncommon for auto traffic to pass any given point east of Farmington at the rate of 200 an hour.

Wyandotte has suffered a reversal to the primitive in some respects. A skunk and a great big snake were recently killed in the heart of the city.

The family reunion also is added to the bumper crop list this season judging from the number of 'em mentioned in our exchanges.

Granville Wood of Detroit spent the week-end with his son, Fred E. Wood. The elder Wood was one of the famous organ builders of this country and his son, Will, now in Europe, was also famous in that line. The Granville Wood Son Pipe Organ Co. of Northville, of which W. M.
