MASS MEETING.

WELL ATTENDED

ORCHESTRA MUSIC AND IMPROMPTU SPEAKER FEATURE OF THE OCCASION.

The mass meeting at the Alseum Sunday night was a well attended affair, every seat being occupied, with extras in the rear and some people standing. The meeting was in the interests of the dry campaign, and the People's nominees together with the clergy and other citizens occupied the platform.

Each candidate made a short talk. Mr. Filkins said, "A saloon is a saloon whether in a hotel or an alley," and added he was against them any place.

Chas. Van Valkenburg suggested "if the saloons were good for a town why not have them in the schools and churches".

Mr. Hotalling and Mr. Tewksbury spoke along the line of economy and good government.

Supt. of Schools Misner said "I never expect to be mayor of a village or city but if I were I would eliminate 'blind pigs' if I had to station an officer at every door night and day and if necessary I would even work them 3 shifts."

Mr. Hoshai of Detroit, a former Sturgis business man, gave a general talk on local option and urged a continued dry vote for Northville.

The male quartet led the singing and the orchestra from the M. E. and Presbyterian churches furnished the music, and were added features of the occasion.

Wixom Whispersings

R. B. Cummings and W. H. Ferry were Northville visitors Tuesday.

Mrs. J. H. Callahan and son spent Friday with Mrs. Addie Callahan at Milford.

Mabel Gillett is quite sick with muscular rheumatism. Dr. T. B. Henry is attending her.

The Farmers' Club was held at the church parsony Wednesday. Members Wixom, Thompson, Shannon, Pegrass and Watson entertained.

Mrs. Hildah Furman was at home from Detroit for the week end, having sufficiently recovered from an attack of measles to resume her school duties Monday.

"JIM" HAMILTON DEAD.

James Hamilton, familiarly known as "Jim" to his many friends, died Thursday noon after several years of poor health.

Mr. Hamilton had been a resident of Northville for many years and was highly respected. He was an old soldier and a member of the local G. A. R. One sister survives, Mrs. Ida Hersey.

Funeral services will be held from the home on Powers street Saturday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

N. W. C. ENTERTAINED AT PLYMOUTH.

Thirty-five members of the Northville Woman's Club were most delightfully entertained last Friday afternoon by the Ladies' Literary club of Plymouth. The meeting was held in the Methodist church there, and was addressed by Mrs. Marie B. Ferry of Lansing, who is curator of the Historical museum at Lansing, and is also one of the officers of the Michigan Pioneer and Historical society. Mrs. Ferry's topic was "The Home of Our Hearts," and she made an earnest plea for the collection and preservation of all possible data pertaining to the early history of every locality in the state, and especially in Wayne County, which is particularly rich in historical material. Mrs. Griffin of the Northville club gave a charming group of songs, and responded to an insistent encore. Delicious refreshments were served to the large company in the beautiful Epworth League rooms of the church.

Northville School Notes.

(By a Pupil)

Mrs. Chas. Schoutz visited the eighth grade Tuesday.

Work in the grades is being resumed in good order.

Ruth Cattermole spelled down the eighth grade last Friday.

The eighth graders are making maps of the United States.

The attendance in the eighth grade for February was over 98 per cent.

Dallas Bailey of grade eight, is back in school after a weeks illness.

The Kindergarten people are enjoying their new home in the library.

The past week has been "Baby Week" throughout the United States for Kindergartens.

Evelyn Hibert, Stanley McGee and Floyd Kendall have moved to Detroit from the fourth grade.

Owing to the bad weather the attendeee for the past week has not been up to the standard.

Those preparing to take teacher's examinations are working after school under the direction of Miss Johnson.

The seniors' program Tuesday morning, consisted of a piano solo by Martha Horton, a reading by Rene Angell, and a song by the boys' quartet.

If the parents having children attending school will have patience to wait for a reasonable time, if they will boost and not knock, they will materially assist in getting fair results in the temporary building housing the first six grades.

CARD OF THANKS.

I wish to thank the W. R. C. King's Daughters and Ladies' Aid for flowers sent during my illness.

WEEK'S CALENDAR

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)

There will be but one service at the Baptist church next Sunday as the evening will be given over to a mass meeting in the Alseum theatre building. This service begins at 7:15 and will be great inspirational gathering. Don't fail to be present.

The topic for Sunday morning will be "Religion or the Jericho Road." You don't know whether your religion is genuine or not until you test it on this road. What your religion will do under pressure decides its value, matter requiring an act of congress; If its worthless, the sooner we find it out the better.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES.

"Personal Responsibility" will be the sermon theme of the pastor at the Methodist church next Sunday morning. Issues more vital than any commercial of financial interests could possibly be, more important to the moral welfare of the community than all other issues combined are to be decided by the village election on Monday.

Personal responsibility citizen. Depth of conviction and places a heavy burden upon every mortal courage while required to meet it.

Our Sunday school board was well represented in response to an invitation extended by the board of the Plymouth school to meet with them at their church, last Tuesday evening.

Our hosts received us cordially and after a bountiful supper tastily served in their dining room, an informal program was given in the church parlors consisting of selections by the Northville quartet and whistling solos by Mr. Harold Justice, of Plymouth, and several brief and pleasant speeches by members of both schools. It is proposed to continue similar meetings in the future.

This regular evening service is again taken up in the interest of the great Citizen's Rally and Mass Meeting to be held in the Alseum theatre at 7:15.

The Ladies' Aid Society will meet at the home of Mrs. E. S. Neal Tuesday afternoon, March 14.

COMMUNICATION FROM DR. THOS. B. HENRY

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NOTES.

HOTCHKISS GUN AND LOT SHELLS

VILLAGE AND SCHOOL BOARD WILL SECURE THEM THROUGH CONGRESSMAN P. H. KELLEY.

Village President Henry has received a letter from Congressman Kelley in regard to the two brass canon which, it was recently stated, were to be secured for Northville, saying that the obtaining of said guns will be a long and difficult matter, requiring an act of congress; and that a bill passed two years ago has already disposed of more than the visible supply of condemned canon from the war department.

Mr. Kelley says, however, that he can easily obtain, from the navy department, a Hotchkiss gun and enough spherical shells to build a fine pyramid, if the school board and the council are favorable to the plan, and that these can be sent here with very little delay.

President Henry has notified Congressman Kelly that the village will be glad to receive whatever can be obtained.

TOWNSHIP CAUCUSES.

The Republican township caucus tomorrow, Saturday, afternoon in village hall at 2:30 o'clock for the nomination of township officers.

The Republicans should, and undoubtedly will re-nominate Jud Lanning for supervisor. He has made a splendid official—Northville never had a better one.

Ernest Miller is candidate for clerk.

He also has made a good record in that position, and deserves re-nomination.

Marvin Sloan will be a candidate for the treasurer slot. Mr. Huff having faithfully served his term of two terms.

Joe Lawrence will be a candidate for highway commissioner. He has had some experience in road work and ought to make a good official.

The Democrats will hold theirs in the same place at 3:00 o'clock for the same purpose.

The Democrats have in mind but one leading candidate, Stewart Montgomery for highway commissioner. He has made a splendid road building record in the past two years and will make a good one. Unless the Republicans sit a cog at their caucus that office it is said is about all they will try for.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)

ST. PAUL'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.

(By the Pastor.)

The subject for next Sunday is "What is your soul worth?"

WESTMINSTER GUILD ENTERTAINMENT.

The entertainment to be given in the Alseum theatre next Wednesday evening, Mar. 15, by the Westminster Guild promises to be one of the most enjoyable of the season. The program is to include the three-reel film "Cinderella," a playlet by the Guild girls entitled "The Lady Doctor," and several musical numbers. The latter will be given by the High School quartette, with Principal McCloy as leader. The prices are to be 15 and 25 cents.

GREAT SPIRIT TOO SLOW, ENDS LIFE

CHICAGO, March 11.—The great spirit of the late Senator George F. Hoar, who died yesterday at the age of 82, was too slow to meet the requirements of the times, and he died in the middle of his life.

The old and venerable statesman had been a leader in the Senate, and now he is gone. He was a man of great ability and a good man. He will be missed by all who knew him. His death is a loss to the country, and it is a sad day for us all.

He was a man of great character and a good man. He will be missed by all who knew him. His death is a loss to the country, and it is a sad day for us all.

WHEN BEARDS WERE BANNED

The Weather of One Resorted to Violence to Protect Himself.

In the early part of the century, a series of bandits appeared throughout the country, and it was necessary to take steps to protect the public.

One of the most notorious bandits was the "Black Bart" of California, who was captured in 1883.

Another was the "Mad Dog" of New Mexico, who was captured in 1885.

Still another was the "Mad Dog" of Texas, who was captured in 1886.

These bandits were captured by the police, and they were tried and sentenced to prison.

After their release from prison, they were allowed to go free again.

The Northville Record.

Published by NEAL PRINTING CO.

Established 1849

An independent newspaper published every Friday morning by the Neal Printing Co. at Northville, Michigan and entered at the Northville Post Office as Second-class matter.

NORTHVILLE, MICH., MAR. 10, 1916.

NORTHVILLE'S FUTURE.

For the first time in the history of the village of Northville the business men and factory managers have publicly taken a stand on a village issue. Whatever the result of election day next Monday, the bonding together of these men will, they say, go to the future permanence, rather than to great aid for the future of the village. Nothing else can insure so much towards Northville's further progress and prosperity.

That Press-Gazette editor over at Pontiac, has evidently been having a "set-up" with his tooth surgeon. Both the following editorial items appeared in Saturday's issue.

"Some of us expect to wear gold crowns when we get to heaven, but most of us are in such a hurry that we have the dentists put them on."

"Calling a dental office a 'parlor' doesn't make you any easier while you are waiting your turn at the drill!"

The United States submarine K-5 has broken down at sea. Other submersibles are the K-1, the K-2, K-4 and K-5. The next two built should be named the K-reen and the K-lapse.—Detroit News. Afterthoughts.

And the next—Star-Keeper. Also the next after that might be called the K-happy.

Because of the alarming prevalence of female mud dress in Detroit, a condition indicated by a compromise to save it just completed by one of its investigators, the Auditor General etc. Detroit News item.

It is no wonder then that Detroit has three kinds of the mud dress bridle to the most brutal pick in the world and streets to rotting planks to match.

You now will be glad that the probably the mud dress becomes more popular. The mud dress is not that of the mud bath, the mud bath is the mud bath and of course as far as I am concerned is through the offices of their representatives, but carried off in the names of war for chivalry and honor, if you will do it for them.

Some Democratic papers and Claude King to resign from the house leadership. They can't stand King with better qualities.—Politico-Gazette.

But I don't care if he resigns, well I care if he does.

The press and other organizations are stronger as well as the cause of a great deal of a certain kind of much larger power is especially suitable for publication.

Another modern warlike practice that doesn't make a noise in the least like twentieth-century civilization is the dropping of bombs promiscuously around a country and killing off non-combatants.

This "back to the land" movement is assuming serious proportions. A 150 acre farm near Birmingham was sold the other day for $95,000.

If the price of paper keeps on soaring it will soon transpire that nobody except members of the millionaire class can afford to wear ragged clothes.

The rag-bag as a family institution has been nearly extinct of late years, but with rags bringing three cents a pound the r. b. is surely due for reinstatement.

Women do queer things, but we never knew one to tip a waiter all the change on the little silver plate just for the sake of appearances—Detroit Free Press.

Mistress—Are you married? Applicant—No, ma'am, I bumped into a dog.

Mrs. Ada Clutz was a Pontiac visitor Friday.

Mrs. P. G. Kilham was a Pontiac visitor Friday.

Mrs. Mina Parmalee has returned from Detroit.

Mrs. J. A. Deaverneau is numbered among the sick.

There are several new cases of diphtheria in town.

Dr. W. S. Atkinson is ill with pneumonia at her home here.

Mrs. Frank Moss and children were recent South Lyon visitors.

Mr. and Mrs. Perry Austin are the guests of friends near Pontiac.

J. A. Deaverneau and C. J. Grace were Walled Lake callers Saturday.

Miss Anna Taylor and Florence Dickerson spent Thursday in Pontiac.

Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Smith have moved from their farm home to this village.

Mrs. Eva Lare and daughter of Pontiac spent a day recently at Alex Keith's home.

Miss Blanch Wilkins of Detroit has been the guest of her parents, Rev. and Mrs. Abbott.

Mrs. Olive Baker has returned to her home here, after spending the winter in Owosso.

C. G. Parmalee has purchased a lot of N. B. Johns and will erect a summer cottage thereon.

Mr. Wm. Terpene has secured employment in Detroit. Mrs. Terpene will soon leave for that city.

A large audience listened to a very helpful sermon from District Supt Baldwin Sunday night in the M. E. church.

Mr. Sam Dodge will soon be on his way to visit his son, who will be accompanied by Mr. and Mrs. John of Detroit.

COMMUNICTION FROM DR. THOM. B. HENRY.

committee go around and get these same men to sign $100 each for the erection of a good Y. M. C. A. building where you could be entertained and instructed, but I am afraid there would be a stampede for the back door.

"Alleged money from breweries," Detroit News, Feb. 27, 1916.

"I have never received one penny from any brewery, or any other liquor interest, or from any individual representing them and, as the Anti-saloon League has not contributed to our side, I will probably be forced to do as always, pay the bills myself."

It is published by moving picture films that, in the event of the election at the Workingmen's ticket, Northville will be the cesspool of all surrounding country. I resent this, with all the vehemence of possess, and state I believe that no one whose heart is not comparable to the cesspool could possibly have such an idea originate in their conscience.

They then connect this with the prospective business men's association to advertise Northville. In other words, as the people of Michigan and surrounding states to come to the cesspool of Michigan and locate here. Good advertising, isn't it?

We have had to contend, in the past year, with the effects of overindulgence which came from blind pigs and road houses in all surrounding towns and with Plymouth absolutely going wet this year, we stand a fine chance against a repetition of the same if our opponents have their way. Such leniency would not be tolerated under a license here, and those guilty would not dare try it, and the people of Northville know it.

"Forty thousand dollars $40,000 worth of liquor sold in Northville during the year." A careful investigation of the figures obtained from reliable sources total less than $10,000 and that includes what was purchased from the drug stores by my "dry" friends for "medicinal" and "sacramental" purposes. Some guesser!

Bulletin No. 2 is rather a hard crack for my opponent, as the alleged selling "to minors," "after hours" etc. must have been last year when Northville had a dry president, a dry council, and a dry marshal, or this year when the majority of the council is dry. Why was this permitted if, as alleged, the officials can stop it? We tried to stop it to the extent of offering a reward of $50 for conviction evidence and adding another $50 to it without success.

The accusation of the inability of Northville officials is stupid as it does not bring a hooligan from another state. Having an appeal of the sentiment of the people of the surrounding communities to tell the people of Northville why they should not drink.

If I wanted a contract drawn up I should hardly call for a former to do it, but would probably apply to someone who knew about that kind of business. The man needs no more lawyers and no one needs to pay for their services in the first place.

Confirmed Testimony

The Kind Northville Readers Cannot Doubt.

Doan's Kidney Pills have stood the test.

The test of time—the hardest test of all.

Thousands gratefully testify.

To quick relief—to lasting results Northville readers can no longer doubt the evidence.

It's convincing testimony—twice-told and well confirmed.

Northville readers should profit by these experiences.

Mrs. H. Krug, 526, Ashley St., Ann Arbor, Mich., says: "I have found Doan's Kidney Pills to be an excellent tonic for kidneys. They brought me prompt relief from pain in my back, regulated the passages of the kidney secretions and corrected all other symptoms of kidney complaint. Physicians' medicine never brought me as much relief as Doan's Kidney Pills. It is a pleasure for me to endorse them."

Doan's Made a Cure After a Lapse of Nearly Three Years. Mrs. Krug said: "I have had no occasion to use Doan's Kidney Pills of any other form next Tuesday night."

SUPPLEMENT TO THE NORTHVILLE RECORD.

VOL. XLVI. NO. 33.

THE RECORD : NORTHVILLE, MICH., FRIDAY, MARCH 10, 1916.

James Slocum had a communication in a recent issue of the Pontiac Press-Gazette, relative to the published items of the sale of farm property in the southern part of the county. He says that in many instances sales are reported to have been made at fabulous prices, when the facts are that the land brought much less, and he complains that these statements are proving harmful to both property owners and real estate dealers.—Holly Herald

WHERE THERE'S A WILL

A Detective Story Wherein the Mystery of the Conrad Murder is Unravelled.

SYNOPSIS

Gordon, a newspaper reporter, is awakened by a telephone summons to visit the residence of Anthony Conrad, a retired banker, who has been found dead on his couch.

Suspicion points to Gustav Conrad, his nephew, with whom he had quarreled the night before, and who to all appearances tried to commit suicide after killing his uncle.

Instantly the door he had left filled with another figure—that of a tall man, little under six feet, brown-haired, and wearing a brown mustache, expensively if somewhat flashily dressed. Johnson turned, as he entered and nodded.

"Hello, Mallet," he remarked. George Mallet returned the salutation curtly, entered the room, and came directly across to the bed, where he paused and stood looking down at the silent figure of his cousin.

He was slightly pale, but cool and that completely controlled. Presently, with a shake of the head, he turned away.

"Poor old Gus," he said. "Who'd have thought he'd have ended up like this?"

"When did you see your cousin last?" inquired Bryce.

"Day before yesterday," said Mallet. "Say, officer, if you don't mind, let's go into another room. I'm not very ready this morning after my supper last night."

The lot of us returned to the front room of the suite and found that Sommers was just ringing from the telephone, and as we seated ourselves he went back to his patient's side.

"Were you not comp'ny Conrad frien'ly?" asked the reporter, as he settled himself.

"Gustav?" repeated Mallet. "We were—er—on good terms. Go off to my room or my place of business. I didn't stay here, however, to my knowledge, on that particular and not approve of me."

"What did you do when you met first?" asked the reporter.

Mallet looked around hesitated a moment. "It's one of the many secrets of life," he said, "and I can't tell you."

"I'll be back in ten minutes," he said. "Don't be afraid."

Mallet's attitude showed deep concern.

As you can see, I am sorry to inform you that in our present position there's nothing on me. When they call and tell me the news, after I've had time to think it over, I'll know what to do. I'll do my best to help him out."

"I'll be back this afternoon," he said.

"I'll be back this afternoon," he said.

"Yes. Some trouble about a gun he was going with."

"Not Mr. Linton?" cried Mallet.

"Don't know her name," said Johnson. "They had a run-in about it last night. But I guess you weren't in on the row, right? I just wanted to tell you. What about the girl?"

"I rather say not Johnson," Mallet responded, after a moment's consideration. "She's a fine girl. Gus was very fond of her. So was I once. She turned a cold shoulder to my way. She was going to marry Gus. She's old John Burton's daughter. I know that, but I didn't know that he and Gus had come to a show-down about it. Does Marian know what has happened?"

"Burton of the Fourth National Bank?"

"Yes."

"What did your uncle have against her?" Burton's all right."

"It was against Burton that he held his grudge," said Mallet. "In the old days they were business enemies. Uncle Anthony never forgave a grudge, as I ought to know. He disliked the girl because Burton was her father. I know that, but I didn't know that he and Gus had come to a show-down about it. Does Marian know what has happened?"

"Mrs. Porter telephoned to her. I believe," I informed.

"It'll break her all up. She thought an awful lot of Gus," said Mallet. "Do you want to see your uncle's body?" proffered Johnson.

"Eh?"

Mallet started.

"Good Lord, no!" he went on. "If you chaps are done with me, I think I'll go talk to Porter."

He half rose.

"There'll be a lot of things to arrange while Gus is in the hospital or if he should die," he continued.

"Probably," rejoined Johnson. "By the way, Bryce, what did you do with that will?"

"Put it back in the drawer," replied the inspector.

"Let's take a look at it," suggested the detective. "Since we know Conrad threatened to change it, we ought to find out if he did. We'll examine it while Mr. Mallet is here."

Bryce took the will from the drawer, opened it, and spread it upon the top of the desk.

"Ors and all we crowded about it and ran through its lines. I think they surprised us all, for they were not what we had been led to expect.

"It is my desire that my nephew Gustav shall receive from my estate the sum of five thousand dollars, and that my beloved nephew George shall have all of the balance of my property, personal and real, which shall remain after this former bequest of five thousand dollars is paid.

It is my further desire that my nephew shall retain in his employ all of my former servants, and give to them such sums as he may deem fitting as remembrances from their old master. This is my last will-and testament, given in my sang mind, and revokes and takes the place of anything heretofore written or in any way purporting to be my will.

Death seized me, his jaw hanging.

"Gosh!" he said to Bryce, and swayed on foot. "I guess we know it was George who killed himself after doing the old man. This drawer was open when I did it this morning, the last time I had this out to show to Porter. I thought it funny to now. I guess I'm wise. After this I'll strangle that old boy, he came out and looked at the will, and I'll be home just in time to have two lots of may be some months since this is the will Porter and us will witness."

As you can see, he said, he's right in this case, and the will is already against him, but he couldn't stand up under the double shock. It would be hence to do things like that and then find a Jones like this played on him by fate. Guess he thought a lead pull was the easiest way out."

Mallet had picked up the will dropped on the corner of the desk, and was running through the thing again. Now Bryce ceased speaking, he stood up, folded the paper and, stooping, replaced it in the drawer.

"Why has Gus—no, dies, I seem to be the chief hen," he remarked as he straightened and began drawing on his gloves. "As I reported before, if I can be of no further service, I will be gone. I expect a busy day at my office and I am late now. You can find me there at any time or at my room. My man can communicate with me if I am out. I shall inform the Porters that they are to stay on, and von or any one else can call upon me for anything needed for Gus's comfort, or for any information I can furnish. Now if that's all—"

"That's all," said Johnson gruffly. "Good morning, gentlemen."

George Mallet walked out, stepped into his waiting motor and was gone. Johnson sat down and lighted another cigar.

"Well, what do you think of 'em?" he inquired. "Worst of 'em is the man's telling the truth. I was taking Dean's tip and tiv'n him out to see if I could get a raise out of him. He didn't know nothing! I wish to hell he did!"

"Oh, it's a clear case enough, re joined Bryce. "The chap here went crazy over the row and his fear that the old man would cut him off, and took a chance. Don't see how he figured on getting away with it, but sometimes a fellow like that don't look that far ahead. Then, when he realized what he'd done, and found the will was already against him, he blew up and took the shortest road out. Well, what are we going to do now?"

"There doesn't seem to be much left to do," said Johnson. "You can go down and make your report, and I'll stick until the coroner gets here. Not but what his verdict is all ready for him now."

"Going?" suggested Jimmy, reaching for his hat on the desk.

I shook my head. "I want to see the girl," I explained.

"Girl? Oh, Miss Burton? What do you expect to get from her?"

"Human interest, if nothing else."

I returned.

"But do you think she'll come?" purred Jimmy. "You're more of a ladies' man than I. Will a girl like that come here?"

"She will if she really loved Gus Conrad," I began, glanced out of the window and then back at Jimmy. "Furthermore, old man, if I'm not wrong, she is coming now."

An electric brougham had just turned into the drive from the street and was rapidly nearing the house. Dean followed my eyes and nodded agreement.

"Guess I'll stick around," he decided, and walked closer to the window for a better view.

The brougham stopped beside the police car, and from it there descended two women, one evidently a maid, the other, as developed a few minutes later, Marian Burton herself.

"I don't care what people say. They may rave about democracy and the equality of men, but there is something in blood, be it animal or human which tells

"You can tell the thoroughbred at a glance, and you will meet men and women who impress you in the same subtle way. You can't tell what it is, but it is there, more or less—that indefinable something which speaks of breeding."

I noticed it in the woman who followed the maid from the electric motor that day. In every line of her she spoke of fine-drawn blood. There was something in the way she stepped down, something in the pallid control of the sensitive face, which be spoke the woman of culture and refinement, evolved from carefully selected forebears.

As I stood beside Dean, I quite agreed with his muttered expression: "Gad, I don't wonder Gustav couldn't make up his mind to give up—that!"

The two women turned to the porch steps and came rapidly up them. A moment later I heard the sound of Mrs. Porter's voice, and then the door opened and admitted them to the room where we were.

Bryce and Johnson had risen and cheered, even as had Dean and I, so that the girl faced a battery of eyes as she passed the door. She gave us one glance and turned to Mrs. Porter.

"The time is here quietly," as she entered. "I knew then that she truly loved the man he first came to. Truly loved the man he first came to. Truly loved the man he first came to."

There was that air of poise and quiet trim, half-halfly maternal, about her. Low and quiet intonation which said more than words. "He is mine and I am his."

Almost without notice she slipped into the room, a slender figure in her colored negligee of lace, restraining her maid by a silent gesture, and followed Mrs. Porter through the door.

Instantly Dean darted in pursuit. Johnson and I followed, so that we came to the door of young Conrad's apartment as the girl reached the bed.

She paused and seemed to listen. Clear and distinct from the drive came the clang of the ambulance going.

Marian Burton lifted her hands to her throat and sank back in her chair. Through the windows a long, white car, appeared, the red roses blushing forth from its side.

It drew up and paused beside the "playroom" of the police.

The phone on the desk began to ring. Bryce put out a hand and took it up, spoke into it and turned to the girl.

"Grace, you've wanted on the phone," she whispered. "Oh, my boy!"

I took Dean by the arm and answered. A voice, rich, deep, vibrant of purpose, smiled back to me over the wire.

"Gordon?"

I recognized the voice of Semi Dual!

CHAPTER III
The Stars Speak.

"Yes, I responded.

"Suddenly I felt again that strange thrill which always came to me when I found myself in a tangle of human life. The subconscious question rose, on the instant and demanded what was to happen now."

"How did he know I was here? Why was he calling me over Conrad's wire?"

"I got you thought this morning. He was sneaking, and called up Smithson. He told me all he knew which was enough for a start. Now listen closely. Is there a doctor there?"

"Yes—Sommers," I gasped.

"Tell him that before he leaves he must call me up. Give him my secret number and have him call—be sure he does. Then, my friend, before you do anything else in this matter, come to me. Never mind Smithson—he understands."

"I put the receiver back on the hook, fumbling it into its catch. I felt in that instant as though all the room were going slowly around."

"Only I became conscious that men from the ambulance were passing through the room with a stretcher; that Marian Burton had risen and was standing pale and silent, watching; that Bryce and Johnson had drawn aside and were whispering together."

"Where you going?" he asked.

"To get an interview," I responded.

"I ran out and dropped off."

Johnson seized Dean and me by the arm and dragged us away.

"Ain't you guys got any feelin's at all?" he said gruffly. "I thought maybe I ought to hear what she had to say, but I don't want to now."

"Johnson" was human after all.

We went back to the other room where Bryce was talking to the maid and endeavoring to understand her Gaelic-English, more to kill time than for information, I suspected.

Presently Miss Burton, escorted by Sommers, came to the door of the room. The maid rose, but her mistress waved her to resume her seat, stood for a moment, and then addressed Johnson and Bryce.

"Dr. Sommers tells me that it is your belief that Mr. Conrad is a murderer and a suicide."

She spoke quietly enough, but I noticed that her hands clenched and unclenched as she talked.

Johnson, evidently ill at ease, replied: "The evidence certainly points that way, miss. Won't you sit down?"

She sank upon the edge of the chair. "I do not particularly care how your evidence points," she rejoined.

"I have known Mr. Gustav Conrad as a boy and girl, man and woman, for a long time, and I want to tell you now—before you go any further in this matter—that he is not capable of such a deed."

"I'd like to think you're right, miss," said Johnson. "Really I would. But you see, it's like this: Mr. Conrad quarreled with his uncle, an' the old man made threats about his money. That was last night. This mornin' the uncle is dead, an' Mr. Conrad is half-dressed on a bed, with a gun in his hand, shinin' on empty cartridge and four full ones, and a wound in his head."

"Which proves beyond doubt that he killed his uncle?" flashed the woman. "How? Could not a thief have entered and done these things and then the door opened and admitted them to the room where we were."

"You see," declared Johnson slowly. "Porter says the gun is Mr. Conrad's."

"Oh?"

Marian Burton lit her lips over the cigarette she rose and began to pace the room, her self-control visibly breaking. She lifted her hands and shook them clenched before her body.

"I won't help it. Gus never did it. I am a woman and I feel it."

There was that air of poise and quiet trim, half-halfly maternal, about her. Low and quiet intonation which said more than words.

"She was upon Johnson."

"Annie, a detective," she cried. "Why don't you look below the surface, do you always take things at their face value? You may be mistaken. I'll tell you, you are. Oh, for God's sake, hurt—hurt—hurt me! I'll be there when you are through," she persisted. "Don't let me strike and hit him. I'll tell you that something is in his heart which he doesn't know."

"I shall go to the hospital," she announced.

"Nonsense," he protested. "I'll let you know everything at once."

"I will be there when you are through," she persisted. "Don't let me strike and hit him. I'll tell you that something is in his heart which he doesn't know."

"I'll do it—yes, sir, I'll do it," he stammered at length and hung up.

"Most remarkable," he remarked as he turned toward the door. "Come, Marian, child, you had better go home now."

"I shall go to the hospital," she announced.

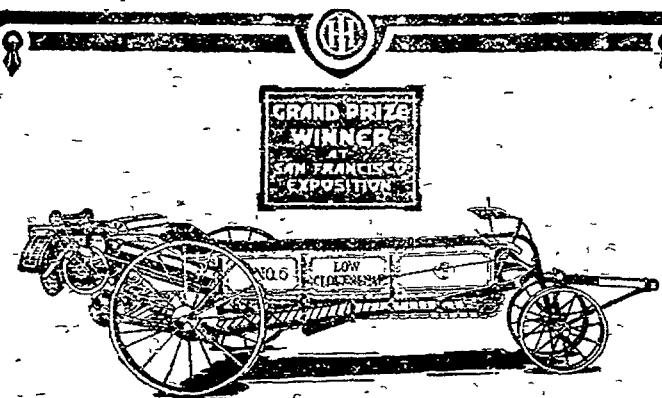

"Nonsense," he protested. "I'll let you know everything at once."

"I will be there when you are through," she persisted.

The Low Cloverleaf Gives the Manure Two Healthy Beatings

WE used to think that if we threw manure onto the ground any old way and plowed it under, we were doing a good job. But now we know that won't do. To do any real good, the manure must be broken up into small pieces and spread evenly.

The Low Cloverleaf spreader is the one that does this work best. It gives the manure two healthy beatings, one with the regular beater, the other with the wide spread disks. When the manure reaches the ground in that condition your soil gets all the good there is in it, and gets it quickly. The Low Cloverleaf is one spreader it will pay you to see before you buy. See the local dealer who has one set up for you to look at.

From Our Exchanges.

A trip through the country makes one wonder what new malady has struck us. Different colored auction bills make the surrounding landscape look like a crazy quilt—South Lyon Herald.

As an example of the distance which people traverse to take treatment at the Mineral Bath House, we wish to mention the fact that William Blair of Minneapolis is one of those now registered at the bath house—Ypsilanti Record.

The "absent voters" law needs only one addition to make it the champion "bone head" play of the last legislature—it should contain a clause giving the administrators of estates the right to put in a vote for the deceased.—Holly Herald.

Saloon's a Saloon.

There seems to be an attempt on the part of the wet forces to cloud the issue before us by insisting that they are fighting for a "Hotel" and not a "Saloon." They say, "Mr. Dry Man, Call Things by Their Honest Name."

We are not quibbling about terms. If our friends of the opposition prefer to use the word "Hotel" instead of "Saloon" that is their privilege. But the Voter will remember that the Supreme Court has decided that any place where intoxicating liquors are sold under a retail license is a "saloon," whether it be in connection with a "Hotel" or not.

And the Voter will further remember that the proposed "Hotel" which our friends are to secure for us, to be granted a "Hotel" for when a "Saloon" becomes a must be secured.

In the testimony of those who had had to do with the regulation of saloons that those conducted in connection with hotels are more difficult to control, and it is more easy to procure liquor illegally at a hotel bar than from a straight pull-and-pull along.

Bar friends, therefore, are not advocating the return of the Saloon—but something worse—a Hotel with a bar. They are attempting to "put a plank ribbon around the neck of a drunk and call it a kitten."
