ANNUAL MEETING AND BANQUET

OF THE LOCAL PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH SOCIETY.

WAS GREAT SUCCESS BOTH SOCIALLY AND FINANCIALLY.

The annual meeting and banquet of the Presbyterian church and society Wednesday evening was one of the most pleasing and satisfactory that organization has held for many years, both as a social occasion and an opportunity for consideration of the general welfare of the local church. A delightful spirit of good will, harmony and optimism pervaded the entire meeting from beginning to end, an atmosphere fully justified by the reports of the various departments of the church work. The membership of the society was well represented, more than 200 persons partaking of the delicious supper served in the dining room of the building.

At the annual business meeting following the supper, it was voted to increase the number of trustees from five to seven, and the following gentlemen were unanimously and enthusiastically chosen: To succeed themselves, C. A. Ponsford and W. W. Thayer, for 3 years; to fill an unexpired term of two years, T. E. Murdoch, for two year term, W. E. Scott; for three year term, E. H. Lapham. The trustees whose terms had not expired are B. A. Wheeler and C. F. Yerkes.

The financial reports showed that the budget of $2,000 for the coming year has been successfully provided for. The deficits in the different departments were shown to be comparatively small, and some of them had been reduced since the tabulation of the reports. Two small balances on the wrong side were made good by the audience as soon as announced.

The membership of the church was reported as 249, 36 of whom are non-residents. Seventeen have been received during the year, and five removed by death.

The Sunday school enrollment was 210, with an average attendance of 115.

The banner attendance average is held by the Christian Endeavor—22, out of an enrollment of 23. The total amount raised for local expenses during the past year was $2,509.76, and for benevolences $1,142.80.

Since the recent disastrous fires here and at Plymouth, the insurance on the church property has been prudently raised to $12,000.

The church enters the new fiscal year with grateful hearts and renewed enthusiasm.

NEWS FROM OHIO

TERRIBLE RAILROAD ACCIDENT OCCURS AT AMHERST OHIO

CLEVELAND Investigation into the wreck of three New York Central trains at Amherst last Wednesday, which took the toll of at least 28 lives, the exact number may never be known and brought injury to more than 100 others, several of whom probably will not recover, is under way. Representative of the state of Ohio, and of the federal government were told by officials of the New York Central lines that the railroad officials would not conduct a separate formal inquiry on their own part. They asserted the best interest of all concerned would be best served by one investigation on the part of the representatives of the Ohio utilities commission and of the interstate commerce commission. The railroad officials would give every help, they said, to make the investigation complete and the railroad would abide by the findings of these bodies whatever they are.

Heavy fog hung three New York Central trains, one of them the Twentieth Century Limited, into a fatal wreck at 3:15 o'clock last Wednesday at Amherst. Passenger train No. 80, eastbound, was traveling in two sections. The first section was stopped at Amherst by a signal. The second section should have stopped also, but for some unexplained reason, it plunged ahead, crashing into the first section. A few minutes later the Twentieth Century Limited, eastbound, plowed into the wreckage. Three cars on No. 80 were demolished. The Twentieth Century was derailed, but none of its passengers were seriously hurt. One engine, which remained on the track, managed to clear and hauled a carload of dead and injured to Elms, five miles distant.

FLINT WOMAN SUICIDE
While her husband was away on the electric board at Lenox, Mrs. William N. Langel herself to a bed post with the aid of a hand strap. She had been suffering from a mental ailment for four years. Her husband found her body when he came home at night.

"BUY-IN-TOLEDO" WEEK ADVERTISES TOLEDO GOODS

This week the merchants, manufacturers, and others are joining in a campaign to boost the sale of made-in-Toledo products. More than 100 downtown merchants have donated window space for the display of Toledo-made goods. The Jovians donated the electric sign with one-half the cost of maintenance for one year. The Willys-Overland Co. has been especially active in the preparations of plans. The publicity work is complete in every detail, including artistic posters, window hangers, street car advertising and even 5,000 door knob hangers hung on the doors of residences by Boy Scouts.

STREET CARS STOP RUNNING IN TOLEDO DUE TO CONTROVERSY OVER UNION BUTTON

All Toledoans who were not fortunate enough to own machines have been forced to walk and the citizens have been greatly inconvenienced due to the tie-up of the street car lines resulting from the Railway and Light Company's refusal to recognize the buttons, which the newly organized street car men's union has adopted as their official emblem. The Union men reported for work last week Tuesday and were refused their jobs unless they took off the union button, so a strike was called and all cars placed in the barns and kept there awaiting settlement of the issue between the organized labor and the Traction company. Jitney drivers, carrying a harvest and motor trucks of all descriptions were turned into carriers for the throngs of people who otherwise must walk to and from the stores and factories.

The factory will be close to the tracks of the New York Central Lines and the Toledo Terminal railroad, and is one of numerous manufacturing sites along the two belt lines of the East Side.

STATE AGRICULTURAL BOARD OFFERS $10 PRIZE FOR SONG

TESTS FOR DIAMONDS

Object Viewed Through Genuine Stone Will Give Only One Image

This is an age of imitations, particularly of gems, and the amount of imitation precious stones on the market is enormous. I am told by Mr. W. A. Gill, the well-known jeweler, "and the assertion is continually made by dealers in these commodities that it would require the services of an expert to determine the real from the false. With regard to diamonds, the belief is general that this is entirely true, but never did the general public entertain a greater error."

"There are certain simple tests to which any one may submit a stone alleged to be a genuine diamond and determine almost instantly the truth or falsity of the claim made for it. A real diamond will not be acted on by acids or alkalis in the least, and may be placed in a liquid containing these substances without injury to it. There are other simpler and easier tests, however, which require nothing in the way of testing materials that a person cannot find in any household without the need of a visit to the druggist. These, too, are practically infallible, for I have never heard of an imitation that would answer fully to them."

"In the first just take a small piece of silk and rub the alleged diamond vigorously for a moment, and it will acquire a sufficient amount of positive electricity to attract bits of wool, cotton or paper, exactly as a magnet will attract particles of metal."

"In the second test place the diamond in a position where it is exposed to the sun's rays for a while, and then remove it to a dark room. If the diamond is genuine it will glow in the darkness with a distinct phosphorescent quality, but if it is imitation it will have no phosphorescent qualities whatever. It will look in the darkness just like a piece of glass."

"The third test is undoubtedly the best of the three. A diamond has only single refraction, that is, it gives out a single image of any object viewed through it. When the diamond is held before a candle or bright light but the one light will be visible to the eye through the substance. An imitation diamond no matter how cunningly it has been contrived, will give a myriad of images, just like a piece of cut glass."—St. Louis Globe Democrat

Sometimes a kindly good man gets on your nerves harder than one whose virtues can't be seen with a magnifying glass.

It's all right for a man to wake up in the morning fresh as a daisy, but it isn't right to let his freshness get too fresh.

The use of the magnifying glass is to show us that troubles are not always in proportion to their size.

THE STREET COMMISSIONER-SHIP.

In retiring from the office of street commissioner, Matt Green may have the satisfaction of knowing that he has made the best commissioner the village has ever had. He is a spinster citizen and has made a first class record. His successor, Mark Seely, has had considerable experience in road building and ought to make a good official. If he does as well as his predecessor, the public can ask nothing more.

Amelia Barr, the famous and aged English novelist, says women's fashions were never so ugly as now in all the years she can remember—and she is an octogenarian. Nobody can dispute Mrs. Barr's assertion if judgement is based on the illustrations in the average advertising pages of the daily papers, but who ever saw any women who really looked like these painful representations. And for the first time in sartorial history—of the modern variety at least—the men are also caricatured to the limit by the artists who make the advertising cuts.

J. W. Perkins, Editor of the Northville Record, a 11th floor resident, took over the 12th management of the Northville Record April 1. The Editor of this paper has known Perkins about 20 years and he is a 100% fellow and his many qualifications. He has been a member of the Northville League since 1900 and has been a member of the Northville League since 1900. He is a 100% fellow and his many qualifications. He has been a member of the Northville League since 1900 and has been a member of the Northville League since 1900.

Mary, mother of the 11th floor
brother printer for the good opinion
You're another.

And for another cause for international jealousy and dispute has arisen. The latest census are said to indicate a record over 100 million for the United States. As our streets are so populated and as now the largest city in the world and as such even more so now.

We are a nation that we have discovered a substitute for gasoline.
We've found a nickel and are going to invest it in a street car ride next Sunday—Post-Cazette.

But how do you get one again?

As each day goes by it looks more and more like G. O. P. Roosevelt for president, and it will be just about the best nomination the republicans can put over at that.

Who says there's nothing in a name?
A cemetery at Milan is named "Marble Park," and more than that, Mr. Marble is the man who has charge of it.

The once notorious Cole Younger died a reformed man. Maybe there is still hope for Charles Chaplin.

Farmington Flashes.

Work has begun this week on another well for the village a need which has been greatly felt as the water supply has been insufficient.

B. J. Meyers has sold his house and lot on Grand River Avenue to Mr.
Bour for a consideration of $3,000.
The new owner will take possession
next month.

Mrs. Glenn Green's sister, Ida, from Loomis, is here helping in the care of her mother who has been ill for some time. Her son, James, has been here for several weeks working on the Fendt farm for Louie Fendt.

A few cents invested in the For Sale columns of the Record will sell anything you want to get rid of.

LOCAL.

Mrs. Will White is seriously ill
with erysipelas.

Water bills must be paid on or before next Thursday, April 20.

Mrs. Fred Simons has been experiencing an attack of grip.

Don VanSickle has purchased a Reo
motor truck for use in delivering oil.

The local Presbyterian society has changed the beginning of its fiscal year from Jan. 1 to April 1.

Thomas Shaw is able to come to town again, although he has not entirely regained his normal state of health.

The interior of the M. Brock store owned by W. H. Ambler has been newly decorated, thereby adding much to the appearance of the store.

By the will of the late Mrs. Katherine Yerkes, $500 was given to the Home and Foreign missionary societies of the Presbyterian denomination.

Folks, or at least some folks, will be glad when the last round-up meeting of the Sewing club occurs and a lot of missing and un-missing property is returned.

The Grand Army of the Republic
was first organized fifty years ago last week Thursday, April 6, and the Woman's Relief Corps in the following year.

Dogs on which taxes are not paid must be reported to the Sheriff whose duty is to kill all such unlicensed dogs, for which he, the sheriff (or his deputy) gets $1.00 per head.

Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Tucker of Binghamton, N. Y., are to move to this place within a few weeks to make their home with their son, Ray, who is connected with the Globe Truck Co.
here.

The executive committee of the W.
R. C. will give an Easter Tea at Catherine's Hall Saturday afternoon
April 22. Each corps lady being privileged to bring one guest. A good attendance is hoped for.

The Union of owners of dogs is located in the new 1915 law which requires the Supervisor to collect the tax of two times of making the assessment. The Supervisor furnished has a receipt and tag for each dog.

A. W. Smith, who has been purchasing of the American Bell & Manufacturing Co. and will be installed in the high school building next week. A school will be held in the building since the loss of the other one in the fire.

For some time past a number of Phonograph records have been put on the Phonograph exchange. Probably so that the Bell Telephone people can get another nickel out of Northville people. Waterford is a nice dearer Northville than Plymouth.

About 175 people attended the banquet and initiation of candidates of the O. E. S. last Friday evening.
Thirty-five members of the K. L. W.
Chapter of Pontiac came out in a special car and conducted the afternoon. Eight new members were added to the order. Following the work a banquet was served at 6 o'clock and further work given by the local Chapter in the evening.

A meeting of the N. H. S. alumni officers was held Tuesday evening and committees appointed for the first annual banquet to be held here Friday, June 20. The assessment of twenty-five cent dues has been met by a number of the graduates, thus enrolling them as members of the alumni with the privilege of attending the banquet.
The officers hope that all graduates of the Northville High will enter the organization and thus assure its success.

Northville School Notes.

(By a Pupil)

Fred Neil of the Sixth-grade has left school.

Fifth grade.

grade Friday.

First grade.

Sixth grade Friday.

visited High school.

Ora Neil has returned to the second grade after an absence of two weeks.

Plymouth's new postmaster, Howard
A. Brown, assumed his duties April 1.

Bernice Henry has been absent from the Sixth grade during the past week.

Mrs. Charles Schoutz and Mrs. Ray

Bogart visited the Eighth grade last week.

has been absent for the past two weeks.

Mrs. Bert Stark has been numbered among the sick during the past the Plymouth schools, visited here

grade are busily studying multiplication of fractions.

hard on reviews, getting ready for the county examinations.

er posters and rabbit houses, in preparation for Easter.

school after a three weeks visit with his sister in St. Louis.

Coach McCloy issued a first call for baseball candidates last week. About twenty-five reported for practice on Athletic field.

The sophomore program consisted of readings by Gerald Tait and Don Kyder, a piano solo by Esther Brown and a recitation by Elsie Hemple of the Sixth grade.

The Junior's program last Thursday morning was in memory of the late president Emeritus Angell. It consisted of readings by Marguerite Lafferty, Flora Miller, Dorothy Dubuar and Wendell Miller, and a song by the Third graders.

We are glad for the return of Spring flowers and birds, but most of all, for all the old and new little people who came to Kindergarten last week. On Wednesday morning we were happily surprised when we did not have chairs to accommodate all the newcomers.

Baseball has begun in earnest.
Although it is rather early to make any cash predictions prospects for a winning team are very bright at present. We are depending on Garfield Stimpson and Forrest Wilcox to look after the pitching, Garfield or Stimpson covering second base when not pitching. Lanning looks like the logical candidate for the catching honors. Cole, Buckley and Rene Angell are trying for first base.
The rest of the infield will be taken care of by Miller at shortstop and Clark at third base. In the outfield there is an overflow of talent with Thompson, W. Ryder, Fred and Whipple leading the way. We are very grateful to the citizens of Northville who have made it possible for us to have new suits. This, together with the fact that a trip has been arranged for the last week in May, on which the H. S. teams of Pontiac, Ithaca and St. Louis will be met, has been of great assistance in getting the boys out for regular practice.

His Position.

WHERE THERE'S A WILL

A Detective Story Wherein the Mystery of the Conrad Murder is Unravelled.

SYNOPSIS

Gordon, a newspaper reporter, is awakened by a telephone summons to visit the residence of Anthony Conrad, a retired broker, who has been found dead on his couch.

Suspicion points to Gustav Conrad, his nephew, with whom he had quarreled the night before and who to all appearances tried to commit suicide after killing his uncle.

Physicians find that Gustav has a chance to recover. The will leaves $5,000 to Gustav and the balance of the estate to George Mallet, another nephew.

Not satisfied with the apparent solution of the case, Semi Dual, the old man of mystery, takes a hand in the life of human life.

Dual asks Gordon to go with Johnson of the detective force and search the Conrad premises thoroughly for other evidence.

They find a footprint beneath a window and a finger print on the sill and also secure the will itself, for inspection and comparison with the two nephews' handwritings, which Miss Burton aids in getting.

"It's all right, son," said he. "You can imagine how much faith I've got in this Dual of your man stand to day. But the fact is too much for me. Thirty minutes after I called you this morning he called me and asked me where I'd sent you and what was up. I told him, and he asked for the names. I gave them to him, and in an hour he called me again and told me what he wanted for the day. I kicked. Then he asked me if I wanted a scamp. That got me and I fell for the thing, and here it is."

He tapped the written pages. "He's going to make good, again. But how does he do it? You didn't phone him this morning?"

"No," I said. "I thought I had. But I didn't think about him. I guess."

"That he caught your thoughts?" Smithson asked. "He's a little something in that telepathic stuff. I've noticed that Dual can do a thing like that."

"He told me to say that that was what made him call you up."

"You heard of it, but I always thought it was a fake," said Smithson. "How does he pick up your thoughts out of all the others that are around?"

"It's on the principle of the wireless, telephone, a human mind, sensitive to mind," I began.

"Look out," cautioned Smithson, "you're going to get a headache out of a human life like that. But he noticed it if he'd noticed what I had meant."

"There may be something in it," he said after a moment. "Well, what are you going to do now?"

"I'm going to Dual's. Bryce and Jean are to come there at five o'clock. Probably, I'll be able to send you the answer any time after that. I've got some things I must get to him first."

"Meaning these stuff Sommers left for you at the hospital?"

"That and some samples of handwriting."

"What was in Sommers' left for you?" he wanted to know.

"I don't know, Smithson. I answered. The envelope was sealed and I didn't open it."

"Thank Dual would care if we did now?" he asked. His curiosity was plainly getting the better of him.

I paused and considered a moment. "Not if we were careful of it. I finally decided, and reached for the envelope."

Smithson showed me the letter of papers on his desk and cleared a space, drawing his chair close to the desk.

With a paper knife I slit the top of the cover and reached in. Whatever the contents were they were wrapped in blue paper, and drawing the package out I laid it on the desk.

Turning back the blue wrapper I exposed a couple of folded pads of ordinary surgical gauze, which in turn I unwrapped. Then—

Smithson and I sat in total silence, staring into each other's eyes across the corner of the desk.

Betty sat on the pads lay a signature, a half dozen red-dish, row by rows, and a bit of powder, "decided skin."

CHAPTER VII.

A Study in Handwriting.

Still in silence I began wrapping up the two bits of surgical gauze and folded them back in the blue paper. Then I picked up the envelope and

"What in-time?" gasped Smithson, still looking into my eyes.

I shook my head, thrust the envelope into my pocket, and rose to my feet. I stretched out my hand for my hat.

"I think I had better be going," I observed.

"And for Heaven's sake get the answer in quick!" begged Smithson.

"Well, beat the town to-night. I'll have everything ready but the head and tail."

I nodded and opened the door.

Outside I fairly ran through the local room, plunged at the stairs and out to my waiting cab. Its little clock had been eating up money all afternoon, but I knew now that nobody would be there.

Record was going to kick when the bill came in.

"Uranid, quick!" I called to my driver, and yanked open the door.

We were off. The last lap of my chase lay before me. I was going back to Dual.

At the Urania I gave the chauffeur an order on the office and sent him away.

Then I turned into the great entrance and back to the cages, and presently I was walking from the shaft to the great stairs that led up to the abode of Dual.

I came out on the roof and paused a moment, arrested by the awful beauty of the scene.

The great tower rose in its white purity of outline against the darkened west. Back of it the clouds of the pillar in mighty masses, from which came now and then the glow of the thunder.

Yet where I stood all was calm, a quiet with the strange hush which precedes the storm. The flower and shrubs stood straight and silent in the gathering gloom.

But there was something in the air, a tense electric something which seemed to speak of coming terror, of a horizon of earth and air, which seemed to speak of coming disaster.

A head of that would happen when the fury of the elements was let loose. These piling clouds seemed to me almost like the cohorts of vengeance gathering to overwhelm the guilty.

And I was come to the place where justice was to be done and that vengeance once struck.

Minute by minute as the wheel turned the setting for the gun and was evolved. Yonder was no longer the tower of a modern skyscraper, but an ancient temple of justice, in which I was to behold the sword of that justice fall.

I crossed the annunciator-plate and the bells came thrilling across the dusk.

I passed up the path and as I reached the little dial I glanced again at its circle. The sharp-pointed spear of steel with which Dual had replaced its former mark to forget cast its shadow across the carved surface.

It stood like a metal finger, pointing to the darkening sky.

The door of the tower stood ajar and I entered. The reception-room of deserted and I went on to the door of the inner room. As I neared it, it opened and Semi Dual himself waved me into the room.

I glanced at him in surprise. He had cast off the suit he had been wearing in the morning and now appeared clad from neck to ankles in a long loose gown of twany linen, with short sleeves ending at the elbows, below which his strong, sinewy arms were bare.

He looked like some "savant" of the Continent at work in his laboratory or clinic, and as I felt my gaze sweep beyond him my surprise grew apace. The room itself carried out the appearance of Dual.

It had been completely changed since I left it at noon. Now it might well have passed for the work-room of some wealthy dabbler in the material sciences.

In one end, with its back to the windows, stood a huge camera, its bull's eye trained upon the room, a large black drape hanging to its tripod. Beside it on a table was a flash-light apparatus and an extra holder.

The great desk had been cleared of books and papers, and its top covered with a slab of thick glass, upon which was arranged a series of bottles of reagents, test tubes in racks, graduated pipettes and droppers, an alcohol lamp, some strips and squares of metal, a test tube holder, and numerous other articles commonly found in the laboratory of a chemical work-shop.

The little table, which I had seen through the wall, and which had been in the room today.

apparatus, prominent among which was a large metal plate and some rubber tubing and rings some inch and a half in diameter.

To add to the ensemble, if anything were needed, Dual was smoking a cigarette, a thing he seldom did.

He noted my glance of surprise with a smile of amusement; then, as he did so often, answered the unvoiced question in my mind: "Why is all this?"

He waved his hand about the room. "Because, Gordon, from now on practically all elements of the higher laws disappear from the case. From now on we deal with hard, cold, material facts, proven truths of science. The higher laws which serve to point the trail have served their purpose, and from now on until justice strikes material proof alone is required."

He crossed and sat down at his desk.

"Let me see what you have brought," he said.

I handed him the note-book from Conrad's pocket, the sealed note from Mallet, and the package from the hospital. Over the latter he raised an interrogative brow.

"Smithson wanted to see what was in it. I opened it," I explained.

Dual smiled.

"Was Smithson satisfied?" he inquired.

"He was only more mystified, and so was I," I answered.

"You'll understand later," said Semi, "and so will Smithson. Now, suppose you tell me what you have done since you left here. Bryce and Johnson and Mallet will be here after a bit, and I want your story first."

"Mallet?" I exclaimed. "Is Mallet coming here?"

"Bryce and Johnson are bringing him here," declared Semi. "Go on with your story."

As in the morning, so now I spoke to his concentrated mind.

I told it all, of the finding of the footprints and the smudge on the wall, of the spot of white on the desk and the finger print on the wall; of my conversation with Marian Burton and what she had said of Mallet and her writing of the note to him; of my trip down town, and the sending of the messenger, and even my going to Smithson.

At the end Dual nodded and opened his eyes.

"How high above the ground was the window through which the messenger entered?" he wanted to know.

"I should judge about five feet," I replied.

Again my friend nodded, reached out and picked up the little red note-book which Porter had given to me. Opening it, he put out his hand.

"Give me the magnifying glass," he required.

I passed it over and he bent above the written page of the book, scanning the writing through the glass.

As he bent that side of his face next to me was in shadow. It was as if I looked at his silhouette against the light from the great windows.

I sat and smoked and watched his pure outline—the strong, high brow, the eyes, deep set and fathomless of purpose, the well shaped nose, and the firm line of the mouth and chin.

Purpose, concentration, knowledge, spoke from every line of it as he bent above the pages of the book.

Presently he put it aside and took up the envelope Mallet had addressed to Mrs. Burton, opened it, and drew out its contents and spread the paper before him upon the glass slab.

Once more he raised the lens up, tracing it over the lines passing now and then to make a notation on the margin, the going on. And I who had seen him thus before, knew that from the lines traced by the fingers of Mallet, he was reading the character of the man's soul.

I had seen some wonderful proofs of his ability as a chirographer. I had known him to allege that a man was a criminal upon such proof alone, and then support the claim by material evidence.

Now I sat wondering what secrets he was wresting from the written words.

Presently he laid aside the glass and turned to me.

"Names," said he, "are wonderful things. Here we have the written signatures of two men, related by blood, showing largely the same characteristics in more or less degree, and yet each with its subtle difference, which stamps it with the individuality of the man who wrote it."

"Each one of them consists of letters, those little symbols by which we express our thoughts or ourselves. And yet each one of us, as he writes the same lines and curves fastens upon them some portion of himself. High makes them take a distinct personal quality and speaks of their origin."

"Before Bryce and Johnson come here with Mallet, let us see what these two men's writing have to say of them. Here," he picked up the little red book—"is the personal writing of Gustav Conrad. His name appears on the first page. It will be interesting to see what it says."

I made no answer, but sat and watched as he took up the book and turned the page to the first. He looked at the writing for a moment, then he said:

"The deep tones of his voice caught a thrill in me, and swept me out of myself."

good health of body and mind.

"Aside from that there is one pre-dominating characteristic which runs not only through the signature but through all the notations in the book. It is that the top of the 'a' and the top of the 'o' are seldom if ever completely closed. At times they appear so to the naked eye, but under the glass there is a gap."

"Furthermore, and with a marked bearing in this case, the loops of the letters which drop below the line, such as the 'g' or 'f' or 'y' are usually long. Now, a person who fails to close his letters at the top in this fashion is a person of generous proclivities, free of speech, mind and judgement, usually willing to forgive the faults of others, and slow to condemn."

"Found together with the long lower loops, it would denote an individual with a love for the highest kind. Taken together with the general strength of the writing, it would denote a man of a high moral tone and type."

"On the other hand," he laid down the book and picked up the note-book in this writing is exhibited a difference. Taken at first glance, the writings appear similar, as in fact they are, but with an inherent difference which may make their writers' actions entirely dissimilar in kind. Look at the 'o' in George and the 'a' in Mallet. Both of these barely closed at the top, but there is a difference."

"Where in the former name the letters are open, the downward stroke leaves the upward stroke in a straight line at an acute angle. In this we are considering there is actually the effect of a loop at the top of the up stroke, very slight, but evident under the glass."

"Also, in the tail of the 'g' and of other similar letters, there is a difference in length; those in this writing being proportionately shorter than those in the writing of Conrad. Thus, though similar to the naked eye, these subtle differences mark a condition which make a terrible difference in the histories of these two men, might even lead one of them to heaven and the other one to hell."

"A man who writes as Mallet has written will on the whole, perhaps resemble the other man whose writing we have here, but in all his acts and thoughts there will appear a certain element not apparent in the other. Where the one would be open, free, honest, the other may be expected to be close-mouthed, secretive, dishonest. If the opportunity offers itself, Fond of flattery, in a way, he will try to show material expression. He will wish the tangible thing, rather than the abstract. He will, in all likelihood, be churlish, cold, and cruel in other words, this is the writing of the plausible criminal type."

He paused and then went on:

"Such, Gordon, my friend, are names. They are the actual images of ourselves, partaking of all our higher qualities, expressing in their symbols those things which we are, and being at times the ghosts from a dead past to unveil our real selves and confound us. Every word has a meaning. Every word we speak every thought we think, lives as an atom in the scale of universality, acting as an element for or against us. Every act we do, every cause we set into operation, must under the law produce its effects, which will be good or bad and leave its record on the tables of the universe. Again he paused.

And such study has given me the ability to read these invisible records of things which have been. It is a thing to hold with care. One may do good with it, or harm. But should he do harm he, too, must pay, as all must pay for the wrong he does."

He rose and walked to the great window and looked out.

"See," he said, pointing at the darkened sky, "nature herself is setting a fitting background for the final act in this play of human savagery. A foul crime was committed last night under cover of darkness, and it shall be atoned under a darkened sky. I told you that the sword of justice would be unsheathed. Look!"

A sudden streak of lightning cut across the dark pall of the clouds.

"He has set a flaming sword," said Semi Dual, his voice ringing throughout the room. "Gordon, the sword is unsheathed and the sword shall fall. Life is of God. His to give and His to take away. It is universal and immortal. He who takes it must pay for the taking. Such is the law!"

He stood tall and straight against the light of the windows, and it seemed to me, in the shadows of the room, that his figure grew and spread as he spoke, until it assumed the majesty of something heroic.

The deep tones of his voice caught a thrill in me, and swept me out of myself."

I made no answer, but sat and watched as he took up the book and turned the page to the first. He looked at the writing for a moment, then he said:

G. WASHINGTON RELICS SHOWN

COLLECTION OF MEMENTOES OF FATHER OF COUNTRY HEART TOUCHING DISPLAY

BIG VARIETY OF MATERIAL SHOWN

Infant Robe Worn at Christening Vice With Old Continental Uniform

Washington, D. C.—Among the many interesting objects pertaining to the history of this country, there is probably nothing which touches the hearts of true Americans more quickly than the relics and mementoes of "The Father of His Country." George Washington, many of which are displayed at the old building of the United States National Museum in Washington, says a statement issued by the Smithsonian Institution.

This collection consists of a variety of material gathered from numerous sources. While composed largely of articles of domestic and artistic interest owned by Washington at Mt. Vernon, the collection also includes mementoes of his life in the field during the War of the Revolution, and a number of other miscellaneous relics of greater or less importance.

The most noteworthy objects are: Four pieces of plaster statuary, and a face mask, several portraits and engravings; many pieces of furniture, including Washington's easy chair, table, chairs, mirrors, bedstead and footstool, numerous candelabra, lamps and candlesticks; glass and chinaware and table furnishings, as well as many personal relics. These latter perhaps represent more to the visitor, since they were the individual property of this great statesman and warrior.

There are two interesting costumes worn by Washington. The first is an infant's robe of white brocade silk, lined with old rose China silk, used on the occasion of his christening, and the other a continental army uniform, worn when he received his commission as commander in chief of the continental army at Annapolis, Md., December 23, 1775. Representing as these in times do two such separated periods of the life that tend to remind the observer of the great things which were accomplished by Washington between the times that these diversified costumes were worn. Other articles of wearing apparel comprise a waistcoat and what were known as small clothes or knee breeches.

The contents with pots, pugs and brushes, a chess clock, a glass, field glass, portable writing case and shaving brush, make up the field equipment used by Washington in his campaign. Other relics, including an iron treasure chest and a letter and case, a music case of mahogany, a Chinese tea chest and gold medal commemorating his death besides a number of other miscellaneous articles complete one of the most interesting collections of historical objects in this country.

Since many of the articles relate so pertinently to the home of Washington, a brief mention of his history is here made.

Mount Vernon House, historically the most interesting of American mansions and closely associated with nearly all the objects herein described, was erected in 1743 for Lawrence Washington, the half brother of George, and so named in honor of Admiral Edward Vernon, R. N., under whose command Lawrence Washington had served during the British expedition against Cartagena in 1741. The property passed into the hands of George after the death of Lawrence in 1752 and the house was later improved and enlarged.

"When Mrs. Washington died in 1802, Mount Vernon became in accordance with Washington's will, the property of his nephew, Bushrod Washington who in turn bequeathed it to his nephew, John Augustine Washington, from whom it passed to a son of the same name, and in 1855 was purchased from him by the Mount Vernon Ladies' Association.

By an act of Congress, approved June 20, 1878 the Government purchased a collection of Washington relics from G. W. Lewis and others, the heirs of Mrs. Lawrence Lewis, the adopted daughter of Washington, and the wife of his nephew, Maj. Lawrence Lewis. After the death of Mrs. Washington, in 1802, these objects had passed into the hands of Mrs. Lewis, and on her death in 1852, were received by her heirs, who held them until their purchase by the government in 1878, when they were deposited in the United States Patent Office, where they remained until transferred to the United States National Museum in 1881.

The objects purchased from the Lewis heirs form the greater portion of the Washingtonian collection in the museum, and are designated as belonging to the "Lewis collection." The sources of other Washington relics received by the museum at various times as loans or gifts, are noted on the descriptive labels.
