YERKES WINS IN SUPREME COURT

IMPORTANT DECISION RESPECTING WIDOWS' RIGHTS IN LIFE USE LEGACIES.

CASE IN QUESTION INVOLVES THE ESTATE OF THE LATE DANIEL RODGERS, NORTH AND EAST OF NORTHVILLE.

Attorney C. C. Yerkes won a case in the Mich. Supreme court which will be of more than ordinary interest in all parts of the state: Daniel Rodgers of near this place died a few years ago, and by a will left the life use of all his property to his widow, at her death to be divided equally between the Kalamazoo Baptist college, the Northville Baptist society and the Fenton Baptist home. Attorney Yerkes in the probate court at Pontiac showed that the lands valued at $12,000, was not bringing in an income sufficient to support the widow while the property was sold and proceeds invested there would be enough revenue to properly care for her. The Probate Judge, Rockwell, agreed with Mr. Yerkes, and issued an order of sale. The Kalamazoo college appealed to the circuit court, claiming in order to preserve their rights, the property should be kept intact. Judge Smith of the circuit court held with the college. Mr. Yerkes, for the widow, appealed to the supreme court, claiming that a husband leaving property by life use to the widow has confidence that the wife will make proper use of it and if the real estate cannot be made to support her and the proceeds of a sale otherwise invested will do so, then the rights of the widow to sell such property must be recognized. The supreme court held with Mr. Yerkes and affirmed Judge Rockwell's decision.

The case is attracting considerable attention, because heretofore it has generally been considered that life use of property meant, so far as real estate was concerned, that it should be kept intact for the other heirs. Mr. Yerkes has received a lot of congratulations in his success before Michigan's highest court.

ANNUAL LIBRARY MEETING.

The annual meeting and election of officers of the Ladies Library Association was held in the library last Friday afternoon. The annual reports showed that 135 membership cards had been issued during the year; that the running expenses of the institution were $233; that sixty new books were purchased and seven books donated. A glance at the figures shows how inadequate would be the income to the outgo if the 135 membership fees and fines were all the library had to depend upon, and also explains why it is needful for the ladies to give an entertainment every year to raise money. However, the institution has another source of income, the rentals, so that with careful management the trustees are able to keep up the many expenses of fuel, lights, janitor service, repairs etc. that must be met each year.

The officers elected are Mrs. Katie Harmon, president; Mrs. Sophia Benton, vice president; Mrs. Lucy Filkins, secretary and Mrs. Mary Ambler, treasurer. Two new trustees were chosen, Mrs. Emma Knapp and Mrs. Georgia Yerkes. The remaining members of the board are Maudie, Elizabeth Wheeler, Sarah Purson, Arabella Tunham, Edith Lapham, May Filkins and Della Harmon.

WOMAN'S RELIEF CORPS BENEFIT

A first-class vaudeville opening to the W. R. C. benefit entertainment will be given tonight (Friday) in the Alseum theatre with the Mary Pickford five-reel motion picture of "Hearts Adrift."

This is a really worth-while entertainment for the small sum of 15c and is for an organization which is doing a deserving charitable work.

Vocal selections will be given by Mrs. A. G. Griffin, one of which is by request, "Barbara Fritchie," and Miss Girardin will render two of her specialties, from Scotch Selections of Harry Lauder.

Another attraction will be a reading by Mrs. Moore of Plymouth. This together with the Mary Pickford feels should be sufficient guarantee that the public will get the worth of their money.

No reserved seats on account of there being two shows.

NOVI ROADS.

The poorest lot of highway commissioners in Michigan doubtless live in Novi. For want of a little scraping the worst roads in the state prevail all over the town to the detriment of farm property and the driving public. As a contrast the Farmington and Northville commissioners are keeping their roads up in splendid shape and as a consequence farm values are increasing and farmers are able to use the roads every day in the year. The Novi-Northville road should be one of the best in the state and could be made so with comparative little work or expense. The mile of road from Yerkes cemetery north is also always in a deplorable condition and is badly in need of work. An appeal to the U. S. Rural Delivery department may have to be made before the commissioners or the overseers will move.

FIRST BAND CONCERT.

The Northville city band gave its first concert of the season (from its new band stand) last Saturday evening. It is hoped that the weather may be better this Saturday evening so that a large crowd will be able to enjoy the concert.

W. C. T. U. NOTES.

(By Press Correspondent.) The regular meeting of the W. C. T. U. will be held in the home of Mrs. Doris Bailey, East-Cady street, Monday, June 19, at 2:30 o'clock. All visitors welcome.

COMMENCEMENT TIME IN NORTHVILLE

LOCAL SCHOOLS GRADUATE TWENTY-ONE STUDENTS IN CLASS OF 1916.

Commencement time has once more arrived, with all its pleasant excitements and busy days for teachers, pupils and parents. A class of 21 graduates from our schools this year. The opening number of the various events in connection occurred last Friday evening, when a most successful and delightful banquet was given the Seniors by the Juniors in the parlors of the Presbyterian church. The rooms and tables were prettily decorated in green and white, the colors of the Senior class, the Sophomores acting as waiters. Rev. J. E. Webber gave the invocation and Miss Eunice Warriman and Mrs. A. E. Stanley rendered a delightful duet. Miss Morgan ably filled the position of toastmaster. The guests were welcomed by Wendell Miller, president of the Junior class, Miss Alice Cunningham, the Senior's president, responding. Prof. Isbell of the Detroit schools spoke on "World Building," and Principal B. A. McCloy gave "Reminiscences." A gratifying feature was the fact that all the members of the school board were present. The music was furnished by Messrs. Heeneey and VanDeCar.

Sunday evening next, the baccalaureate sermon will be given in the Presbyterian church by the pastor, Rev. J. E. Webber, all the churches uniting in the services as usual. The next event will be the Eighth grade class day exercises, which will be held in the Alseum theatre, Monday evening, June 19.

The program is in two parts, the first including the president's address, class poem, valedictory, presentation of diplomas, etc., while the second will be a play by the grade entitled "The Birds of Killingworth."

On Wednesday evening the Senior class play will be presented. The two acts depict the past, present and future of the class members.

Graduating exercises for the class of '16 occur Thursday evening. Rev. Roy Hamilton of Ann Arbor will give the address. The middle section of seats in the theatre will be reserved for those presenting invitations at the door.

GOOD ADVICE, ANYWAY.

The following, which has appeared in many of our exchanges originated as an editorial in the Ypsilanti Record. It is certainly applicable wherever needed:

With the advent of warm weather, and good roads, motorists are offered a splendid opportunity to practice the great human satisfying elements of fellowship and good cheer by filling up the back seat. There are hundreds of old people who will not have a motor-ride this summer, unless some good fellow makes it a special order of business. Think of the pleasure a two-hour jaunt in the country would bring to some sweet old lady! But it will not give her half the joy it will you—that big-hearted feeling that always goes with a good turn. If you are planning a trip to some nearby town, reserve one place for some one who seldom goes. If you have to spend ten minutes to help her in and out of the car, so much the better; it will be like the biblical bread cast on the waters. It will bring you big returns. Sit down now and make a list of old folks you are going to give a ride this summer, and we assure you they will be the best trips of the year. If every car owner would follow this suggestion it would make for a community fellowship that would help all and unconsciously increase faith in the religion of the golden rule. Does this appeal to you, Mr. Car Owner? Then Fill Up Your Back Seat!

Olive Grant of Corunna attended the commencement exercises Tuesday evening.

Mr. and Mrs. John Mahoney and baby of Detroit spent last week with Mrs. M's parents, R. M. Hopkins and wife.

F. S. Madison and wife, C. J. Madison, Fred Madison, wife and son of Royal Oak called on the Madison-Perry families Sunday.

Mrs. A. E. Spaulding of Lapeer came Monday evening to attend the commencement exercises, her sister Kathryn Burch, being one of the graduates.

Mrs. James Larcom, who has been very ill with pneumonia, had a slight stroke of paralysis Tuesday, but is, at this writing, recovering nicely from the shock.

Webb Wilson and family and Ed Allen and wife of Detroit, Esther, Lillian, and Dorothy Woodworth of Walled Lake, and James Walsh of Milford were visitors at William Chambers' Sunday.

The Wixom commencement exercises were held Tuesday evening in the church and were witnessed by a large audience. There were four "sweet girl graduates," who were attired in white sailor suits and wore large green ties, (the class colors being white and green), and carried white roses. The address was given by Rev. Hoag of the First Baptist church of Detroit, and was greatly appreciated. The church was beautifully decorated with plants and ferns. The graduates were Inez Bentley, Bertie Pratt, Kathryn Burch and Helen Hammond.

Uncle Joe's Tip to Smokers. One of the things that has made Uncle Joe Cannon famous is the fact that he is an inveterate cigar smoker. During the years that he has been burning the weed he has kept his eyes open and has learned a few things that the average non-professional smoker doesn't know.

"Here's a secret that it took me years to learn," he remarked some time ago. "If you want to get the most out of a cigar, light the wrong end. Any man who smokes cigars to any great extent will tell you that he gets more real enjoyment out of the last inch of his cigar. Now, my plan is to light the last half first and get to the best part of the smoke as soon as you can. Of course, you have to snip off the end that is supposed to go in your mouth before you can light the cigar, but if you try my plan you won't ever go back to the old-fashioned way, unless I'm badly mistaken."

BURNING MONEY.

Twenty years ago there was still a large supply of the paper money issued by the Confederate government during the Civil war. Today not much of it is met with and even the confidence men have to resort to real counterfeits. What has become of it?

There is a man in Atlanta who can answer that question, for he has disposed of millions of it. Through some scores of commercial travelers with whom he was acquainted, he was, for some years, buying up all the Confederate bills that seemed to many too high for what was after all worthless paper. In turn he sold it to the Edison Electric Company for a good price.

For certain small incandescent lamps which the Edison people were manufacturing a certain kind of carbon was needed which could best be obtained from paper made out of sea grass. That kind of paper is not made any more. But the Confederate money was all made out of sea grass paper. From this the carbon for the lamps could be manufactured. Now that the sea grass paper can no longer be had, bamboo is being used instead, but it is not quite so good. New York Sun.

NO. LAW-BREAKER.

Some time ago Representative Hull of Iowa, sent a quantity of free seeds to one of his constituents. On the outside of the envelope were the words, "Penalty for private use $300," which usually appear on franked matter sent in the mails. Shortly after the seeds were sent out a letter came from the recipient saying:

"I don't know what to do about those garden seeds you sent me. I notice it is $300 fine for private use. I don't want to use them for the public. I want to plant them in my private garden. I can't afford to pay $300 for the privilege. Won't you see if you can't fix it so I can use them privately? I am a law-abiding citizen and do not want to commit any crime."

DO YOU KNOW THAT?

The advanced student was out rowing with a possible sailor, and had taken her little sister along, who was exhibiting much fear at the waves.

SUIT THAT HE WAS SAVING Jones' Explanation Probably Did Not Tend to Soothe His Irrate Partner at Whist.

Jones didn't want to play cards; never had wanted to play cards in his life, and said so. But to no purpose. His objections, conscientious and otherwise, were waved on one side by the red faced person who was looking for a partner.

Jones took his seat at the card table. Before they had been playing 15 seconds Jones and the red-faced person took a 40-horsepower dislike for each other. Then the wretched Jones made his first serious mistake. He of the ruddy complexion barked the table.

"Why on earth didn't you follow my lead?" he shouted.

"If there is one man in this world today whose odious example I would not follow in any circumstances you are the man!" retorted Jones, with dignity.

After that the jolly pastime proceeded. Then Jones put his foot in it again, and again the ruddy one barked the table.

"Couldn't you see me calling for a spade or club?" he boomed. "Haven't you got a black suit, man?"

"Yes, I have," said Jones, rising from the table, "and I'm jolly well hanging on to it for your funeral!"

"Pick it Up."

Habits formed in childhood are usually lasting. With that idea as a basis the playground and school authorities in Rochester, have placed signs conspicuously located on the playgrounds on which are displayed these words, "Pick it up." The idea is to have the children clear away the disorder they create during play before they leave the grounds. The plan is reported to have shown immediate results. It has been possible to dispense with the caretaker of the grounds. The boys and girls leave the grounds in perfect condition. No waste paper is left scattered about, no playthings are out of place, all is snuggled up for closing before the crowd of rollicking youngsters leave their playground. It is just as easy to teach children to be orderly as to be disorderly.

WEEK'S CALENDAR

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)

The topic for Sunday morning will be announced from the pulpit.

No preaching services Sunday evening on account of the Baccalaureate sermon in the Presbyterian church.

Children's Day exercises last Sunday were well attended and highly enjoyed.

Don't fail to be at church next Sunday—if you wish to hear one of the pastor's best.

Miss Ida S. Bick, secretary of the Wayne County Sunday School association, will be with us next Sunday and will address the Farther Lights class. Every member should endeavor to be present.

ST. PAUL'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.

(By the Pastor.)

There will be no services next Sunday. All are invited to attend the confirmation exercises at Clarenceville. The service will begin at 10:30 eastern standard or 9:30 Northville time.

METHODIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)

The pastor's sermon theme for the morning service will be: "The Obligation of Brotherhood." The service will be especially for the local order of the Knights of Pythias who attend in a body. The public generally is invited.

Instead of its regular session, the Sunday school will give a Children's Day program at 11:30. In connection with this service, the pastor will administer the sacrament of baptism to children. All parents, wishing this sacrament for their little ones are to bring them to this service.

The Epworth League will hold its devotional meeting at 6 o'clock, with Wilbur Cook, as leader. Topic: "Christian Activity."

There will be no preaching service in the evening that our people may join in the Baccalaureate service for our High School Seniors at the Presbyterian church.

The regular monthly meeting of the W. H. M. S. will be held in the home of Mrs. Edwin White Tuesday afternoon, June 20. At this important meeting will occur the annual election of officers.

Prayer meeting Thursday evening, at 7 o'clock.

Presbyterian Church Notes. (By the Pastor.)

Morning service at 10 o'clock. Subject: "Necessity—the Law of Accomplishment."

Sunday school at the usual hour. Let every one keep the pledge they made last Sunday and plan to be present at the Sunday school.

Christian Endeavor at 6 o'clock.

Evening service at 7 o'clock. The Baccalaureate services of the High school graduating class will be held. The subject will be, "The Conservation of Youth." By the request of the class the Ladies' quartet will furnish the special music. The Methodist and Baptist churches will unite with us in this service.

The program as given by the Sunday school last Sunday evening was of very high character. The large audience who heard it were well paid for coming. A word of commendation is due all who had a share in it.

W. R. C. NOTES. (By Press Correspondent.)

The Department convention of the W. R. C. will be held in Bay City, on June 20 to 22.

Remember the entertainment to be given by the W. R. C. this (Friday) evening, at the Alceum.

A COOL KITCHEN

On ironing day is the result of using an ELECTRIC IRON. You need no fire to work an Electric Iron, and don't have to walk a step—the iron is always on the board, and always hot. With an Electric Iron you can do your ironing in half the time and a hundred times the comfort required by the old-fashioned method—and lots cheaper.

You may use one, if you like, for a couple of weeks. If you don't like it, you don't have to keep it—or pay a cent.

Albert Ryder of the Sixth grade has been neither absent nor tardy during this semester.

Sidney Ware and Rosamond Ruth-ruff of the Third grade have been entertaining the measles during the past week.

The last program for morning exercises was conducted by the Tenth graders, last Thursday. It consisted of a recitation by Irene Hinman, a piano solo by Lydia Clark and a talk by Miss Pinney. After the exercises the base ball letters were given out by Mr. Misenar. The lucky members to receive a large orange "N" were: Eural Clark, captain, Jay Stimpson, Truman Garfield, Ass.
Whipple, Floyd Lanning, J. D. Thomp-

The Jewel Worshiper

BY VARICK VANARDY

Copyright by the Frank A. Munsey Company

"Mr. Delorme," he said when the morning meal was half consumed, "did you ever know or hear of a Wall Street man named McCormack, who was a collector of rare paintings and rarer jewels? He is dead now, but his remarkable collection, and the basement room, down-town which he fitted up to hold it, remains in the memory of a great many people. Did you ever know him?"

"Oh, yes. I knew him quite well, Birge," was the instant reply, given with interest.

"Did you ever see his collection?"

"Several times."

"And have you listened to his discourses upon it?"

"Yes, indeed."

"He was a very unusual man, a very splendid man, loved by everybody who knew him. Did it ever occur to you that he was what one might call a jewel worshiper?"

"Jewel worshiper? I do not remember to have heard the expression until now."

"There are many such, Mr. Delorme—and it is never the intrinsic value of a stone that attracts them. It must be unique, unusual. For example, Mr. McCormack once showed me a large diamond that was perfectly flawless, but which was as yellow as the yellowest topaz. He, considering it priceless because there was no supposed to be another like it in the world."

"Yes, yes. I recall it myself."

"Has it occurred to you, Mr. Delorme, that the five articles which disappeared from your house last night—I do not mention the cameo, because, you know, you never showed it to me, and I did not see it among the presents—has it occurred to you that all five of these lost articles will come under the definition of the word unique?"

"No, Birge, it had not. But what are you getting at?"

"Simply this: That the articles stolen from your house last night were not taken by any common thief or by any person who were to the reception with the deliberate intention of stealing, but that they were lifted by a so-called collector, who could not resist the temptation when it was presented."

"They were stolen by some person who would be least suspected by any of your family or friends, by some body who has a choice collection stored away in a secret room, where he or she, as the case may be, can go to them in secret and in solitude and worship them."

"Birge, you amaze me!"

"I suppose so. It amazes me, too, when I consider the possibilities of it all."

"Who could it be—if your surmise is correct?"

"That question, I think, will be determined in due time."

"Then the thief—one can use no other expression in connection with this affair—was some person among my acquaintances?"

"Endoubtedly. A person whom even the detective on duty there would consider above the necessity of espionage. A person well known to you, to your daughter, to your intimate friends."

"But why—tell me why you have arrived at this decision, Birge?" said Mr. Delorme.

"I have told you. I will add this: Every pearl in that bandeau was a curiosity itself—and each one was of undoubted value. No attempt had been made to match them. There were oval pearls, pear-shaped pearls, and two very remarkable twin pearls among them. The assembling of them in that bandeau created one of the most unique as well as valuable ornaments I have ever seen. Don't you agree with me?"

"Entirely—now that my attention is called to the fact."

"Take that bracelet of wire-gold, with the ruby, that I gave to Lorna. There is nothing else in the world like it, Mr. Delorme. There is no duplicate, and could not be one."

"I quite appreciate that fact, Birge."

"Very well: the diamond and ruby tanzanite, the emerald bracelet, and more than either of those, the lavalliere that was one of Jerry's presents to his bride, all come under the same head, if one should stop to describe them."

"In their way, they are all unusual, curious, and cannot be duplicated. Intrinsically, there were other articles there of greater value which might have been taken as easily—and a thief, seeking for profit only, would have selected them."

"You are undoubtedly right about it, Birge. But, great Scott! Must this affair develop into a scandal?"

"Let us hope not, sir."

"Have you any idea—"

"None whatever as yet, Mr. Delorme. Moreau hastened to inform him that the man was silent for a moment; then, with evident hesitation, he said:

"I spoke to you about the cameo last night. You mentioned it a moment ago. I think I ought to tell you that I received a telegram from Lorna this morning. They must have stopped the train purposely to send it. Here it is. Read it for yourself."

The telegram read:

"Forgot cameo brooch—In drawer of built cabinet in my bedroom. Take care of it. Jerry and I are very happy. We both send oceans and seas of love. Lorna."

Moreau returned the message without comment, but Mr. Delorme said quietly:

"The cameo has disappeared, also, Birge. It was not in the cabinet, and it is of far greater value than all the other things put together, no matter how absurd that statement may sound to you."

Moreau lighted a cigar and pushed his chair away from the table.

"I think it will be recovered," he said.

They left the club together and stood for a moment at the curb, where Mr. Delorme's car was waiting to take him down-town, the artist having declined an invitation to ride with him.

But when the man of many millions was inside the car and prepared to start Moreau bent forward and asked, as if the question had just occurred to him:

"Can you suggest anybody among your acquaintances who might be a jewel worshiper?"

Mr. Delorme shook his head negatively. "No, no," he replied. "I can not. I never heard the expression before."

The artist returned to the club and found a telephone booth, where he had himself connected with police headquarters and then with the detective bureau, whereupon he announced:

"Will you inform Lieutenant Mulholland and Mr. Bunting that Mr. Moreau regrets very much indeed that it will be impossible for him to keep the engagement made with them for twelve o'clock today. Thank you. And say also, please, that Mr. Moreau will try to find one or both of them later in the day."

Contrary to all precedent, Crewe appeared at his place of business shortly after noon that day, and the few who were scattered about at one of the tables looked up in surprise, and then cast a furtive but significant glance at one another.

He entered the saloon through the small back room. He was in his shirt-sleeves, as he nearly always was, although Christy was ever immaculate in a bartender's white coat.

"Hello, boss!" greeted Christy, who, although he had not expected his employer's coming, was quick to "catch on." He knew by experience that he would now be sent out on some errand. "I didn't know but you'd plumb forgot that you'd promised me this afternoon off."

"I'll let you go presently," Crewe replied, and walked behind the bar to the upper end of it, near the window, where Christy was standing.

"When did you see Bobcat Rickett the last time?" was the first question that Crewe asked.

"He was here three nights ago—the night you were out in Jersey," Christy replied. "I haven't seen him since then."

"Do you know where he lives, or can you find him and get him here to see me by or before midnight?"

"Sure," Christy replied, with confidence.

"I want him—at least, I think I want him. He is about the best of the bunch in his line, isn't he?"

"That's the reputation he's got; but he has got another one, too, that isn't quite as acceptable to his friends."

"What is that?"

"Most of the eggs that blow in here think he's a 'stool,' and won't work with him."

"Oh, well, if he is, it won't matter very much in connection with what I want him to do. He is a clever cracks man, he has got good tools, and he knows how to use them—and those are the three requirements that I am seeking just now."

"Anything else, boss?"

"Yes. Find Sindahr, if you can, and send him to me at once. Also, here are impressions of three Yale keys. Have them made while you are out and bring them to me when you return. Have any headquarters men seen in today?"

"Baxter and Marline were in not half an hour ago. They only took a drink and went out again. Marline was put back on the job only yesterday. He walked along the tables and glared at those who were here."

"I guess he just wanted to let them know that he was back on the job. Baxter asked for you, and wanted to know when you would be in. I told him that you were the only man in the burg that could answer that question. I shouldn't be surprised if they saw you when you did come and here they are again, right now."

"All right, Christy. Tell Bobcat that I want him to bring his best and smallest tools. There won't be any heavy work in what I want him to do."

"Is it for tonight?"

"If he should ask you that question, Christy, tell him to ask me when he gets here."

"How are you, Crewe?" Detective Marline broke in, thrusting his hand across the bar. "I am back on the job again, as you can see. Baxter and I are working together, too. And say, I'm blowed if I don't wish that Holderness was back, too."

"No doubt," said Crewe as he nodded a greeting toward Baxter.

"We wanted a private word with you, Crewe," Baxter announced. "I see that Christy is going out. Can't you hold him a few minutes and take us into the back room?"

"This is about as private as any spot in the place, Baxter. There isn't a guy within thirty or forty feet of you. What's the subject of it?"

"I just got it from the skipper on the D. Q. mind you, that a honey-bunch of shivers was lifted from the Delorme house at a wedding last night," Baxter replied in a low tone, leaning half across the bar.

"Likewise, it's whispered—I don't know why—that at least one, and probably two, of your acquaintances were there. You can guess the rest, can't you?"

"I'm a poor-guesser, Baxter."

"Well, I'll tell you the rest, Crewe," Marline interrupted. "We gotta hunch that YOU know where them shivers are right now, an' Baxter, 'n' me wanta be in on the deal: see? It ain't no use for you to go simflamin' around with guys like Muchmore an' Bunting. They are on the level, and if they get you they'll get you good an' bad; see?"

Crewe bent forward across the bar until his bleached face was quite close to Marline's.

"Marline," he said slowly, "I don't know how you got your old job again, but I suppose it was politics. What ever it was, it was a mistake, and you won't last long. I don't like you or your company, and I want you to keep out of my place unless you come here in your official capacity. And you get out of it now or I'll give you a free bath."

And Crewe picked up a siphon of seltzer and aimed it at Marline. Then, as both men backed away from the bar, he added:

"Neither of you can have another drink over my bar, ever. Those guns along the wall over there are honorable gentlemen compared to you two bulls."

Crewe put down the siphon, and turned his back upon them.

CHAPTER VIII.

Some of Crewe's Strange Methods. Fifteen minutes after the two officers had gone out of Crewe's, after swearing bitter vengeance upon him, a smallish man of compact build and rather flashily dressed entered the barroom.

He came in with that sort of air which says, louder than words could express it, "Well, here I am. Take a look at me. I'm it."

He swaggered across the room to the bar and announced:

"Lo, Crewe. Here I am. What's down?"

"There won't be anything doing, Bobcat, if you keep that voice of yours as loud as your clothes. You'd better beat it out of here if you're going to play any of your fool manners on me."

"Say," lowering his tone until it was a mere murmur and could not have been overheard ten feet away, "I just butted into Christy, crossin' the square, an' he said you wanted to see me important. Was that on the level as was he stringin' me?"

"It WAS on the level when I sent him out to find you, Bobcat; but, after looking you over and getting onto that style of yours, I don't think you will pass."

"Aw, say, Crewe, I just got these new blankets from the tailor's, an' he shoes an' spats an' hat and the hunk layout, and I guess I was feelin' a little bit cheery. I'll be good. Tell me what's down, won't you?"

"Go home and take off those clothes and put on something respectable, and then come back here. Maybe, if you walk into the place like a human being, I'll talk to you."

"Say, Crewe, on the level, I'm sorry. I'll go an' take 'em off the minute you've spoke your little piece. Honest."

He stepped upon the footrail to make it possible to bend nearer to Crewe, and in a tone that was barely audible added: "Christy said that you wanted me an' my best an' lightest kit. How about it?"

"That is what I told Christy to tell you, Rickett. But I am not looking for a Pavenshaw row or a Cagliostro."

"I don't know either of 'em, so help me, only I'd dare, out that the best guy you named is a dog, all right."

"Where are you living, Bobcat?" Crewe asked.

"Oh, I've got a nest around here in Eighth Street, second floor, back, right-hand door," and he gave the number.

Crewe pretended to consider deeply. Then he said:

"Go to your room and stay there. Don't go out again only to get your dinner, and get back after you have had it as soon as you can, all right."

to pull off what I wish you to do, I will be there after you at one o'clock tonight or about that time. If I don't show up tonight I will probably do so tomorrow night, and if not then, the night following. Get that?"

"Say, is this a continuous performance, with me playin' the part of writer?"

"That is about the size of it, Rickett. It's yours for sleepin' hollow until I get there—if you want the job. If you don't, there are plenty of others."

"Of course I want the job, an' there ain't any others—not like me. An' besides, I ain't never done any jobs with you, Crewe, an' I'm achin' for a chance. Do you mean that I ain't to poke my mug outa doors till you sit there, not even if it takes a week?"

"Only for eats, and they must be sudden and quick, and if I hear of your talking to a person in the street, man or cop, it's off."

"Say, Crewe, can't you give me a line on what it is?"

"I'll give you nothing whatever as long as you wear those clothes, so duck. And, Bobcat, if I hear that you have stopped in at a booze-can or stopped to talk with anybody on your way to your nest—well, keep out of here afterward; that's all. Beat it, now."

"Well, wouldn't that give you the bites?" the Bobcat muttered as he turned away, and Crewe looked after him, smiling oddly.

But as soon as Rickett had closed the door behind him, Crewe caught the eye of one of the ferret-eyed beings at the opposite side of the room and crossed the middle finger of his left hand over the first finger.

The man thus signaled to rose lazily from his chair, stretched himself, and slouched out of the room on the trail of Bobcat.

"Come here," Pincher, Crewe called presently. Then: "Tell the boys along the wall that I'm going to blow and ask them what they will have. You can do the serving. Then come and take your over the bar. I want to talk to you. Now," he went on when that had been done, "you are almost a stranger in this burg, aren't you?"

"Surest thing you know, Crewe. I never was here in my life till I brought that letter to you last week. I've always lived in Chi, just as Jimmy said in the letter. It was him that got me to thinking that I would rather live straight and be on the level than to stay crooked all my life."

"I've never been 'nugged,' so I guess maybe there's a chance for me. And Jimmy said you'd boost and help, if you thought I meant it. That's why I came to New York, and to you. So guess Jimmy sent me."

"The recommendation of Jimmy the Yip goes with me, Pincher. He left here some time ago and promised to live on the level, and he has kept his word. Anyhow, I'm going to give you a tryout. If you're the good and don't fall by the wayside, I'll find you a good and decent job afterward."

"Say, Crewe, if you only knew how much I appreciate—"

"Never mind that, my boy. You are only a boy yet. How old are you?"

"Twenty-three."

"You are broke, aren't you?" Crewe asked.

"I've got a little over four dollars left."

"Well, I'm going to stake you to fifty. Shut up your trap, now. You must work for it."

"I'll do anything—anything, Crewe, except—"

"Well, except what?"

"Except steal. I'm damned if I'll ever do that again."

"Good! I like the sound of that, Pincher. What changed you?"

"My mother changed me. She sent for me. I went to see her, an' well, I got there only just in time, and I—I promised her. Say, Crewe, what is it that you want me to do to earn that fifty?"

"Shake hands, Pincher, and then I'll tell you. I think that we are going to be very good friends."

"Thank you, Crewe. You know how to put heart into a man, all right. I had begun to think you were a little slow about coming to the front, but I guess you were only sizing me up."

"Correct, Pincher. I was, trying you out, and a chap that can stand what you have been up against for a week is all right. Now to business."

"Yes," was the eager reply.

"You sized up those two bulls that were in here a while ago, didn't you?"

"I sure did, Crewe."

"One is Lieutenant Baxter; the other—the thick-set one with the red hair—is Marline. I am going to put you on their trail, and from what Jimmy says about you, you can pull it off. I want you to take the fifty and buy yourself a new outfit from the skin out. Hat, shoes, and every thing."

"Shave off your moustache and get your haircut. Then get on the trail of those two cops, and hold it till you are called off. Here is the telephone number. Report in every chance you get; but don't come here yourself. Is that plain?"

"I understand thoroughly, Crewe."

"Either Christy or I will be here and nobody else ever in the private telephone. You can talk with Christy as frankly as with me."

"I'm on, Crewe."

"I want them shadowed everywhere they go until you are called off. It may be a day or three or four days, but it won't be longer than that. If they come back, stick to Marline. He can't ever get anything out of you."

will do the dirtiest part of the work, if there is any."

Pincher nodded understandingly.

"They will be somewhere in this neighborhood by seven o'clock to night, or about that time, and you ought to be fixed up by then—don't you think so?"

"Remember, report in here by telephone every chance you get, even if you have nothing to report more than the locality you happen to be in. There are telephones everywhere."

"I'm on, Crewe. I'll do the job, even better than you think I can do that sort of work to the queen's taste."

"Crewe produced a substantial 'roll' from one of his pockets and peeled several yellow-backs from it. These he gave into the hand of Pincher."

"Fifty of that is yours, for the services, you'll render, for your clothes and for any other purpose you care to put it to. The other fifty is mine which I hand to you for expenses. Don't spare expense in the job you're on, but I shall expect you to account for it just the same. Now, beat it. Here comes a man I want to talk to."

It was Sindahr, who approached the bar as Pincher went out.

There was craftiness, subtleties, even menace in the very air of the man; they seemed essential parts of him.

"You sent for me, Crewe?" he inquired in his soft, deep voice.

"Yes, Crewe replied shortly, and my first inclination was to send a pair of plain-clothes men after you and have you taken to headquarters."

"Why? What do you mean? I do not understand."

"Sindahr, you can't put it over on me, and the sooner you find that out the better it will be for you. That cameo brooch was in the built cabinet in the bride's dressing room, when you found it. There were other things in that room and in other rooms of the upper floors of that house, which you also brought away with you."

"I have a list of them—and I have got your number, too. I will give you until twelve o'clock tonight to bring every one of them here to me, and if you fail, I'll have you behind the bars before tomorrow morning."

"Just a few stickpins and—"

"Never mind. You bring them all to me. You disobeyed my orders. May who know me never try that on more than once."

"Crewe's—Sindahr's teeth gleamed as he spoke—"some day I shall kill you!"

"I don't think you will, Sindahr; but some day, more than likely, I shall see you killed—in the chair at Sing Sing," and Crewe stared into the black eyes of the Oriental until the man was compelled to lower them.

"That will do for the present, Count Suedat," Crewe said ironically. "I want you to return here before twelve o'clock tonight with those things; and I want you to come here every night between eleven and twelve until further orders."

"Say, Crewe, if you only knew how much I appreciate—"

"Never mind that, my boy. You are only a boy yet. How old are you?"

"Twenty-three."

"You are broke, aren't you?" Crewe asked.

"I've got a little over four dollars left."

"Well, I'm going to stake you to fifty. Shut up your trap, now. You must work for it."

"I'll do anything—anything, Crewe, except—"

"Well, except what?"

"I'm on, Crewe."

Crewe so that he might be delivered into their hands so that they could "get the goods" on him, so that they could catch him in a felonious act, Bobcat was to receive an adequate reward, and would be forever afterward immune from police interference.

Of course they lied to him when they made the promises, but Bobcat believed. Holderness had been dismissed from the department, but Marline remained; and Baxter, who had been hand in glove with both of them, how trained with Marline.

Cracker was naturally shrewd, sharp, and keen.

Had he been without the knowledge of that "stool pigeon" agreement, he might have been less wary and watchful than he was when he obeyed the signal from Crewe.

But Cracker, like all the other frequenters of the place, believed that Crewe was the master criminal of them all; none doubted that he could give them cards and spades in the pursuits of crookdom.

And he had watched the interview between Crewe and Bobcat, although he had heard no word of it; still, he had not a doubt that something was on foot for which Crewe needed the services of the yegg, and he was certain that in such an event the yegg would betray Crewe.

While he followed Bobcat, the latter stopped once in front of a saloon, but evidently decided against the risk of entering it.

He walked on after that until he came to a small combination cigar and stationery store, which he entered.

Cracker, watching from the opposite side of the street, saw him purchase a supply of cigarettes—and then a sheet of paper and an envelope after which he spent nearly an hour in laboriously writing a letter.

When he came outside he dropped the letter into the first post-box he passed, and then went on his way whistling and strutting—for he was still proud of his new clothes, notwithstanding the scoring they had received at the hands of Crewe.

Thus, Cracker's suspicions were verified, in his own mind, at least, and feeling assured because of the letter-writing episode, that Rickett would not attempt to leave his house again, for a time, at least, he hurried back to Crewe and told not only what he had seen, but also that chief story about the conversation he had overheard so long ago.

"That is odd work, Cracker," Crewe told him approvingly. "Put this ten dollar bill in your pocket and get back on the job. You will have to stay up till one o'clock tomorrow night, too. I shall go to bed, and I will look for you, my friend. You can stand it without much sleep till then, can't you?"

"Bitcher life, Crewe," Marline that, if you want me," was his reply.

Christy returned at five o'clock and delivered the keys he had had made in the meantime.

"I shall not be here tonight, Christy," Crewe said to him at the upper end of the bar, near the window. "Sindahr will be in about midnight. You tell him to deliver those stickpins and other things to you, and that it will be bad for him if he does not. Tell him also that I want him here before twelve tomorrow night. I will be here then."

Christy nodded understandingly.

"Watch out for Baxter and Marline. I practically fired them out of the place this afternoon, but you are to act as if you know nothing about that."
