VOL. XLVI. NO. 48.

THE RECORD: NORTHVILLE, MICH., FRIDAY, JUNE 23, 1916.

$1.00 PER YEAR, IN ADVANCE.

LEAP YEAR ADVICE.

"Listen, dearie! I've found that it's easy enough to catch a man, but another thing to hold him. Now, let me tell you!"
—Rehe in New York World.

DISPLAY THE AMERICAN FLAG

MAYOR FILKINS SUGGESTS THAT NORTHVILLE PEOPLE SHOW PATRIOTIC POLICY.

Village President Filkins very appropriately suggests that "while our soldiers are preparing for protection to American people in the unpleasant Mexican situation our citizens show their loyalty to our country by displaying the American flag from their homes, factories and business places."

Our soldiers are now massing on the border and many lives will no doubt be sacrificed. It will follow it will be because of Mexico's bandit policy of raiding American property and American honor and none but a cowardly nation can do otherwise than show to the people across the border that we mean business and that no further bandit policy will be permitted.

DEATH OF MRS. C. A. SESSIONS.

Many Northville people are greatly saddened at the loss from this community of Mrs. Charles A. Sessions, who died in Harper hospital, Detroit, Sunday following a surgical operation performed a few days previously, after an illness of several months. Mrs. Sessions had been here less than five years, but her charming personality and fine intelligence had won warm friends on every side. The funeral services, in charge of her pastor, Rev. J. E. Webber of the Presbyterian church, were held in the home Thursday afternoon, the Northville Woman's club, of which Mrs. Sessions was a valued member, attending in a body. Besides the husband, Mrs. Sessions is survived by a little son not quite four years old, and her father, who resides in New York state. The burial was in Oakwood cemetery.

GRADUATION EVENTS SUCCESSFULLY ENDED

FINE CLASS OF YOUNG PEOPLE COMPLETE HIGH SCHOOL WORK AS OTHERS ARE READY TO BEGIN.

Another successful series of commencement events in Northville has been brought to a close and our boys and girls and their teachers have laid aside their school work for the present.

A large company of parents and friends assembled in the Presbyterian church, Sunday evening, with the senior and junior classes listening to an earnest and impressive sermon by Rev. J. E. Webber, which, if headed by those to whom it was addressed, could not fail to contribute in large degree to their future welfare. Pastors Walker and Brown assisted in the service, and especially fine musical numbers were given by the Presbyterian ladies' quartet. The final decorations were in the class colors, green and white.

Monday evening nearly every seat in the Alhambra was occupied when the eighth grade promotion program was given. All the twenty young students winning continued applause for the capable way in which they did their various parts. The class colors were everywhere in evidence, especially effective in the bank of yellow lilies, yellow roses and greenery along the front of the stage. An innovation was introduced in the map-drawing, which was very skillfully done, indicating excellent practical training. A feature much commented upon was the average youthfulness of the class members as entrants into high school work. Music by Montgomery's orchestra was an acceptable addition to the program given by the class.

One of the most novel and entertaining class programs ever given by an N.H.S. class was presented by the graduates of '16 Wednesday night. It was in the form of a play, written by the high school teachers and the class.

The first act represented a banquet in the home of the class president, the table being decorated with the class colors, green and white. A welcome speech by Eural Clark was followed by a talk by the toastmaster, Rene Angell, who introduced the various speakers, first of which was Alice (Continued on page 4)

LAW SAYS PUBLIC CONVENIENCE STATION NECESSARY.

The following is the text of the act passed last year by the Michigan legislature relative to the establishment of public convenience stations in incorporated villages, to which the state authorities are calling attention: The People of the State of Michigan enact:

It shall be the duty of the common council of any city in this state, and of the board of trustees of any incorporated village, to cause to be constructed and maintained in such village or city not less than one public closet, commonly known and designated as a public convenience station, in such place or places as directed by the local board of health. Such closets or public convenience stations shall have thereon the proper signs and be so placed as directed by the local board of health as to be easily accessible from the business district or districts of such city or village, and shall be maintained in a sanitary manner under the supervision of the local board of health. Suitable and adequate accommodations shall be afforded at such public convenience station to the members of both sexes.

OLD SCHOOL HOUSE RAZED.

Milt Burrows and his "gang" which includes a large and enthusiastic contingent of school boys—have completed the demolishing of the old school house. It was generally expected that six weeks would be required for the work, but Milt's clever plan of hiring the boys for the cleaning and piling of the brick at a stated price per hundred expedited matters to such a degree that the work was done in half the time estimated, and a lot of youngsters made financially happy besides.

WHY IGNORE A GOOD LAW?

Mention was made in this paper some months ago of a certain law passed by our State legislature in regard to the establishment and maintenance of public convenience stations in incorporated villages. We noted that several of our exchanges coming under the law mentioned, also called attention to it. So far as we have been able to learn, practically all the towns in the state amenable to the statute in question have ignored it, up to the present time. While a multitude of "dead letter" acts clutter our statute books, this one should, certainly not be allowed to be shunted into that class. It is a matter that every intelligent, up-to-date citizen should be interested in, and a law that any up-to-date town should hasten to comply with. Even a great corporation like the D. U. R. has neglected the well-being of its patrons to such an extent as to provide no such conveniences in connection with its largely patronized stations and waiting rooms along its lines. It is understood our municipal authorities are not going to be equally neglectful in regard to public health and the comfort of the patrons of our business institutions and will soon take steps to provide for this matter in Northville. The text of the law in given elsewhere in this issue.

Down-town Detroit has been invaded by an army. A declaration of war is believed to be imperative, also imminent. The invading army avails in the trenches and also attacks by submarine methods. "Rats" sure we would advise preparation for the form of attack. Collect all the rats, cats and mice on hand.

Every one invited -- No Admission -- save one of the Record's exchanges at the close of an announcement of one of our grandest exercises. Sounds awfully impossible after giving a program full of interesting numbers, but it probably is only paragraphically paradoxical, which sounds even worse but isn't.

A proposition has been put forth that the name of our State prison be changed to "Michigan Industrial Institution." On the theory that more people will be induced to go there?

The graduating class of the Milford schools doesn't consider 13 an unlucky number. There are just that many to receive diplomas this year.

WALTER WARE'S HOME BURNED TUESDAY MORNING.

The fire department was called out Tuesday morning to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Ware in Northside, but too late to save the house from practically complete destruction. The fire caught in some manner from a stove or chimney, after Mr. Ware had left home on the way to his work at the Bell foundry. Mrs. Ware going with him a part of the way to bring home the milk from their cow, which was kept some little distance away. When she returned the fire had made such progress that there was little enough time to save the two small children, who were not yet up, and no time to save much of the household furnishings. It is understood that a small insurance was carried on the house, but the loss falls very heavily upon Mr. and Mrs. Ware, for whom much sympathy is expressed, as they have been working very hard to provide themselves with a home of their own.

W. R. C. NOTES.

(By Press Correspondent.)

The W. R. C. benefit at the Alcegaum theatre last Friday evening was quite a success. A crowded house responded to our national anthem, "The Star Spangled Banner," and showed their loyalty to our dear old flag by rising to their feet, this being an order from national headquarters.

One delegate from A. M. Harmon W. R. C., Mrs. Flora Peterson and Mrs. Winnifred Coleman with several others from both Post and Corps, left Tuesday morning to attend the Department convention held at Bay City.

THE STRANGER QUALIFIED.

A stranger in an Indiana village thought he might improve the time by attending service in the local church. At the conclusion of a lengthy talk the minister announced that he should like to meet the board. The stranger, in company with several other persons, proceeded to walk to the front of the church. The pastor, thinking there must be some misunderstanding, said to him: "I believe, sir, you are mistaken. This is just to be a meeting of the board."

"Well replied the visitor, 'I have listened to your talk for more than an hour and if any one has been more bored than I have been I should like to know who it is.'

ROAD BEE DAYS

AGAIN WITH US

GOVERNOR FERRIS DESIGNATES JUNE 29 AND 30 AS SUCH.

Governor Ferris has designated Thursday and Friday, June 29 and 30, as "Road Bee Days," when all are urged to "lend a hand."

"During the past year road building sentiment in Michigan has grown rapidly," says the proclamation. "The legislature of 1915 passed some of the most progressive highway laws ever enacted in Michigan. These were followed by the largest cash appropriations ever made for state road purposes."

"In the aggregate the road taxes assessed last fall by the state, counties and townships, amounted to $9,164,609. Personal donations were made which would make a total expended on the highways of the state last year, approximately $10,000,000."

"The mileage of state reward roads, if connected, would make more than three continuous lines across the state from the Ohio line to Mackinaw."

"But notwithstanding this apparently satisfactory progress there are thousands of miles of neighborhood roads which need attention constantly throughout the season. Good churches and good rural schools are impossible without good road and all call for a live community interest and a well-organized system of maintenance."

GRADUATION EVENTS SUCCESSFULLY ENDED.

Cunningham who gave the president's address. A history of the school girls by Floyd Lansing was responded to by Elizabeth Olin, with a sketch of the boys. A recitation of the class poem by Hazel Parmelee and the reading of the class will wherein all the valuables of the class were left to the Juniors, comprised the banquet speeches. An appropriate giving and drinking of toasts to the teachers was given together with the singing of the class song. The party was followed by a merry party given by the class.

An interesting intermission between acts Mr. Randolph Boyers of Detroit appeared in humorous sketches and the male quartet sang several numbers.

The scene of the second portion of the play was a living room to the home of Eural Clark now happily married to Elizabeth Olin in the year 1930. This calling of a Round robin letter, made up of short biographical sketches, written by each member of the class, afforded much interest to both the stage people and the audience. As each letter was read, the writer was shown in tableaux, at the back of the platform, in whatever occupation his or her letter described. Little Helen Gilbert and Alvin Hotelling as the children of the house, were attractive additions to the picture. Stark's four piece orchestra furnished music throughout the evening.

Diplomas were given to the graduates Thursday evening.

The High school chorus rendered the first number of the program and Rev. F. I. Walker the invocation. A solo by Miss Wartman, teacher of music and drawing was followed by an address by the Rev. Roy Hamilton of Ann Arbor. Mrs. Ralph Horton's piano solo preceded the valedictory, Rene Angell being given that honor. After the benediction by Rev. Frank Brass the following became full fledged graduates of the Northville High:

Alice Cunningham, president, Rene Angell, vice-president, Martha Horton, secretary, Asa Whipple, treasurer, and Irene Angell, Clifford Buckley, Eural Clark, Howard Fuller, Charles Freydl, Mary and John Harmon, Floyd Lansing, Viola Miller, Elizabeth Olin, Hazel Parmelee, Hilda Sommer, D. J. Stark, J. D. Thompson, Marie Wilcox, Lucile Wheeler and Wilbur Walker.

OPENING OF BLACK BASS SEASON.

Friday, June 16, was the Day When Game Laws Permitted Them to Be Caught.

The open season for black bass stories—and fishing—began last Friday, June 16. This will be interesting intelligence to both the fishermen who prevaricate and the prevaricators who fish. The same date also opened the season for wall-eyed pike. The state game laws require that fishermen shall not keep black bass less than ten inches in length, not more than ten may be caught in one day, and not more than ten may be had in possession at one time. They may be caught only with hook and line, wall-eyed pike must at least ten inches in length, not more than ten may be caught in one day and not more than 25 may be had in possession at one time. White bass, catfish, rock bass, blue gills, sunfish, perch and crappies may be caught at any season of the year.

SOME THRILLER.

A 10-year-old boy who had been required to write a composition at school chose to give a resumé of a motion picture play he had lately seen. The following is an excerpt from a thrilling point in the story:

"The villain curled his mustash, and seeing the pure virgin shreeks ha ha he mune or deaths blud is on thy utermost sole ha ha vengeance yengunze. But the good hero kurses and says O hevins hevins stur won step and thy ded body lies at my door, lay won parm on the virgins korps and it was better if you was drowned with a millstone. ware store Saturday, June 24.

The Globe Motor Truck company sold and delivered their second truck to a dealer in Youngstown, Ohio, last week. Other prospects will be closed this week.

Mrs. Newed—Hello, Central! I've just put some eggs on to boil and I find that my clock is stopped.
Would you mind ringing me up in three minutes?—Judge.

Mrs. L. H. Brasso gave a picnic at Walled Lake last week in honor of Mrs.
Mary Brasso of Northville. The party was wholly a surprise to Mrs.
Brasso. A good time was enjoyed by all.

The Northville city band has accepted an invitation from President John Winter of the Lake Orion Summer Homes Co. to play at that resort July 14, 15 and 16. Lake Orion is one of the most popular summer resorts in Michigan, its attractions ranking along with Coney Island.

"Glorious Fourth" a week from next Tuesday.

Mrs. Wm. H. Ambler, who has been ill so long, is very low at this writing.

Catholic services will be held in Cattermole hall Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

The Alter Motor Car Co. of Plymouth is to be moved to Bay City in the near future.

About two dozen base ball sports went down to Detroit Tuesday to help
"Huey" Jennings win against Cleveland.

Dr. Schuyler returned Wednesday from Chicago, where he was subpe-naed as a witness in a suit involving son farm west of town is progressing nicely with contractor Will Lannan at the helm.

The 1912 class reunion is to be held in the Stark cottage at Walled Lake Saturday afternoon. Dinner will be served at night. All members urged to be there.

The picnic of the Northville Woman's club which was to have been held next Tuesday, has been postponed indefinitely, because of death and sickness among the members.

Mr. and Mrs. Patterson and two daughters of Detroit accompanied Bert and Blanche Clark to the James Clark home where they were entertained over Sunday. Bert has rooms at the Patterson home.

The success of the Oakland County Centennial celebration, dated for August 20 to 26 next, is already assured. Every township is to have a part in the program, and every day will have its special title.

Picnics and parties the past week have marked the closing of the primary grades for the year. The Kindergarten party was held in the Library Wednesday while the first grade celebrated with a picnic yesterday.

Under the able supervision of Division Road Master W. H. White, the P. M. R. has completed a splendid job of new track-making along Main street. It is now up to the street commissioner to put the remainder of the roadway into equally good condition, when we will have a thorough fare to be proud of.

The W. R. C. kept at the Alhambra theatre last Friday evening drew a capacity house and also much commendation. The setting of the Mary Pickford film play was unusually striking. The music, both vocal and instrumental was fine, and the entire entertainment deserved the financial success that resulted for those interested.

By the latest P. M. schedule Novi and Wixom are left still further "out in the cold," as regards train service.
At least, such as gives any connection with electric roads. Only one southbound train now stops at these and other small stations north and that is one which reaches here just before noon. The residents up that way should get busy and promote a trolley line of their own.

Secretary of the Interior Lane officiated at ceremonies held recently in Yankton, S. Dak., in which 136 Sioux Indians publicly renounced the faith of their ancestors and took the oath of allegiance to the United States.
Each Indian was given an arrow which he shot into the air signifying that he would never "want" it again.
Then each grasped the handle of a plow, thus showing his willingness to accede to modern civilization.

Our principal streets presented a decidedly metropolitan aspect Saturday evening, especially during the band concert. Automobiles were parked in almost unbroken lines along both sides of Main and Center streets, and one visitor from the country remarked that it would be a good plan for the farmers to reserve space by telephone for their cars when they were coming to town Saturday nights.
The fine playing of the band brought many compliments for that organization and the new portable band stand was much commended. The boys' music is certainly a drawing card when the weather is such that they can give their Saturday night concerts, as is expected will be done regularly.

CIGARS AND TOBACCO

Did Wednesday of this week seem any longer than ordinary days? It was the longest day of the year, anyway.

Dr. T. H. Turner has disposed of the old Overland car and is now driving a new four cylinder, seven passenger Studebaker.

J. M. Dixon is home from the hospital and is getting along nicely.
Ross is home for a couple of months to care for the greenhouse while his father is recovering the use of his eyes.

Having finished the year's work at Albion college, Harold Wheaton has gone to Wadena, Minn., where he will spend the summer at work in the office of an auto-part manufacturing company.

Dr. Paul Alexander and H. E. Taff are more than anxious for the 25th to roll around, as on that date they leave for Houghton Lake to spend a two weeks' vacation with their respective wives.

Northville furnishes at least one member of the state militia who have been called out by Uncle Sam. Roy Lawrence has been summoned from his work with an automobile company at Jackson to join his company for the mobilization movement.

It is reported that, in spite of the heavy penalty for bird killing, robins and blackbirds are being destroyed in this vicinity in direct defiance of the law, agents of the loss of a "little fruit." The birds are worth many times the value of the fruit.

MISS MARY BLACKWOOD DEAD.

Miss Mary Blackwood, one of the prominent country school teachers of this vicinity in former years, died Wednesday, June 14 at Traverse City.
She was a daughter of the late Samuel Blackwood of Novi township, and a half-sister of James Blackwood, who lived in this village at one time.
Miss Blackwood had many friends here including a number of her former pupils. She was a woman of much culture and possessed intelligence of a high order. The later years of her life had been largely passed at Bay View, although her winter were mostly spent in the south.

DEATH OF WILLIAM OSBAND

William M. Osband, who was the organizer of Northville's graded school system, died in the U. of M. hospital at Ann Arbor June 18, at the age of 79 years. Mr. Osband was one of the best known educators and editors of the country. He occupied faculty positions in various schools and colleges in this and other states, and later was editor and proprietor of the Ypsilanti for 21 years. He leaves an only daughter, Miss Maria Osband. The funeral services were held in Ypsilanti Tuesday, the body lying in state in the M. E. church in that city during the forenoon.

MRS. AMELIA BEYER DEAD.

Mrs. Amelia Beyer, mother of William Beyer, died at the latter's home on Mill street Friday morning, after a brief illness. Mrs. Beyer was 85 years of age and had made her home here with her son for the past ten years. Funeral services, conducted by Rev. Frank Brass, were held at the residence Monday afternoon, and interment was made in Rural Hill cemetery.

The Jewel Worshiper

BY VARICK VANARDY

Copyright by the Frank A. Munsey Company

"I have put Pincher on the trail of Baxter and Marline. He will telephone me after seven tonight. Whatever he may have to say pass it on to Felner. I am particularly anxious to know if either of those bulls should go to see Bobcat Rickett."

Ten minutes later Crewe went out. He turned northward, walking with his customary swiftness, but when he was halfway across Washington Square he wheeled abruptly and started even more swiftly upon the back track.

Another man who had also been moving rapidly, half halted, then continued on his way, but Crewe stopped him by stepping directly in front of him.

"You are a new man at the bureau, aren't you?" he asked. "I don't seem to remember you. But, anyhow, it isn't worth your while to try to follow me. You would lose. Besides, it isn't healthy. You might catch the malaria—or something."

The "shadow" grinned appreciatively.

"You might take me along with you," he said. "It would save us both a lot of trouble—and I'm willing to be scared."

"Oh, I see! You are another one of that bunch, are you? You are playing with fire, young man, and you'll burn your fingers if you don't look out."

"Or I guess I know how to avoid the flame, Crewe. You see—I—"

He stopped, for Crewe had wheeled and left him, and the would-be sleuth saw him enter a waiting taxi which drove rapidly away upon the instant when the door was slammed shut, and he could not follow because there was no other taxi in sight.

The taxi, as it happened, was Crewe's car, and he, who drove it well, he also belonged to Crewe. That afternoon he had many passengers of the sort in and around New York, and he was constantly adding to the list.

The taxi was driven as rapidly as the city ordinances permitted to a far up town station of the subway, and the attention of the chauffeur seemed to be attracted to the appearance of the street where he was to drop him.

At all events, the passenger disappeared in the subway before the man turned his head again, and he never saw him again.

Less than one hour later, or, to be exact, at seven o'clock, Bobcat Rickett, portrait artist, in full evening dress, paused at the door of his studio before going out to get the last directions to his man Felner.

"Keep your ears open for the telephone, Felner," he said, "and be especially particular in regard to the reports you receive. If you should want me, I will be at the home of Mr. Delorme, until ten, and at the club after that until twelve. Then I shall return here unless I satisfy you otherwise."

Quite contrary to his habit he turned toward the rear of the building when he stepped from the elevator and left it by the Nameless Street door. He did so because it was his intention to walk to his destination, for the exercise it would afford, and it was a trifle more convenient to go that way.

He was glad he did so.

Standing at the curb, facing the building and apparently studying its architecture, was the shadow who had attempted to follow Crewe across Washington Square, and beside him was Detective Sam Bunting.

The latter came forward at once, and he grasped the hand which Moreaux extended in greeting.

"Good evening, Mr. Moreaux," he said in his hearty manner. "Please don't think that I was spying on you, or the building, either, for that matter. Muchmore is around the corner on an errand for the chief, and I was waiting for him. But I would have gone in to see you for a moment if it had not been for the engagement with you at ten-thirty tonight."

"Oh, I hadn't a thought of your spying upon me, Bunting," the artist returned smiling. "Who is that other chap?"

"He is a new man at the bureau, although several years on the force. Felner—that's his name—undertook to trail Crewe this afternoon and lost him. He has heard somehow—Muchmore didn't tell him nor I—that Crewe sometimes visits this building by this entrance, and he is so mad to think that Crewe gave him the slip that he says he is going to stand right there until Crewe comes, or until it is time for him to go to his South Fifth Avenue place again."

"Oh, I see. Did you have something that you particularly wished to say to me—that you thought of calling upon me just now instead, of waiting until our evening engagement?"

"Yes, I did. And I hope you won't think me officious or fresh when I do say it, Mr. Moreaux."

"Certainly not, Bunting. What is it?"

"I don't know what your relations with Crewe are, Mr. Moreaux, and I don't care to know. I want you to believe that. But I do know that, practically the entire detective bureau has been given the tip to get him, if he can be got."

"And so—here is where Mr. Fresh Buttinski comes in. I feel like passing the tip on to you. I thought perhaps you might think it would be just as well if you had nothing more to do with that man—for the present, at least. I speak as an officer to a citizen, and, if you will permit me to say it, as one who wishes to be your friend."

"Shake hands, Bunting. That's bully of you! I appreciate it, too. But for your own enlightenment I will tell you that Crewe is not at all likely to appear at this door again—for some time to come, anyhow. You know I have the key that you took from him."

"You might put your friend's name and spare him the fatigue of standing up all night. Do not think that you presumed in giving me the warning. I am really very much obliged to you. I will look for you and Muchmore at the club at ten-thirty to-morrow night."

"We will be there."

"Do, for I expect to have some thing of considerable importance to tell you."

But as Moreaux turned on his way to Felner, if uttered aloud, would have been:

"I wonder if Bunting was lying. If so he played the part all right."

CHAPTER X.

No Matter Who the Thief May Be

Mr. Delorme and Moreaux the two men faced each other across the library table in the small room which was called the den. I looked for that, for all with on each telephone two lines to be used in important questions to ask you one which was to be of great importance."

"Well, I will be. But surely you do not expect to interrupt me with a letter. I am more welcome at my house than you are. The interesting is about to begin."

"I know that, Sir, and thank you heartily for it."

"What is the all important question?"

"In order to keep my promise to her I have, in one way and another, engaged the services of several others."

"Detectives, I suppose? I'm sorry. I did not wish to have the affair noised abroad."

"Detectives—and some others who are not exactly detectives, and it will not be noised abroad, Mr. Delorme."

"I am glad of that. Please go on."

"Inquiry, deduction, thought, careful analysis, and some abstract investigation in different quarters have collectively convinced me that it will not be a difficult matter to recover the lost articles. The question is this: Do you want those lost jewels returned, without regard to the identity of the person who took them?"

"Most certainly I do."

"No matter who the—the thief may prove to be?"

"The answer is the same, Birge."

"Do you recall our conversation at the breakfast table this morning?"

"Every bit of it, word for word."

"Then I have your authority to go ahead with a free hand, without fear or favor, no matter upon whom the burden of guilt may fall?"

"You have. But, for Heaven's sake, why all this mystery? If you know where the jewels are and who took them, why don't you out with it and tell me?"

"I DON'T know—yet."

"Oh, I see. You are surmising—guessing."

"But I have got three guesses, Mr. Delorme, according to the old style of playing the game. And one of them is sure to win. And whichever one wins, or, rather, no matter which one of the three may win, the resultant consequence will be—let us say—unpleasant."

"You insinuate, Birge, that some body whom I know and know well is the guilty person?"

"It is more than an insinuation, sir. It is a statement."

"Why don't you tell me the names of all three of your 'guesses'?"

"For the specific reason that such a course would be a decided injustice to the two who are innocent."

"I had not thought of that. Well, go ahead in your own way, Birge. No matter who the guilty party may be, I have no sympathy for him, or her, as the case may develop. The one who is guilty should be exposed. If not publicly, then, at least, to the few who ought to know about it."

"Very good, sir," Moreaux left his chair, helped himself to a fresh cigar from the open box on the table, lighted it, shook hands with Mr. Delorme, who had also risen, crossed to the door, then turned about and said:

"Oh, by the way, are you attending the Netherlands Society dinner to-morrow night?"

"Yes. Aren't you? You're a member."

"Oh, I shall doubtless be there—unless something happens in the meantime to prevent."

"Bless me! You talk as if you were a man of business, and I never knew anybody who had more leisure on his hands. Do you know, Birge, what I used to wish that when my Lorna chose a husband, it would be you. Forgive an old man for saying it, but I have wished it many times."

Moreaux's tall form seemed to grow perceptibly taller, and the expression in his eyes was serious indeed, notwithstanding his smile as he replied quickly:

"Good Heavens, Delorme, I am twice as old as she is. She is nineteen and I am thirty-eight. That would never do, you know. Such a thought never occurred to Lorna, fond as she was, and is, of me."

"But it occurred to you more than once, Birge. I know."

"Nonsense, Mr. Delorme. Nonsense, Gracious! I must go. Good night, sir."

Promptly at half past ten o'clock the two officers, Muchmore and Bunting, arrived at the club where Birge Moreaux was waiting them.

He conducted them at once to a secluded corner, offered them refreshments, which they accepted, and having lighted cigars all around, the artist looked quizzically at Muchmore and inquired:

"Well, Lieutenant, what's doing?"

"We supposed that our errand here was to have your reply to that question, Mr. Moreaux," was the quick reply.

"Still, you have something on your mind. I can see that much before I undeceive myself. Suppose you tell me what has happened to interest you so."

"Very well, sir. Nothing of any importance. And I really am not sure that I ought to tell you about it."

"I think you may trust me, Lieutenant."

"I will. You give me a tip, first night on a telephone booth looking up that you had been talking with another man in the Bowery near Houston Street. After I accompanied him, he came to headquarters. I went over to Crewe's part to look around a bit, and he was there. I had doped it out who he was in the meantime. He calls himself Sindharr, the middle worker."

"Ah, yes. I have heard of him."

"It isn't necessary to tell you all that happened. When I first went inside I took a good look at him, and one of the things I saw was a few traces of some sort of preparation, which he had evidently been using to make his hair white, or gray."

"It was under his hair, along the back of his neck, just a trace of it, but enough to set me thinking. I decided to arrest him as a suspicious character and hold him for investigation, and so, but the cuffs on him. Later, he managed to get away; but that doesn't matter. I can get him again when I want him."

"I see."

"The point is this: there were things about him that jogged my memory, but I could not put my finger on them, so to speak. But the thought has been hankering around in my cranium the whole blessed day, and—half an hour ago I met him on the street in his other character, and I'll be blowed if he didn't have the gall to stop me and speak to me. I got my measure then, all right."

"I am still very much in the dark, Lieutenant," Moreaux said mildly.

"Do you recall a Count Suci who was at the wedding reception?"

"Yes."

"Well, that's the guy."

"You don't tell me! Did you arrest him again?"

"Not by a jugful. I pretended that I was mightily glad to see him again, asked him for his card, got it, and sent him on his way rejoicing. He's the thief, or I'm only a constable. But getting doesn't mean getting the stolen jewels. He's got to be stalked."

"That is very interesting, Lieutenant. You do not intend to arrest him at once, then, even if you should see him again in the character of Sindharr?"

"No. I'll let him have his head for two or three days. But I will ask the inspector to put three of our best men on him so that every move he makes will be known."

"Well, well. Your information is somewhat of a squelcher upon what I intended to suggest, although I don't suppose it will really make any difference after all."

"What was it, Mr. Moreaux?" the Lieutenant requested eagerly, and Bunting bent forward in his chair and asked at the same time: "Please tell us what it is, sir."

"You were both rather eager last night to understand, exactly what were the relations between that man Crewe and myself. And this evening Mr. Bunting was kind enough to give me a warning concerning him. The fact is, gentlemen, it has been my good fortune to perform a service for Crewe in the past, and he is not one who forgets."

"He remembers both ways," good and bad," Bunting remarked quietly.

"We will say, then, that recalling his promises of service to me, I asked him to assist in the recovery of the lost jewels. The point is this—and we will forget the source of my information, if you please. That is part of the contract."

"Certainly."

"The descriptions of the wedding presents in the newspapers has excited the cupid of every crook in the city. Many of them suppose the presents to be still contained in Mr. Delorme's house. It is to be burglarized to-morrow night."

"Wait, please, until I have finished. Mr. Delorme will not be at home if he keeps an engagement he has made; but he may not keep it. At all events, I shall be there, or if not inside of the house, near at hand."

"Do you know the time planned for the burglary, Mr. Moreaux?" Bunting asked.

"Yes; I am coming to that. But understand me, it would not do for either of you to be in the immediate neighborhood on the watch. The lookout would spot you. I was especially warned against that."

"Well, what then?"

"I will be there, probably inside of the house, watching, whether Delorme is there or not. Around the corner in Madison Avenue, a block and a half away, there is an undertaker's establishment kept by a man named Grover."

"If you two officers will promise to wait there, inside of that shop, with patience, from half past one until I call you on the telephone, you will catch red-handed whoever the burglars may be—and it is possible, just possible, that there will be other developments. Now what do you both say?"

"Don't you think that you run an unnecessary risk?" Bunting began.

"Not at all. The telephone is so located that I won't be heard using it."

"Mr. Moreaux is right. His way is the best way, Bunting. At your job, and we will do as you say, Mr. Moreaux," Muchmore said decisively.

"Good. Then if it is settled that you will both be at the undertaker's at half past one to-morrow night, and will remain there, inside, until I call you on the telephone?"

"Yes."

"And also that in the meantime not another person than ourselves—not even your own chief—shall be told anything at all about it? I must insist upon that, too."

"Certainly," Muchmore replied.

"We would much rather work thus out of view, than to have half a dozen unnecessary eyesight detailed to watch."

"Remember, I do not know the exact time it may be in hour, or even more, hence I call you on the telephone," Moreaux cautioned.

"We will wait at the undertaker's till you do call, if it takes until daylight," Muchmore replied, and Bunting nodded his acquiescence to that statement.

CHAPTER XI.

The Delicate Hand of Crewe.

The following night was a busy one for Crewe; also for officers Baxter and Marline; likewise for some others in whom we are more or less interested.

The "business" part of it, so far as we are concerned, began a few minutes before twelve, when the front door at Crewe's opened just a little and the sinister visage of Sindharr, the miracle worker, appeared in the aperture, his black eyes scanning the face of every person in the place. Then he glided swiftly to the bar behind which Crewe was standing.

"I don't want those two cops to come in and find me here," he said rapidly and uneasily.

"Go into the back room and wait there," Crewe replied. "I will bring your cordial to you presently."

"I brought those stick-pins and things to you last night. You weren't here. I gave them to Christy. Did he tell you?"

"Yes."

Sindharr glided into the back room and closed the door after him.

Crewe selected a glass larger than the one from which Sindharr usually drank his native cordial. Into the bottom of it he dropped two small white pellets. Then he filled the glass to the brim with the cordial, placed the bottle itself upon a tray with the filled glass, and carried it into the back room.

"I shall be busy for a time, Sindharr," he said as he put the tray down on the table, "but I brought the bottle of cordial, in case you should want more before I return. You will be entirely safe in here."

He went out again—but at the end of twenty minutes he returned to the back room and found the miracle worker soundly asleep with his head resting on his arms upon the table.

Crewe opened the door into the hall. Then he turned about, lifted Sindharr from the chair and threw him across his shoulders as he might have done with a bag of meal. Five minutes later he deposited the sleeping man upon the bed in a room above the saloon, and having arranged him in a comfortable position, went out, locking the door after him.

The key he gave to Christy, with a few whispered words of explanation, the closing words of which were: "It is entirely harmless, Christy. He will wake up to-morrow noon without the least sensation of having been doped. I had to do it in order to carry out my plans."

"Pincher just telephoned again," Christy remarked.

"Well?"

"Baxter and Marline have just gone into Bobcat Rickett's hide out, in Fourth Street."

"Good. It is working all right."

"He and Cracker are both on the watch."

"Good again."

Over at Rickett's "hide-out," as Christy had called it, the yegg had been waiting since the early afternoon of the preceding day.

His nervousness and trepidation had increased with each hour he waited, because of the letter he had written and posted while on his way there from Crewe's, because of the certainty that Baxter, to whom the letter had been addressed, would appear there to see him; because Baxter had been such a long time in replying to it in person, as had been requested, and because of the dire consequences that would follow if Crewe should arrive while Baxter was there and find them together.

And Bobcat felt certain that Crewe would show up that night, since he had not done so the preceding one.

Baxter made his appearance shortly after midnight, and Marline was with him.

They ascended the stairs softly, Baxter scratched against the door in a peculiar manner with his thumbnail, it opened instantly, and they passed inside into utter darkness. Nobody uttered a sound.

Baxter struck a match and lighted the gas. It revealed Bobcat Rickett standing with his back against the door, half crouching, white and frightened.

"What time is it?" he demanded before either of the officers could speak.

"It's a quarter past twelve, or maybe a little more, Bobcat," Marline replied. "We've got time enough. We'll get out before he comes. Say, you're the yellowest stoop pigeon I ever knew."

"I ain't either. I'm only dead scared of Crewe. So are you, and so is Baxter, if anybody should ask you," was the quick reply.

"Well, drop that. Baxter got your letter only about an hour ago, yet we'd have been here last night. What's this play going to be made? What's the idea?"

"I dunno what it is only that Crewe's coming here as soon as he can, and I'm to take my best and brightest tools with us when we go out."

"Didn't he let drop nothing else?" Baxter demanded.

"No, so help me, he didn't. Just that. But you have promised me, Pax, and you, too, Mel, that if ever I could frame it so's to get anything on Crewe, you'd let up on me. Well, here is your chance."

"Crewe's going to do something to-night, or he wouldn't have made that date with me, would he? If you two bulls can't trail along and find out what it is, after what I've told you—that ain't MY fault."

"What do you think of it, Mar?" Baxter asked his partner.

"It looks good to me, Pax," was the reply. "It's workin' out fine. We'll get Crewe tonight, and get him right. Say, Rickett, can't you stow one of us away somewhere? I'd like to hear what Crewe's got to say when he gets here."

The stoop-pigeon's eyes dilated with terror.

"I wouldn't dast," he replied instantly. "I'd rather chuck the hull thing right now than do that. And anyhow Crewe won't say any more to me here than he said in his own bar-room."

"I won't know where we're going till we get there. That's a cinch. And for the love of Pete, get out now! He's likely to be here any minute. He's always ahead of time; that is his long suit. And say! If he should find you two bulls here with me—"

Words utterly failed the stoop-pigeon. Terror at the very thought of such a climax appalled him.

The two officers could see that he was trembling and they grinned in appreciation of the fact. A policeman despises a stoop pigeon almost as intensely as a fellow crook hates one.

They nodded to each other and moved toward the door.

"We'll be there, wherever it is, about as soon as you are, Bobcat," Baxter said, and they passed outside.

Fincher, on watch in a doorway opposite, saw them stop at a drug-store. Marline waited while Baxter went inside and used a telephone.

What he said when he called up police headquarters was told to Moreaux the following day by the official down there who knew his true character and work; but it is worth repeating here.

"We have always wanted to get our claws into Crewe," he told the man in charge of the desk. "The chance has arrived. Bobcat Rickett has been playing 'stoop for Mar' on me, but the snap is too big for us to play it alone. If you'll be on tap down there, and ready to move sudden when I call up again, we'll nail him tonight red-handed. He's going to pull off something, but whether it's Moreaux's study, the park band, or the U. S.

sub-treasury, I don't know—yet. But, all the same, when I tap the wire again, you be ready to hump your selves."

Muchmore and Bunting were not at headquarters at the time, so they did not receive the telephoned information—which fact evidenced the delicacy of Crewe's scheming.

At ten minutes before one Crewe passed into the hallway of the house where Rickett lived, and he did not even glance in the direction of where he supposed Cracker might be hiding.

He knew that Baxter was somewhere near, watching. He knew that Baxter was called an expert "shadow," and would follow closely after Rickett and himself when they should appear—and that was precisely what he most desired.

A taxi—the same one he had used the preceding evening—had followed him to a point a hundred feet from Rickett's doorway. When he came from the house again accompanied by the Bobcat, they stepped in it and were driven rapidly away.

But officer Marline had anticipated just such an emergency, and was seated in another one, half a block away. Baxter joined him instantly. The driver had already received his instructions.

The taxicab containing the two officers followed the other one which held Crewe and the yeggman.

Likewise the fact that the owner of the house was attending a banquet and so was not at home.

CHAPTER XII.

The Housebreakers.

Crewe entered the house at the front door, using one of the keys which Christy had procured for him.

Rickett wondered why he had been taken along, since there seemed to be no need for his "lightest kit." The time was approximately a quarter past one; rather an early hour for burglars to get busy.

Inside the house, when the door was closed behind them, Rickett's impatience got the best of him; and he demanded:

"What the blazes did you want of me and my tools for, when you've got the keys? Crewe put his lips close to my ear and whispered—"

"If you utter another sound unless you're asked, I'll choke you into silence and leave you here."

There was a dim light in the foyer. Crewe led the way up the wide hallway, going forward. Rickett thought, as if he were familiar with his surroundings, and so, came presently to a door which opened at his touch, passing in the doorway, he closed and locked the door, and then he stepped on the electric floor, the apartment with a lightning.

The yeggman, accustomed to obscurity when he made his nocturnal raids at unfamiliar residences, started back in dismay, cowering.

"Don't do that," he whispered, forgetting the order not to speak unless spoken to, but Crewe seemed not to hear. He passed quickly on into an adjoining room and snapped on more lights.

It was the dressing room of a young woman; a glance revealed that fact; but Crewe did not so much as glance toward the articles it contained, although Rickett found time to slip several gold-backed toilet articles into his capacious pockets.

Crewe led the way through a generous bath room into a bedroom beyond it, where he snapped on more lights. Then he pointed to a small, square door, breast high in the wall at that side of the room nearest the bath room.

"Tackle that, Bobcat," he said shortly. "It is made of steel, although the veneering is wood. It is fastened with a donkey-lock, and it won't be easy. Tackle it, and be quick about it, too."

The Bobcat "tackled" it, and he was an expert at his profession. It was surprising, even to Crewe, how swiftly and how dextrously he worked.

We need not describe the process nor his methods. In a marvelously short time, considering the difficulties, the small steel door gave way before his efforts and fell ajar, mutilated, but not beyond repair.

He turned with an expression of pride in his eyes, but Crewe shoved him ruthlessly aside without comment. Then he peered into the compartment, the interior of which had been thus disclosed.

There were many things there, some of undoubted value. Rickett, peering over Crewe's bent shoulders, rubbed his hands together and licked his lips expectantly.

Artificial ears are so skillfully made that they may with difficulty be distinguished from natural ones, so it is claimed.

When the person who lost an ear applies to the manufacturer for a substitute, there is made a mold of the remaining ear. If there be left any part of the other, a mold of that part also must be taken to assist in the fitting of the artificial. Manufacturers assert that no two ears are alike, and that it takes a skillful workman to prepare an ear from the mold or molds.

When finished the new ear is pasted on the stump, or simply set in the position of the lost ear. It is really only the first artificial ear that is expensive, the chief cost pertaining to the making of the mold. Vulcanized rubber, which can be bent and twisted
