Portrays Sam Jones So Accurately That Even Jones' Best Friends Believe Evangelist Is Speaking

DENTON C. CROWL.

"I HEARD your portrayal of Sam Jones with mingled pleasure and sadness," said Senator Bob Taylor, one of Sam Jones' closest friends, to Denton C. Crowl after he had delivered one of the famous Sam Jones lectures. "I enjoyed the sweet humor running through it like a stream and the philosophy of life that blossomed in every sentence. You brought the great evangelist back to earth, and I saw him again and heard him deliver his message to the world."

But there is one man who is even better fitted than Senator Taylor to judge Denton C. Crowl's ability, as a portrayalist, and that is M. J. Maxwell, the musical director who accompanied Jones for more than a score of years.

"It would be impossible for any one to believe that it was not Sam Jones doing the talking," said Mr. Maxwell after hearing Denton C. Crowl.

The popularity of Mr. Crowl's lectures is illustrated by an incident which happened in Chicago, Ind., where he had already spoken twice and had been invited to return for a third lecture. After being forced to decline the third invitation because of other engagements, a wealthy miner of Dugger collected money from a large number of the citizens of the town, and had it placed on deposit at the bank as an earnest plea from the people that Mr. Crowl return again, which he was nevertheless unable to do.

Wherever he speaks he leaves an enthusiastic audience and one that is always desirous of hearing him again.

NORTHVILLE LOSES ESTIMABLE LADY

MRS. WILLIAM H. AMBLER DIED
LAST FRIDAY, AFTER LONG ILLNESS.

In the death of Mrs. William H. Ambler, which occurred last Friday morning, June 23, Northville has lost one who will be universally mourned, and whose absence will be keenly felt in many important places, besides the vacancy she leaves among her own immediate kindred. Her death was the culmination of an illness of many months' duration, but borne with a fortitude that refused to submit to inaction of mind and body until almost the last.

Mrs. Ambler, whose maiden name was Mary L. Brown, was born in Novi township, the eldest daughter of the late Almond Brown and Louisa Entrian Brown. She became the wife of William H. Ambler of this place over thirty years ago, and before her marriage was a successful teacher in the Northville schools.

Mrs. Ambler possessed an unusually fine intellectual equipment, natural and acquired, and her abilities along all lines of social usefulness were of the highest order. She had been a member of the Northville Woman's club since its earliest years and was one of its past presidents and most valuable members; also a longtime member of the Library board, which she had served as president, and secretary and of which she was the efficient treasurer at the time of her death.

Mrs. Ambler had been a member of the W. H. C. for many years and a very strong factor in its success, serving the order as its president for seven years in all. She was an active worker in the Methodist church as president of its Aid society, teacher in its Sunday School and in other capacities. In all these activities she well has truly missed, as her influence and work in each place was such as can scarcely be duplicated. The funeral services, very largely attended, were held from the residence Monday afternoon, conducted by Rev. Walker, with interment in Rural Hill cemetery. The nearest surviving relatives are the husband, one sister, Mrs. James Gibson of Wixom, and a brother, Seymour Brown of this place. The Aid society of the M. E. church attended the funeral in a body, as did also the Library board and Mrs. Ambler's Sunday school class of young girls.

PERE MARQUETTE RY. HAS BAD WRECK.

A head on collision occurred between the north and south bound freight trains about 3:30 Wednesday morning at the bridge on the Novi road. The trainmen of both divisions jumped for their lives when the impact came. The engineer of the south bound landed in the creek and was quite severely injured about the head and face. No one else was hurt.

The accident resulted from a mix-up of orders that one of the trains should switch off before reaching the bridge. The injured man had been running on the railroad for 18 years and this is his first mishap.

The freight cars were loaded with ice, flour, sheet iron, etc., which was plentifully strewn along both sides of the embankment for some distance, a number of the cars turning turtle when they left the track. When the crash came the boiler in one of the engines sprung a leak and the escaping steam gave forth a weird whistle for some time, it being impossible to reach it. As a result most every one in town was awakened.

The road to the bridge was lined with spectators, automobiles, buggies and wagons all the forenoon while the work of the wrecking car was conducted. No trains could get thru town until late in the afternoon.

CARD OF THANKS.

I wish to extend my appreciation to the King's Daughters, Presbyterian Aid society, Northville Woman's club and K. of E. Lodge and the many friends for the beautiful flowers sent me during my long illness. Also the many acts of kindness and little things that have helped to make the time seem shorter.

MRS. E. C. HINKLEY.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to thank the societies and many friends for the kindness extended and flowers sent during the illness and death of our loved one.

The man with money should let those get-rich-quick "snaps" alone.

When you have worked hard for your money, don't let some "olly-stranger" stranger, who never did an honest day's work in his life, come along and "talk you in" on some FOOL SCHEME into which you will sink all the hard-earned savings of a lifetime.

You cannot "get rich quick" from the efforts of others. But you can get rich quicker than you think if you will begin banking your money TODAY and firmly resolve to INCREASE the balance to your credit every month. Try it.

LIVE AS THEY DID IN PIONEER DAYS

QUAINT TRIO "DISCOVERED" ON MISSOURI FARM

Years Have Brought Little Change to "Aunt Betty" and Her Brothers on Gun Creek.

Macon, Mo.—In the good year 1816, William Elliot, Kentucky emigrant came to Missouri and patented a section of land on Gun Creek, in the northern part of the state. Hardly any body knows where Gun Creek is but nearly everybody in this part of the country now knows of the quaint little log cabin where the children of William Elliot have lived for nearly a century. Elliot had a large family. The three eldest children were Betty, Jordan and Perry. It developed upon them to manage the household and they were so busy in looking after the needs of their brothers and sisters that they never had time to get married. The other children moved away, the parents died, leaving Betty, Jordan and Perry to themselves. They found in each other all the human companionship they needed.

Nestled in the backwoods, from twelve to fifteen miles from any rail road, they hardly knew that the great Civil War was raging about them in the 60's. They occupied the same log cabin that was built by their father in 1833. For many years they lived exactly as the early pioneers did, making their own homespun garments, fetching water from Gun Creek, shooting game with flintlock rifles. In one way, however, the Elliots advanced. The two boys were thrifty and they knew that some day their rich Missouri soil about them would be worth a great deal of money. So they began in early life to add to the estate. They picked up a section here and a section there until they acquired a great body of 2,000 acres. Much of this is wood land and very valuable now. Under hundreds of acres are rich coal beds that would bring the price of $200 an acre in the coal alone.

Up until recent years the Elliots carried on their farming operations in the primitive manner of the pioneer. They would not cut the mules or plow with their horses. Their lands were enclosed by the old rigging and fences. Along in the 70's a frame house was built, but it was allowed to go almost to ruin before it was repaired. Flat rocks were placed upon the roof to keep the shingles from blowing away. The "hows" hung their trousers and vests outside on the porch. In the front of the house was a pile of chips to feed the pigs, the chickens and the cows. In 1885 Perry and Jordan bought a wagon load of rocks to put in the place of the old rigging and fences. They called the wagon never got around to the job. The old rigging and fences were still there just as they were in the 70's.

It is a little singular that but little is known about the quaint family of a remote old farm. An agent who was sent out to sell them some telephone stock ran across them. Of course the man who topped the agent off did it as a joke, for the Elliots had no telephone and didn't know what telephone stock was. But the agent was not at all agrieved. When he understood what an interesting family he had been sent out to meet, he laid his business aside and spent the entire day as the guest of the old people. He saw the horses and mules which had never been shorn, the smoke house and barns made of poles a grandstone worn to the diamond or a saucer; the old mission bell, hung high in a tree, and used by Betty to summon the boys from the field when she had their johnnie cake and bacon ready for them; the young forest trees growing right up to the house and a wonderful colony of turkeys, geese, ducks and chickens, the pride of Aunt Betty. In other words, he saw an absolute reproduction of the sort of farm and household incident to the days of the first settlers. And this was in the twentieth century.

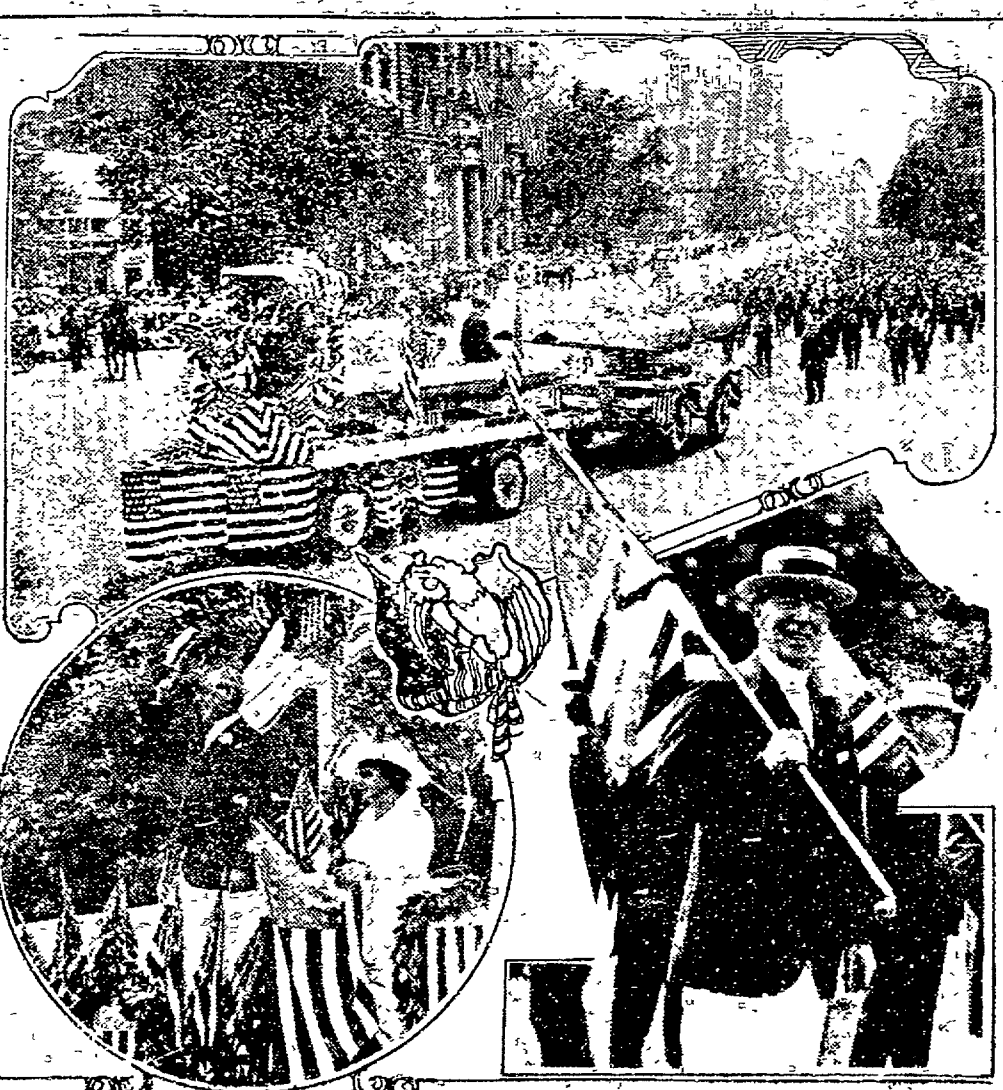

The telephone agent told his story and it wasn't long until people began to look up that wonderful Missouri family. Possibly the greatest event that ever occurred in Aunt Betty's life was an automobile ride she took last summer. She spoke of it in this way:

"I told 'em something would happen if we started out in that thing, and I wanted 'em to fetch the mules along, but they only laughed at me. Well, I got in and it went along all right until we got about ten miles out of the village when there was a funny noise for a minute or two and we stopped. The man said the engine went dead. When I said he ought've fetched the mules he didn't laugh any more, but said he wished he had. We got towed into town and I got out, and I ain't never going to ride in one of them things again. But I'd like to ride on the steam cars—a little ways, you know—just once," and there was a wistful look on the kindly old face.

In speaking about the family Jordan said:

"Maybe some folks might think our way of living was funny, but I can say this: We never had a fuss with anybody, never cheated in a horse trade, never kept a dog, never had a lawsuit, and don't know any man's coat."

PRESIDENT HEADS BIG PREPAREDNESS PARADE IN WASHINGTON

Preparedness parade on Pennsylvania avenue, Capitol in background; President Wilson carrying flag at head of the parade; President and Mrs. Wilson in the reviewing stand.

Led by the president of the United States marching on foot, Washington turned out en masse and marched up Pennsylvania avenue from the Capitol to the White House in a great demonstration in favor of national preparedness in its various forms. It was one of the grandest spectacles ever witnessed in the national capital, a great procession in which civil and official Washington was represented in numbers estimated to exceed 60,000.

IMPORTANT PLANKS OF DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM

Record of Achievement.
We endorse the administration of Woodrow Wilson. It speaks for itself. It is the best exposition of sound Democratic policy at home and abroad.

Tariff.
We affirm our belief in the doctrine of a tariff for the purpose of providing revenue for the operation of the government and unreservedly endorse the Underwood tariff laws as truly compensating that doctrine.

Americanism.
We recognize the assertion and triumphant demonstration of the indivisibility and coherent strength of the union as the supreme issue of this day in which the whole world faces the crisis of mankind's change. This is an issue of patriotism. To turn it into a party issue would be to defeat it.

Preparedness.
We favor the maintenance of an army fully adequate to the requirements of order, safety and of the protection of the nation's rights and a fixed policy for the continuous development of a navy worthy to support the great naval traditions of this nation.

International.
We hold that it is the duty of the United States to use its power, not only to make itself safe at home, but also to make secure its just interests throughout the world and both for this end and in the interest of humanity to assist the world in securing settled peace and justice. We believe that the time has come when it is the duty of the United States to join with the other nations of the world in any feasible association that will effectively serve these principles to maintain inviolate the complete security of the highway of the seas for the common and unhindered use of all nations.

Woman Suffrage.
We recommend the extension of the franchise to the women of the country by the state upon the same terms as to men.

Good Roads.
We favor national aid in the construction of postroads and roads for military purposes.

Labor.
We declare our faith in the sex man's act. We favor the speedy enactment of an effective federal child labor law and the creation of a federal bureau of labor.

Mexico.
Until by the restoration of law and order therein, and a repetition of such incursions, (border town raids), is impracticable, the necessity for their (American) military expedition, remains.

Alaska.
It is and has been the policy of the Democratic party to enact all laws necessary for the speedy development of Alaska and its great natural resources.

Territories.
We favor granting to the people of Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico the traditional territorial government accorded to all territories of the United States since the beginning of our government and we believe the officials appointed to administer the government of those several territories should be qualified by previous bona fide residence.

WOMEN GIVE OUT
Housework is hard enough when healthy. Every woman who is having backache, blue and nervous spells, dizzy headaches and kidney or bladder troubles should be glad to heed the following experience:

Mrs. Giles, Rockwell & Riggs, St. Louis, Mo., says: "I suffered from dull pains across my back and kidneys. My kidneys didn't act regularly and I had severe headaches. I didn't rest well at night and mornings I had no strength or energy. Doan's Kidney Pills made my kidneys regular in action and the backache and other pains left."

To Trouble Since.
After a lapse of over three years Mrs. Giles said: "I have been in good health since Doan's Kidney Pills cured me." Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mrs. Giles has twice publicly recommended. Foster-Milburn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

FOLDING TRAP FOR MINNOWS

Constructed of Pyralin, a Transparent Substance
James E. Logsdon, a prototype machinist employed by the Atcheson Globe has applied for a patent on a folding minnow trap that is constructed of Pyralin, a transparent substance similar to celluloid. The folding feature is new.

Logsdon's model is about twelve inches long when it is unfolded. The trap is six inches long, and a projecting cone slides back and forth in the body proper, being wholly invisible when the trap is folded. The trap, when folded, is six inches long and about eight inches in diameter, the folding feature reducing its length by one-half.

The pyralin is unusually light, but sacrifices nothing of durability. The transparency of the body affords minnows a clear view of the bait that is inside, and they can easily find their way into the trap thru an opening in a second cone that projects inwardly into the body proper, opposite the sliding cone that adds the folding feature.

VIOLIN OVER 200 YEARS OLD

Bear. Date of 1716, But Maker is Unknown.

Thornton, Ky.—Edward Hall, a farmer of Mayling, near here, has in his possession a violin made in the year 1716, making it 200 years old. The maker's name is not known, but it seems perfect in every way. It has been kept in the family from the time its manufacture up to the present time, and the owner has been offered good sums of money by showmen and historical societies for the violin, he refuses to part with it, saying he desires to keep it in the family.

ANTI AIR-CRAFT GUN

Latest Krupp Product Hurls Shrapnel Shell to a Height of Four Thousand Meters.

The Germans are using at the present time a 104 millimeter anti-aircraft Krupp gun, 45 calibers long, which sends a projectile weighing 15 1/2 kilograms, with a muzzle velocity of 800 meters, to a height of 4000 meters. It can be fired at the rate of fifteen rounds a minute. The shrapnel shell which it fires is said to burst into 625 fragments. Guns of this type, as well as those of 120 millimeters, are the ordnance which defends Ostend.

The Northville Record.

Published by NEAL PRINTING CO.

An Independent Newspaper published every Friday morning by the Neal Printing Co., at Northville, Michigan, and entered at the Northville Post Office as Second-Class matter.

NORTHVILLE, MICH., JUNE 24, 1916.

The Northville record hands Northville officials an awful jolt about the roads in that township. Part of it they deserve. We hope the record will refrain from trying out Lyon township roads for a time—South Lyon Herald.

We don't want to try out any worse roads than some we have seen, but we really would like to know if the Herald had any sinister meaning in beginning the name of this paper twice in one paragraph with a small T.

Women can't usurp all man's vacations with absolute safety. A Redford young lady undertook—not in a "usurping" way, however—to cover her dad's rural delivery mail route, with the result that the horse ran away and promiscuously distributed not only the mail but the female, the buggy and the harness.

It has been feared (?) that fire-crackers are going to be scarce and expensive this year on account of so many explosives being required to kill off people in regular warfare. Well, we can at least "foller" all we want to, since air is plentiful and cheap—as yet—in this country.

There is still one place where the ubiquitous auto can't take the place of the horse, and that is at a cavalry mount. The day may possibly come when the troopers may cavort over the field of action on motor horses, but to date the equine has the monopoly in that line.

Plymouth has a Sunshine Club. Natural material has been pretty scarce during the past two seasons, but that makes the artificial variety all the more welcome.

Somebody wants to know what has become of the old fashioned age that used to rust out and have a good time. The fact is, it is all over and has moved toward the north.

The Redford Record is a new vision to the exchange desk of this paper. It has a good name at least, although it does not give any clue to its publisher.

MONSTER FOURTH OF JULY CELEBRATION AT LAKE ORION.

The management of this popular resort is planning for the largest celebration ever attempted for July Fourth this year. Mr. Chas. M. Gerlinger, who has the affair in charge, states that never before has anything of such colossal magnitude ever been attempted at any inland resort. The day starts off with a series of motorcycle races on the steepest track ever built for racing purposes and is guaranteed to furnish sensational thrills of the thrilling variety before finished. A. J. Stewart and Marie LaGrand will make two balloon ascensions, one in the afternoon and one in the evening, each using seven parachutes, a feat usually attempted by but one artist at a time on account of the extreme danger connected with it. Two monster displays of fireworks, one on Monday evening and one on the evening of the Fourth have been arranged for. The world's greatest aggregation of vaudeville stars will hold forth in the Cartaret all day affording ample entertainment to those who desire this form of amusement. This Cartaret entertainment is new to Lake Orion this season. Michigan's famous lady band has been engaged for the occasion. Prof. Finzel of Detroit has his best orchestra at the dance pavilion.

All of the concessions will be especially decorated for the occasion. The free kitchen on the picnic grounds is at the disposal of any and all who care to make their own coffee, heat or cook any little article of food and the parking space which was crowded last year has been enlarged to accommodate another thousand cars. Over 20,000 people were in attendance last season and we predict at the lowest estimate double that this year. The new D. U. R. schedule permits your coming early and staying late. Be one of the wise ones this year, plan to spend the Fourth at Lake Orion.

CHAUTAUQUA WEEK

JULY 24 TO 28

Many notable attractions are included in the program of the Community Chautauqua, which will be held here for five days commencing July 24-28.

Of great interest will be the appearance of Master Angelo Vitale, the youngest director in the world, and his concert band. Vitale, though but a boy in his teens is a leader of recognized merit who already ranks with the master musicians.

Another feature of much interest will be the powerful lecture on "Patriotism and Pork" by Congressman George E. Gorman. "Millions of dollars are being squandered by the United States in 'pork' and in this lecture Congressman Gorman will give dramatic instances of the extent of the abuse, and will show a method by which it can be stopped. Two sessions will be held, daily during the five days of the Chautauqua, and a lecture of note will be heard on each day's program, as well as a talented musical or entertainment company. The detailed program of the five days will be as follows.

First Day.

The Hoosier Male Quartet will give the full program on the first afternoon, together with the prelude at night. The Hoosiers are one of the distinct successes of the present day. They will bring with them a concert grand xylophone, and one feature of the program will be selections on this novel instrument.

On this first night, Dr. Lucian Edgar Follansbee will be heard—a man who for years has been inspiring communities through his helpful and instructive lectures. Dr. Follansbee's subject will be "Genius and Gumption."

Second Day.

One feature of the second day's program will be the lecture in the afternoon on the "Inside of Mormonism" by Hans P. Freese, a man who became a Christian when a mere boy through the influence of his mother. Character, superstitions and religious of "An Imported American" by Robert O. Bowman, will be part of the program on the second night.

Third Day.

The third day of the Chautauqua will be "Spoken for" by Sam Jones, the older citizen in the community. "Korea," one of the greatest, most unique and most powerful evangelists that ever lived. But although dead at sea Japan what men have been due to the work of Dr. Jones (now) Sam Jones' portrait.

Fourth Day.

The fourth day will be memorable because of the appearance for the afternoon prelude and the full night program of Angelo Vitale and his concert band, and in the afternoon of Congressman Gorman "Pork Barrel" lecturer. Both these events will be notable in the life of this community.

Fifth Day.

The full afternoon program and the prelude at night will be given by the real Swiss mountaineers, who appear in their picturesque native costumes and sing their delightful folk and yodeling songs. No melody is more delightful than the tuneful yodel of the Alps, and the most beautiful of these songs will be heard on the fifth day of the Chautauqua.

A lecturer of great force and power and one that will be a fitting climax to the Chautauqua program will be given on the fifth night when Byron C. Pratt will speak on the expressive topic, "Dead or Alive."

The program of the Community Chautauqua will be a powerful, educational and inspirational force that will help greatly to advance the cause of right living and right thinking in the community as well as being a delightful entertainment. For that reason it deserves the whole-hearted support of every citizen.

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)

The topic for Sunday morning will be, "The Completed Task." Communion service follows the sermon.

Sunday school at the usual hour.

After next Sunday the B. Y. P. U. meetings will be suspended until September 1st.

The Sunday evening service will be the first of the Union meetings, to alternate between the three churches, during July and August. This Sunday evening the service will be held in the Presbyterian church. It will be under the auspices of the King's Daughters, as a response to the call of the federated churches of America for relief in the eastern war zone. These are non-combatants who justly deserve our assistance. An offering will be taken for this purpose.

FAST AUTO RUN IN AN OLDS EIGHT.

A fast run between Pittsburg, P. A., and Lansing, capital of the state of Michigan, is placed to the credit of Jimmie Schiller, of the experimental department of the Olds Motor Works in an Olds Eight. Schiller left Pittsburg at 11:30 a. m., and arrived in Lansing at 6:45 p. m., which adding an hour for the difference in time between the two cities, gives an elapsed time of 15 1/4 hours for the distance of 442 miles, including all stops. Schiller's average elapsed time was thus slightly under 30 miles an hour.

Gift Edge Gatherings.

Mrs. John Harlan spent Wednesday with her mother, Mrs. Alice Way, at Farmington.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Walters and children of Farmington spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Millard.

Miss Winifred Laing of Orionville spent the week-end with Eva Bradley. Miss Laing is a friend and classmate of Miss Bradley at the U. of M.

Wm. Harlan met with quite an accident the other day, when a cow struck his face with its head. Mr.

Harlan received a sufficient blow to break his nose.

Mrs. Barney Tuck and daughter, Helen, have been visiting in Detroit for the past few days.

Walter Meyer, who has been attending college at South Bend, Indiana, has returned home for the summer vacation.

It Will Come Back. Algy—"When I saw the guards marching past yesterday, I quite lost my head." Dora—"Don't worry, Algy. It will be no use to anyone. You are sure to get it back."

The annual picnic last Saturday at Palmer Park, Detroit, of the Detroitcessful, with the largest attendance so far in the association's history.

A number of Northville people were present, but the greater part of the assemblage was made up of former residents here, now living in the big-town.

The reunion of the class of 1912 held at Walled Lake last Saturday afternoon was enjoyed by twenty-five members of the class. However, with regrets some were unable to be present. The afternoon was spent at the Stark cottage and at six o'clock all were motored to the village and served with a bountiful repast, after which all said, "Auf wiedersehen until next year."

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor)

Morning service at 10 o'clock. It has been the custom for the past three years to observe the Sunday worship to the Fourth at July 25.
Patriotic Sunday. The service of next Sunday morning therefore will be a patriotic service. The subject of the sermon will be "What is Americanism?" This subject should be of special interest in view of the very critical conditions which exist within our nation, and the serious possibilities that await us.
The emphasis that is just now being placed on "Americanism" and the duty of every true patriot to have a clear understanding of this term, should make a discussion of it of interest to all. Every effort will be put forth to make the service of Sunday morning interesting and inspiring. Patriots of every political hue who are not attendants elsewhere, are invited.

The Sunday school at the usual hour.

Notice as to the meetings of the Christian Endeavor for the summer will be given Sunday.

Union service at 7 o'clock. The services in the evening began the Union services which will be held during the Sunday evenings of July and August. This meeting will be held under the auspices of the King's Daughters in the interest of the European war sufferers. Heart rendering appeals are being sent out to the committees of America to help in alleviating the unbelievable suffering among the non-combatants in the war, devastated lands of Europe and Asia.
Every community should be given an opportunity of helping in this great work. Every one would be glad to give generously, if they had a slight notion of the terrible suffering among the women and children of these war swept lands. Conditions are so critical that unless generous and speedy help comes thousands will starve to death. The community is urged to stand back of this very worthy endeavor of the King's Daughters and be present at the meeting next Sunday night. Be ready with a contribution for in so doing you will be actually saving lives. The Boys' Vested Choir will sing.

The Ladies Aid society will meet at the home of Mrs. C. G. Yerkes Thursday, July 6. In case it should rain the meeting will be held in the church parlors.

The Jewel Worshiper

BY VARICK VANARDY

Copyright by the Frank A. Munsey Company

He saw Crewe thrust an arm inside; but to Rickett's amazement it was a small book, bound in silver, with a locked clasp, that he selected, instead of the more valuable articles that he might have taken. Then he turned around and, holding the little book tightly in both hands, said:

"Force that clasp for me, Rickett." Bobcat did so; and Crewe, without so much as glancing again at the book, dropped it into one of his pockets. Then he returned his attention to the compartment, handling each article that he touched delicately, and restoring each to its place after he had examined it.

Presently he raised the lid of a small, oblong, silver box, and Rickett saw him take something from it; but he could not see what it was.

Bobcat parted his lips to ask a question, but he stopped, startled, without uttering a sound—for another sound, proceeding from the room by which they had entered the suite, smote upon their ears, and Crewe seized his companion by the wrist and dragged, rather than led him through the bathroom and across the dressing room into the boudoir.

There, outside, suddenly was falling the door knob; a second person was pounding upon the door itself; a voice from the opposite side of the door was crying:

"You'd better open up, Crewe. You can't make a getaway this time. We've got the house surrounded. It was unavoidable, the voice of Marline.

"So you are a stool pigeon, are you, Bobcat?" Crewe said to his companion in a voice that could not have been heard ten feet away, but which was yet distinct. Stool pigeons are the lowest criminals alive, and should be kept locked up. Who did you tip off to this play tonight?

"Baxter in Marline. Oh, for God's sake, Crewe, don't!"

"Shut up!" Crewe snapped off the lights as he spoke.

Then he moved swiftly away from Bobcat, passed into the dressing room and closed and locked the door after him. There he again turned off the lights, passed on into the bathroom, locked that door and the one beyond it, and so found himself again in the bedroom where Lorna Delorme had occupied since her arrival.

He moved quickly across it to assure himself that the door which opened upon the wide and spacious gallery was locked.

It was.

He turned the key, opened the door a crack, and listened. Then he smiled a little and unlocked the door.

Already Bobcat Rickett had admitted the officers to that other room. He could hear the policeman endeavoring to explain something, possibly the disappearance of Crewe.

And much to Crewe's surprise, he also heard the voice of Mr. Delorme. Crewe had dressed himself with great care in preparation for this very moment, which he had anticipated, and for which he had planned.

But for the absolute necessity of securing the small, silver-bound book from the safety compartment in Lorna Delorme's bedroom, he might not have undertaken it. But the book was necessary, and only an expert eye could have forced the small door behind which it was hidden.

While passing through the rooms after he left Rickett, he tore off the blouse he had been wearing.

The act disclosed a Tuxedo coat and a wide expanse of immaculate shirt-front. While he listened at the door that gave upon the gallery he picked, with a shapely finger-nail, at the upper edge of the blemish that so distinguished one side of his face.

It came loose at once, and he pulled it away altogether; for the blemish was a manufactured one, made of translucent rubber, very thin and colored with great delicacy, in exact imitation of the birthmark it was intended to represent. It was easily and readily adjustable, and even more easily removed.

He rolled it into a small compass and tucked it into a pocket of his waistcoat.

He listened again at the door for an instant, then crossed the room and disposed of the blouse behind the frame of a large painting that hung against the wall; first, however, having removed from its "swag" pocket the crush hat that it contained and the little book that he had gone there to get.

Only, had passed inside of that other room. The gallery, for the moment, was deserted.

All that he had accomplished had occupied hardly a moment. He could hear the officers rapping against the dressing-room door.

Here was his opportunity held out to him.

Birge Moreaux—he had not quite finished the restoration process, as yet—was as familiar with the interior of the Delorme mansion as with his own studio apartment at the top of the tall building on Blank Street.

He had been a constant visitor there, as a boy and man, ever since it was built. His father and Richard Delorme had been partners in many financial ventures and steadfast friends.

The threshold at which he stepped out upon the gallery was the third one from the room in which the officers and Mr. Delorme had disappeared.

Perceiving this opportunity, Moreaux glided like a ghost to the door of the next room beyond, which stood invitingly ajar, and he passed inside, closing it gently after him.

This room, which he entered, was the private working library, of the steel magnate, and Moreaux knew perfectly well that there was another way out, or it by a narrow stairway to the ground floor, where a narrow door opened upon a small entry, which, in turn, gave upon the side street and at the street-level.

The artist watched on the light. Then calmly he stood before the mirror while he applied the necessary finishing touches to his general appearance.

The shaggy, iron-gray eyebrows were moved, each place to his own straight black ones. The riotous mane of half gray hair which grew always more pompous, he now parted in the middle and combed it down smoothly toward and parted over his temples, smoothing it into place with his hand.

It was amazing what a difference these few changes made in the appearance of the man.

"There was no longer given a suggestion of 'Crewe' about him, for after all, the badly blighted face and the shaggy mane of hair and the heavy eyebrows were the chiefy noticeable individualities of the saloon-keeper; those, and the mouth filled with gold.

The two personalities might have sat in the same room together, if that were possible, without exciting comment concerning any likeness between them, and yet the actual changes were slight indeed.

Moreaux snapped off the lights and descended the narrow stairway to the small entry. The side door, which gave upon the street, he opened an inch at a time and very gently. Two uniformed policemen were standing between him and the corner of the avenue, but their backs were toward him at the moment.

He stepped outside and passed swiftly across the walk to the curb; then he coolly struck a match and applied the flame to a cigarette.

The officers both heard and saw the flare of the lighted match and turned; but Moreaux in the meantime was approaching them.

"Hello! What's up, officer?" the artist inquired of the one nearer to him.

"Burglars inside—or just a scare, maybe. Say, where did you come from?"

"Burglars?" Moreaux exclaimed. "You don't say? Why, it's Delorme's house! By Jove! I believe I'll go in."

He hurried around the corner to the avenue entrance and rang the bell. The door was opened without delay and he passed inside.

"What is the matter here, Comiskey?" he demanded of the butler who admitted him. Every servant in the house had been aroused by that time.

"Burglars, sir," was the calm reply. Comiskey would have said murderers in the same tone.

"Burglars, eh? I say, Comiskey—go into the library to the telephone and tell Central that Mr. Moreaux wants Mr. Bunting at once. Do it now. Central will do the rest. Two gentlemen will arrive together. Admit them, and tell them to go quietly upstairs. Do not forget my instructions."

Then he ascended the stairs to the gallery, arriving at the top just at the moment when Baxter, Marline, two policemen in uniform, Mr. Delorme (still wearing his hat), and Bobcat Rickett, wearing handcuffs on his wrists, issued from the door of that room wherein Crewe had been transformed to the artist Moreaux—that room where the small safe-deposit vault had been broken open, but from which, so far as could be noticed, nothing had been removed.

"We got here just in time, Mr. Delorme," Marline was saying as Moreaux entered.

rears drew nearer to them.

The Discomfiture of Three Crooks.

A block and a half is not far for two men to go who are eagerly in haste. The telephone message transmitted by Central as Moreaux had arranged, reached "Muchmore" and Bunting speedily, and they lost no time in following its directions.

Moreaux had not exchanged half a dozen sentences with Mr. Delorme before his listening perceptions heard the opening and closing of the great front door, and he knew that the two officers had arrived.

He also felt assured that they would follow the directions he had left for them with "Comiskey" and ascend the stairs slowly and quietly; and if they did that he knew that they would wait as quietly until they heard more before they would show themselves.

Mr. Delorme discovered the presence of Moreaux as soon as he came out of his daughter's room, and he went toward him eagerly and with both hands extended.

"I am so glad that you are here, Birge," he said quickly. "A most astonishing thing has happened. Burglars have been in the house—I suppose all that newspaper talk about the presents must have attracted them. We have captured one of them at least."

"How did they get inside?" Moreaux inquired. He wished to kill time until Muchmore and Bunting should arrive.

"Must a had a duplicate key to the front door," Marline announced, pushing himself forward.

"This man"—Delorme indicated the handcuffed Rickett—"insists that he was alone. But these men—Lieutenant Baxter and the officers with him—insist that there were two. Apparently nothing has been stolen. My daughter's strong box was broken open, but nothing appears to have been disturbed inside of it. A few of her smaller (old articles have been moved from the bedroom to the boudoir."

The old gentleman turned impatiently toward Baxter—and it was at that moment when Moreaux became conscious of the arrival of the other officers.

"There is no necessity for you to remain here any longer," Delorme continued. "This man seems to have been alone, and—"

Baxter interrupted further speech by stepping in front of Bobcat and shaking his fist in the man's face.

"You lie when you say that you came here alone, Rickett," he shouted. "Out with it, you. Who was your pal? If you don't tell me now, I'll wring it out of you down town. Name him!"

"There wasn't anybody with me," I was alone," was the sullen reply.

"Stand still, ain't you, Bobcat? Scoundrel of Crewe, eh?"

No, I ain't."

"Well, you'd better be. Take him out, boys? Mr. Moreaux, where'd you blow in from?"

"The street, lieutenant," Moreaux replied calmly; and then he crossed quickly to Bobcat and bent forward as if to peer more closely at the man.

Next he turned his gaze to Baxter, and there was a quizzical half smile in his eyes as he said with deliberation:

"Why, lieutenant, this burglar is a friend of yours. Artists do not forget faces—especially types, and this one is a type. I have seen you together. I am sure. Isn't he that thing which you call, in your lingo, a 'stool-pigeon'?"

He wheeled upon Mr. Delorme before Baxter could reply and added rapidly:

"I think, sir, that you should report this affair to the inspector at headquarters. It is plainly a put-up job. This man with handcuffs on his wrists was SENT here."

"Whaddya mean by that, Mr. Artist?" Marline demanded, blustering forward.

"I mean that it is quite evident to me that you two plain clothes men not only knew that this house was to be entered tonight, but it is quite likely that you SENT the burglars here yourselves for some ulterior purpose of your own." Moreaux turned his head and called out: "Lieutenant Muchmore! Bunting! Come here, please."

The two officers thus summoned apparently quickly at the top of the stairway and waited there quietly.

"Lieutenant Muchmore—" Moreaux began, but that officer interrupted him smilingly.

Not so Marline. He took a step toward Moreaux, then stopped; but he shook his fist in the air, and every one of his fiery red hairs seemed to bristle as he ground out savagely:

"I'll get your goat yet, Mr. Birge Moreaux, and when I do I'll get it good and hard. You was more'n half responsible for me bein' laid off before, and by—"

Moreaux stepped forward in front of the man.

Marline hesitated, stopped, then turned away and followed Baxter down the stairs.

Just half an hour later, that is to say, at half past two o'clock in the morning—Moreaux, alone, unaccompanied, halted in the street, beneath an arc light and, attentively examined two small flat keys that he held in the hollow of his hand. He was endeavoring to decide which one of the two he should make use of first.

One of them, he felt assured, would unlock the mystery of the lost wedding presents—but which one? Which one?

He asked himself that question over and over again as he went on his way.

CHAPTER XIV. The Jewel Worshiper.

After a rapid walk of ten minutes Moreaux came to a stop in front of a low, one-and-a-half story brick structure which once had been a stable; although it was plain that a long time had elapsed since it had been put to such uses.

The wide doors seemed to be solidly sealed; but a smaller one had been cut through it, and into the lock of the little door Birge Moreaux fitted one of the keys.

He stepped through quickly, closed the door after him, and then struck a match, and so found the switch of the electric lights.

The room in which he stood extended the entire width and half the depth of the small building. It was the studio, the workshop, of a sculptor.

Busts, figures, groups, plaques, reliefs, many of them finished or half finished and others just begun and abandoned, were everywhere, on tables, tabourettes, shelves, and even chairs. Mounds of clay waiting to be softened for use were there.

There were some valuable paintings against the walls, there were curds and decorations about the room which evidenced the fact that the sculptor—whatever the sculptor might be—did not depend upon art for a livelihood.

In the left half of the partition which divided the depth of the building a door was wide open, and through it Moreaux could see a luxuriously appointed lounging room. To the right of the door the partition was concealed by a tapestry of unquesonable richness.

Moreaux, without hesitating, stepped forward and pulled the tapestry aside, and so disclosed a second door, which was locked.

But the small object that Crewe had taken from the oblong silver box in the safe-deposit compartment of Lorna Delorme's room, and which Rickett had not been able to see, was the tiny key to the lock of that door.

Moreaux produced it, opened the door, and so disclosed another door behind it—a door which was unmistakably made of steel, and which was fastened against intruders by a combination lock.

And here Moreaux referred to the small, silver-bound book which, as Crewe, he had been at such pains to procure, and the clasp of which Rickett had forced for him in Lorna's room.

He opened it, turned the thick, gilt-edged leaves rapidly until he found the place he sought, studied the figures he had found for a moment, and then turned his attention again to the steel door, reaching out a hand toward the dial of the combination lock.

But his extended hand paused ere it touched the dial.

Moreaux bent forward and studied it attentively for several seconds.

Then, with a startled intake of his breath, he grasped the handle of the door, below the dial and turned it.

The steel door was not locked!

He pulled it open with a jerk—and then, with an exclamation of startled amazement, he sprang through the opening and got down upon one knee and beside a pigsticker figure that was lying at full length upon the rug of black velvet that covered the floor.

The prostrate, motionless, unconscious figure on the floor was Lorna Delorme. The bride of less than three days before.

Moreaux paid no attention to the glittering array of jewels that adorned the walls of that remarkable room, the walls and ceiling and floor of which were entirely covered with black silk-velvet, nor to the ebony pedestals, tall and short, with which the room was littered, each one bearing its precious burden of precious stones.

He lifted Lorna gently in his arms and carried her into the lounging room at the other side of the partition; and he saw, when he put her down upon the couch, that she had only fainted, and that nature was rapidly restoring her again to consciousness.

Knowing that she would open her eyes presently to a full realization of her surroundings, he left her and returned to the velvet room and its incalculably valuable contents, where a single cluster of electric bulbs glowed from the middle of the black-bound ceiling overhead.

FARMERS ARE NOT MARKETING WHEAT

Farmers are not sacrificing their wheat at the present low level of prices. In Michigan there is scarcely any wheat moving in the Detroit market and a light movement all last week. Other markets report a small movement from farms and there is a general feeling among farmers that prices are too low. Nations not at war just now appear to be on the verge of it and there is a very general belief that conditions justify higher prices.

ADRIAN GIVES FLAG TO 32ND INFANTRY

Adrian, Mich.—The presentation of a flag to Company B, 32nd Michigan Infantry, which was postponed from Flag Day, took place tonight at the home of Mrs. Barnum Robbins.

KAZOO FLOCK GIVE BLOOD TO SAVE PASTOR'S LIFE

Kalamazoo, Mich.—Another transfusion of blood was necessary to save the life of Rev. Earl Trosch, of this city. A week ago Rev. Trosch's life was saved by one of his parishioners who offered a quart of blood. Another member of his congregation gave a second quart. Doctors say that other operations may be necessary in order to save the pastor's life. At least a dozen members of the church have volunteered to continue the sacrifice until the pastor has recovered.

GENESEE COUNTY AND FIRST NATIONAL BANKS CONSOLIDATE

Flint, Mich.—Announcement was made late today of plans for consolidation of the Genesee County Savings and First National banks, two of the oldest banking institutions in the city. The consolidation is expected to make the new bank one of the strongest in Michigan.

50,000 HORSES WANTED FOR U. S. MILITIA

Lansing, Mich.—According to advice received by Col. John S. Bersey, adjutant general of the Michigan national guard, authorization has been given Captain C. E. Hawkins, at Kansas City, to purchase more than 50,000 horses for the militia of the country.

Blanks and specifications are to be sent to militia captains at various points in Michigan to help obtain the animals.

OHIO ITEMS OF INTEREST TO MICHIGAN READERS

FINDLAY WILL HAVE TWO MILITARY ORGANIZATIONS

Findlay.—The North Side Commercial Club will ask the city council to issue bonds in the sum of $3,000 with which to purchase a site on which to build an armory. Findlay will have two military organizations, the B. S. Scott regiment, and a mounted company that is being formed under the new law. Under such arrangements the state would give $30,000 for the construction of the armory. A band with 32 pieces is being organized here and the regimental band will be removed from Van Wert to this city within a short time.

WANT JOINT-COUNTRY CLUB

Fostoria.—"On a fifty-fifty basis" for the country club is an idea of an influential Tiffin man, who suggests a combination Tiffin-Fostoria club with 400 membership instead of 200 and the club location at a point half way between Tiffin and Fostoria on the electric car line. He indicates that Meadowbrook park pavilion would make an ideal club house.

PUT-IN BAY IS OPENED

Sandusky.—The summer season was officially inaugurated at Put-in Bay today. Boats from Cleveland and Detroit are expected to deliver large crowds Sunday. The steamer Arrow of this port will convey a big party on a "moonlight ride" to the island resort.

PASTORS FORM ORGANIZATION

Bowling Green.—Pastors of the Wood County Churches of Christ have formed an organization. Their officers are: W. C. Prewitt, Bowling Green; president; D. W. Miller, Weston, vice president; George W. Schroeder, Rudolph, secretary.

VALUE OF GOOD ROADS

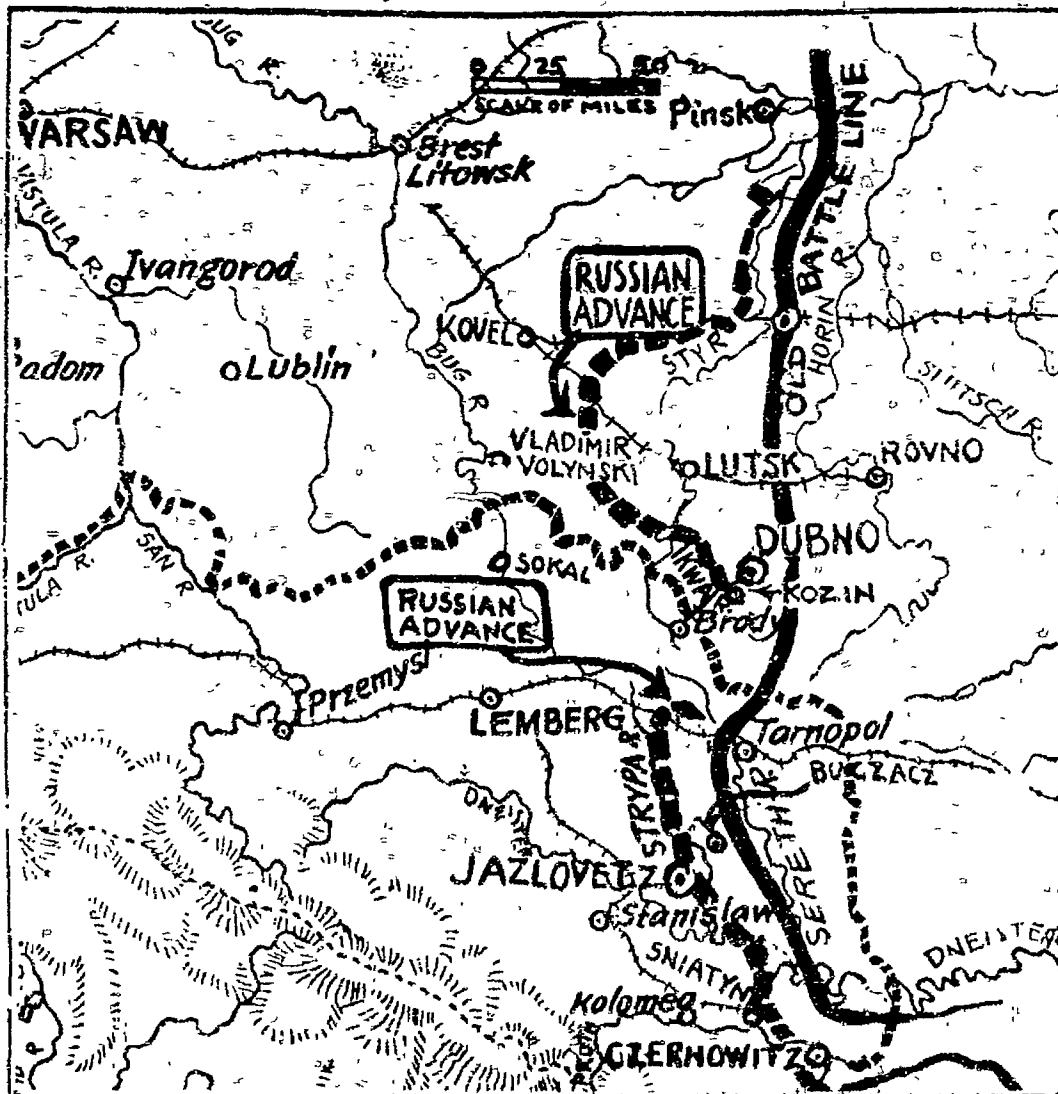

Highway Along Seacoast Would be of Immense Value, Especially During Wartime.

In the discussion about preparedness it has been prominently suggested that a belt line road be built around the United States, near the seacoast. Such a road would be of undoubted value; but enthusiasts in this direction apparently lose sight of the fundamental fact that, either for war or peace, we need good roads everywhere. Another lesson that can be drawn from the experience of Europe of late is so to build the roads that they will stand up in time of need. If our special war roads were built by the average county official they would probably not survive actual war conditions over a week—Scientific American.

He Was Practicing

A young preacher who was staying at a clergy house was in the habit of returning to his room for an hour or more each day to practice pulpit oratory. At such times he filled the house with sounds of fervor and pathos and emptied it of almost everything else. A well known bishop happened to be visiting a friend in this house one day, when the budding orator was holding forth. "Gracious me!" exclaimed the bishop, "stopping up in assumed terror, 'pray what might that be?'" "Silence, bishop," his friend replied. "That's only young D. practicing."

AUSTRIANS FLEE FROM FIERCE RUSSIAN ADVANCE

MAP SHOWING PRINCIPAL POINTS OF RUSSIAN ADVANCE

The Austrians have evacuated Czernowicz, capital of Bukovina, according to despatches to Petrograd from Bukovina by way of Bucharest. The Russian advance along the whole southwestern front continues to develop with a degree of swiftness which has astonished the country. The success of the movement thus far is looked upon as the more remarkable in view of the strong defenses which had been erected by the Austrians during the long period of preparation and their supposed resistance to any manner of assault.

MONSTER PREPAREDNESS PARADE

Will Be Held In Toledo, Saturday,
July 1st.

The Preparedness Demonstration planned for July 1st in Toledo will be the greatest manifestation of civic patriotism ever displayed in the Ohio-Indiana-Michigan region.

Three thousand Toledo business concerns, both factories and stores have decided to decorate their places of business, and the display of flags and bunting will be one of the most remarkable ever seen in the United States.

Twenty-eight thousand men and women representing every variety of civic interest, are already enrolled for the great parade. The Willis-Overland Company contingent alone will contain over ten thousand men, the workmen in the factory. All United States regular soldiers, sailors and marines on duty in Northwestern Ohio, a numerous body, will march in the parade the first time regular troops have participated in a purely civic function in Toledo. The Ohio National Guard will have about six hundred men in line, and the crew of the navy reserve ship Essex will include about three hundred more. Twenty-nine bands will furnish music for the column.

The arrangements for the parade are in the hands of a non-partisan committee, and men of all parties are co-operating to prove that preparedness is not a political issue, but a deep-founded American conviction.

Practically no opposition to the demonstration has arisen, and the citizens of Toledo are a unit in backing this manifestation of their patriotism and determination to have this nation put in a position to maintain its freedom and peace with honor.

Large delegations from other towns and cities will be present. The Modern Woodmen of America will be represented by about 3,000 men from their seven local lodges in Northwestern Ohio, and practically every other fraternal organization, uniformed or otherwise, is making arrangements to participate.

Local places of amusement are making arrangements for the entertainment of the large crowd expected for the day, which will be made a holiday in the city. The plan is to have a parade and a picnic. The steam and trolley companies are making special arrangements for traffic.

Points from U. S. Reply to Mexico

Your note threatening war unless United States troops were withdrawn is discourteous in tone and temper.

"Continuous bloodshed and disorder have marked the progress of the Mexican revolution."

"Lives of Americans and other aliens have been sacrificed."

"Vast American properties have been destroyed."

"Bandits have been allowed to roam at will without effective attempt at punishment."

"You are not sincerely trying to catch Villa."

"Outrage after outrage, atrocity after atrocity, have been recorded."

"Our frontier has been thrown into turmoil by sudden and frequent incursions into American territory depredations and murders."

"Uncivilized acts of mutilation were perpetrated."

"Since attacks on American towns the bandit leaders have been enjoying the liberty of Mexican towns."

"Some of their leaders have even received the protection, encouragement and aid of the Carranza government."

"We have repeatedly asked the de facto government to safeguard the lives and homes of American citizens."

"The United States government has given every encouragement to the pacification of Mexico."

"The United States denies your charge that it seeks territorial aggrandizement."

"The American people are interested in the de facto government."
