Chautauqua Lecturer Helps Community Get New High School Through His Power and Eloquence

BYRON C. PLATT

THE influence and power of Byron C. Platt, who will lecture on the fifth day of the Chautauqua, are illustrated by an incident which occurred when he was scheduled to speak in a town where the Superintendent of Schools had been trying hopelessly to get a High School. Mr. Platt spoke on the community's responsibility toward its young people, and that very night the County Judge told the Superintendent of Schools that he could have his High School as soon as the papers could be gotten ready. Mr. Platt is a robust, red blooded American who possesses the fluency and magnetism of downright, thoroughgoing sincerity. The subject of his lecture at the Chautauqua will be "Dead or Alive" which is an attack on ignorance delivered with all the force and power of a bold and master orator. Northville Chautauqua July 24 to 28, inclusive.

2ND ANNUAL BANQUET HIGH SCHOOL ALUMNI

HELD IN NORTHVILLE LAST FRIDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING

MORE THAN 160 "OLD-TIME" GRADS RESPONDED TO CALL.

The second annual reunion of the Northville High School Alumni association held last week, Friday, gave enjoyment to 166 guests, including graduates and their friends. The business meeting held at the Presbyterian church in the afternoon was attended by 65 men and women who prepared for a successful affair next year by the election of the following officers: R. C. Yerkes, president; Al. N. Johnson, vice-president; Mrs. C. C. Yerkes, secretary; Ray Bogart, treasurer.

The gavel used in calling the meeting to order, was made for the association from a part of the stair railing in the old school house where many had spent their school days.

A reception in the parlors of the church followed the meeting. At 6 o'clock a line of march was formed and the alumnae and friends went to Cattermole hall, where the banquet tables had been spread. The room presented a beautiful appearance with decorations of daisies, crepe paper and Japanese lanterns. Each table held favour baskets and candelabra decorated in orange and black, the alumni colors. The delicious four-course supper was served by the ladies of the Methodist Aid society.

As toastmaster, George B. Yerkes of Detroit introduced the various speakers who entertained the assemblage in a very satirical manner.

A spirit of jollity and comradeship prevailed throughout the evening and was a big factor in the success of the affair.

The same day, the last Friday in June, next year will no doubt bring an even larger crowd of people to renew former friendships.

Out-of-town alumni members in attendance were: Kato Hubbard, Lead, South Dakota; Genevieve Clark, Angstrom, Detroit; Margaret West, Dawson, Ypsilanti; Mrs. W. H. Hurton, Pontiac; Mr. and Mrs. H. E. West, Birmingham; Susie Mafra-Dandison, Novi; Arthur S. Nichols, Detroit; Edna Risner-Root, Novi; Adeline Spaulding-Knapp, T. J. Knapp, Highland Park; Leola McClelland, Pontiac; Mrs. H. F. Brown, Detroit; Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Chadwick and daughters, Ruth and Margaret; and George B. Yerkes, Detroit; Chas. Sessions, Ann Arbor; Lora Bristol and Mable Stark-Gay, Detroit; Hazel Fugman, Wixora; Bessie Seeley-LaRue, St. Louis; Sarah Cohen-Welfe, Detroit; Eva Bradley, Farmington; Ethel Lauray-Lott, Jackson; Bert and Blanche Clark, Detroit; Will Simmons, Pontiac; Guy Taft, Chas. Northrop, Jos. Tabinski, Louis Ulatowski, Nellie Wade-Woodman, Detroit; Lawrence Johnson, Plymouth; Elizabeth Carroll, Johnson of Greenville; and Nellie Gardner-Hewett of Mable Rapids.

FUNERAL OF MRS. BURGESS.

Funeral services for Mrs. Amanda Burgess, whose serious injury from a fall was noted in last week's issue of the Record, were held Friday afternoon from the Burgess residence here, with interment in the Walled Lake cemetery.

Mrs. Burgess, whose home for a large part of her life was on a farm in Novi township, purchased a home in this village after the death of her husband, Ellison Burgess, and lived here for a number of years. She injured her hip by a fall several years ago, but recovered sufficiently to be able to use crutches. Mrs. Burgess was a woman of intelligence and culture, and possessed a fine christian character and a kindly personality that brought her many lasting friendships during her long life of 92 years. She leaves two sons, Dr. J. M. Burgess of Northville and Detroit, and Charles Burgess of the latter city.

TANGO CAUSES BY BUG THAT BUZZES IN EAR

University of California Scientist Discovers Secret of the Craze for Dancing

The secret of the tango craze has been unearthed.

It's the "dance bug" and has been discovered by W. B. Herms, professor of parasitology at the University of California.

He calls it the spinose nymph. Such a curious little insect with such a peculiar little effect has never before been heard of in the scientific world.

For several years farmers of California and other subtropical parts of the United States have been bothered by the strange and unaccountable antics of their cattle. Cows were often prone to tango up a hill or perform a spirited maxwe.

Scientists were unable to explain this mystifying phenomenon until recently, when it was found that the spinose ear tick was responsible.

The tick causes a rhythmic tapping in the ear and a sort of syncope. It is covered with spines which are thin and wavy. The air circulating through these often results in vague melodic notes. The music, combined with the rhythmic tapping, caused the wild cavortings of the cattle.

The "dance bug" has thrived well in California and not only goatam, water-cattle, but poultry and chickens. Last year, man has become the prey of this evil insect and several cases have been reported to Professor Herms.

One herd at Scarborough, England which had 230 guests of Christmas day in 1917, had only one guest on Christmas day in 1918.

CHERRY-BLOWER WORKS WELL

Cleans Fruit Perfectly and Without Injury

Charles L. Lam, a Michigan man, has invented a cherry blower that promises to be a great help to the fruit growers of the country. This machine is built on the order of a fan and all the leaves and foreign material eliminated.

When the fruit comes from the machine, it is perfectly clean and presents a very attractive appearance in the cases. The machine is so constructed that the cherries are not bruised or injured in any way, coming out as perfect as they went in.

INVENTS CHINESE ALPHABET

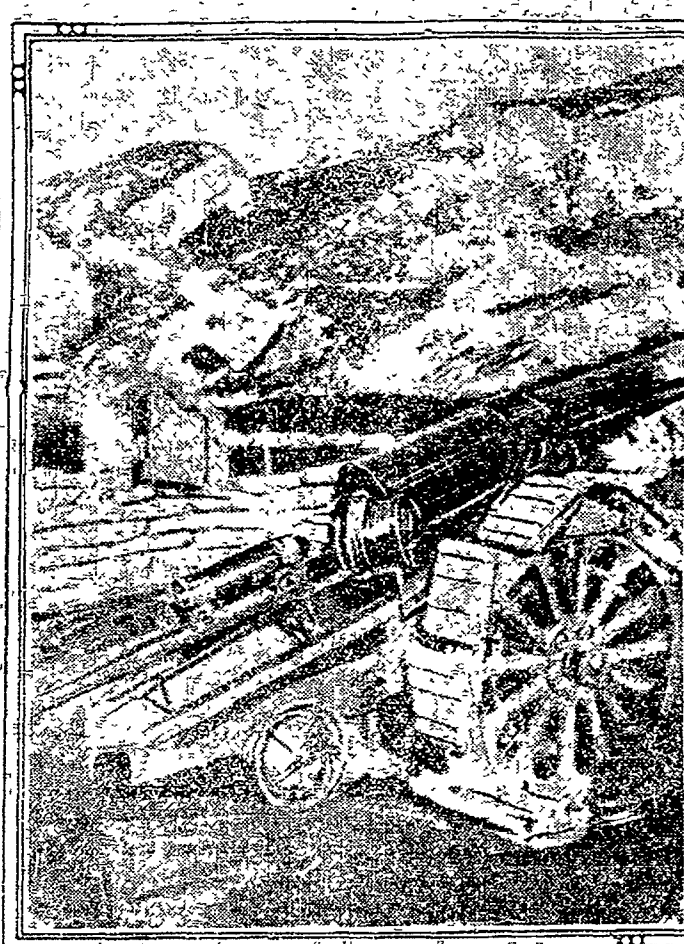

Only 55 Characters in Oriental Educator's Scheme

Dr. T. P. Lam, a distinguished Chinese scholar, sailed from San Francisco the other day, on his way to China to submit an alphabet of 55 characters intended to revolutionize the written language of China. Dr. Lam also has devised a telegraphic code of dots and dashes to be used in connection therewith.

His system, he said, proved practical in a test given in the Chinese schools. He was led to devise the alphabet, he said, because China's present written language was so cumbersome that it forced a handicap in a last roofing world. His alphabet, he said, could be placed on a linotype and adapted to the typewriter.

For six years Dr. Lam has been associate professor of Oriental languages and literature in the University of London.

"SKIN DUSTING" IS SUCCESS

Chicago Surgeon Discovers New Way to Supply Cuticle

"Skin-grafting may be revolutionized by the accidental discovery of a Chicago physician, Dr. William Held. Surgeons are already calling him the discoverer of "skin-dusting."

Dr. Held found it necessary to graft skin on the resultant wound from an operation for epithelioma, a malignant growth in the thigh of a 60 year old patient. He found that the man's children, however, were physically unable to sacrifice skin, and the patient's infection prevented the transfer of his own skin from one part of the body.

Suddenly the idea of a new achievement came to Dr. Held. He asked for a safety razor blade and with it scraped a three inch surface on the thigh opposite the wound. As the "skin dust" gathered on the scraping blade the physician sprinkled it in "islands," over the open surface of the wound.

When the bandages were removed, Doctor Held found a new skin formed.

HUGE MEGAPHONE USED BY TRAIN ANNOUNCER

Giant Horn in Washington Railway Station Measures Ten Feet Across Large Opening

A gigantic megaphone for announcing the arrival and departure of trains at the Pennsylvania Railroad's terminal in Washington, D. C. has been developed to such a degree of success that sounds emitted by it reach clearly to every corner of the huge station, despite the fact that the announcer is not required to raise his voice much higher than an ordinary conversational tone.

The megaphone which is mounted on a high wooden platform, is interesting, not only because of its gigantic proportions—for two men could crawl inside and hide comfortably—but also because it is the culmination of a great many painstaking experiments.

Probably the most important discovery in connection with all the devices tried was that a flat horn carries sound with fuller volume and less distortion than a round horn of the same general proportions. Accordingly, a huge flat megaphone was built and a number of smaller horns were secured within it, all being controlled by a single mouth piece. As it now stands it contains no inner megaphones.

Long iron wires have been attached, extending from near the mouthpiece to beyond the end of the horn. Their purpose is to prevent echoing and to purify and clarify the sound. The giant megaphone measures ten feet four inches across the large opening and eight feet in length.

SURE TRAIN STOP IS SOUGHT

Fortune for Inventor of Device That Will do the Trick.

Wanted—a cork ure, practical, automatic train stop. An independent fortune is promised for the inventor who can produce the precise device that has been demanded in the investigation of the Amherst wreck on the New York Central, and in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the New Haven wreck near Willford, Connecticut, were made to develop some means of stopping trains on signals without depending upon the engineer.

The device when worked out, it is probably will be electrical. It must exert force sufficient to shut off steam and throw the air brakes of the locomotive and be independent of the throttle lever in the engineer's cab. Numberless inventions of signals which would register in the cab have been patented, but nothing which could successfully stop the train. The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad some years ago offered a prize of $10,000 for the device, but the inventor of a successful automatic stop would be able to make many times that sum.

PUTS PLANO IN HORSE STABLE

Unstraker Saves Much Cheers and Mrs. Artz Fugera

Ray Briggs has now 32 pianos in the stable of the hoteling establishment in Warsaw, Wis. for the sole accommodation of his horses.

Mr. Briggs said, when he had a piano in a chicken coop to make a racket and so about a day or so ago he put one in his barn to soothe the cows. It made them give more and better milk, he discarded these notions, but now he has been convinced that music has a soothing effect on animals.

One of the men employed at the stable plays the piano proficiently, and as verified Mr. Briggs' statement that when the horses came in from a funeral procession, with their nerves at high tension, they immediately become calm and complacent when they hear the soothing strains of a popular waltz.

PRESIDENT AT WEST POINT DELIVERS SPEECH TO CADETS

DISINFECT POOLS PROTECT BATHERS

BATHING RESORT KEEPERS USE NEW METHODS TO ELIMINATE DISEASE PERILS

Devise Treatment for Water That is Not Harmful to Eyes.

The danger of the transmission of disease in swimming pools is becoming realized more prominently with the growing popularity of these institutions. The management of public baths in such a way as to guarantee a satisfactory degree of sanitary safety has raised a series of questions involving construction, equipment, water source and supply and personal hygiene.

Calcium hypochlorite has been highly recommended for disinfecting, and has been adopted for many pools. Its efficiency as a disinfectant for the water is not doubted, its use, however, gives rise to frequent complaints on account of the disagreeable odor attending it.

This has led to much experimentation in search of an equally efficient and less offensive substance. The difficulties here referred to are decidedly greater in connection with public water supplies. For the treatment of the latter, more than two parts per million of hypochlorite are seldom necessary.

Even with this small proportion operation of the drinking water is necessary to overcome the objectionable taste and odor. In the case of the swimming pool, this feature is aggravated by the fact that three parts of the hypochlorite in solution are necessary to oxidize the water to a point where the odor from the water into the atmosphere is not objectionable.

The advantage of copper sulphate over calcium hypochlorite as a disinfectant for swimming pools is that it does not unduly chlorinate the water. Hypochlorite owes its power to the chemical reactions involved in liberating chlorine, which it liberates into the water product copper sulphate in not in itself but in the eyes and mucous membranes, as the hypochlorite gradually liberates chlorine.

It is cheaper and has no odor. If all other conditions were equal, the fact that it would provide a great advantage. Journal of the American Medical Association.

Ex Postmaster is Inventor
C. N. Voss of Leavenworth, Kan., formerly postmaster at Leavenworth, Kan., has invented a disinfectant for swimming pools, which the United States Government has recently purchased. Mr. Voss is at present connected with the amusement company at Ottawa, Kan.

A large and happy looking crowd was made welcome in Wixom the Fourth. The oration by David Gage was fine. A ball game, athletic sports and a big dinner were some of the other features of the day.

One of the most pleasing entertainments of the summer was given last Friday afternoon by the music pupils of Miss McCullough, at the home of Wm. Chambers. Several numbers were omitted on account of sickness. One special feature of the recital was the singing by Miss Pauline Williams, a girl of 14, who has a beautiful voice for one so young. Ice cream and cake were served to about 25 guests.

The following communication was received from the Eastern Michigan Edison Company:

THE DETROIT EDISON COMPANY
13 Washington Ave., Edison Bldg Detroit, June 1, 1916

The Village Council of the Village of Northville, Michigan

Gentlemen: We are pleased to advise that this company has put into effect a reduction in rates for street lighting. The new schedule, which is in effect from May 1, 1916, is as follows:

Overhead System.

100 candle power lamps, $1.50 per mo.
250 candle power lamps, 3.00 per mo.
600 candle power lamps, 4.00 per mo.
Arc lamps, 5.00 per mo.

Underground Ornamental System.

100 candle power lamps, $2.50 per mo.
250 candle power lamps, 4.50 per mo.
600 candle power lamps, 5.50 per mo.
1000 candl' power lamps, 6.87 per mo.

You will note that the 100 candle power lamp is the smallest one listed, as has been changed for the 60 candle power lamp. It is our intention to replace the 60 candle power lamps now in service with 100 candle power lamps, as soon as enough of the latter can be purchased.

There has been a corresponding reduction in the rates for the larger sizes of lamps, especially for the 609 candle power lamp (overhead system) which has been reduced from $5.00 to $4.00 per month.

This reduction in rate will affect you in that your 100 candle power lamps (overhead system) will be reduced from $2.00 to $1.50 each per month.

We are putting this reduction into effect without asking for any renewal of contract, under our policy of voluntarily reducing rates whenever our operating costs make it possible.

Your May bill, which is attached hereto, has been figured under the new rates. The bill shows 43 250-candle power lamps (overhead system) instead of 41 lamps as heretofore. We have recently checked the number, location and candle power of all lamps by actual count on the ground, and the revised count will be used for future billing. If this revised count does not agree with your records, will you kindly advise, and we will send you a detailed list of locations and candle power.

Yours truly,
A. C. MARSHALL,
Vice-President

The Thrifty Scot
"Can you oblige me with a light?" said a Scotsman, as he bit off the end of a cigar and looked around a smoking carriage on the Great Northern Railway. One traveler produced an empty box with apologies; another said he didn't smoke and didn't carry matches.

"Can ye give a light?" repeated the Scotsman to the third, who, slightly looking out of the window. Then the Scotsman's finger went reluctantly to his own pocket. "Weel, weel," he said, "I've a light."

TANCO CAUSED BY BUG THAT BUZZES IN EAR

University of California a Scientist Discovers Secret of the Craze for Dancing

The secret of the dance craze has been unearthed.

It's the "dance bug" and has been discovered by W. D. Herris, professor of physiology at the University of California.

He calls it the spinose nymph such a curious little insect with such a peculiar little effect has never before been heard of in the scientific world.

For several years farmers of California and other sub-tropical parts of the United States have been bothered by the strange and unaccountable antics of their cattle. Cows were often prone to fan up a hill or perform a spirited maxie.

Servants were unable to explain this mystifying phenomenon until recently, when it was found that the spinose ear tick was responsible.

The tick causes a rhythmic tapping in the ear and a sort of syncope. It is covered with spines which are thin and wiry. The air circulating through these often results in vague melodic tones. This music, combined with the rhythmic tapping caused the wild cavortings of the cattle.

The dance bug has thrived well in California and not only contaminates cattle, but poultry and chickens. Lastly, man has become the prey of this evil insect and several cases have been reported to Professor Herris.

One hotel in Scarborough, England, which had 232 guests on Christmas day in 1913, had only one guest on Christmas day in 1914.

CHERRY BLOWER WORKS WELL

Clears Fruit Perfectly and Without Injury

Charles Lam, a Michigan man, has invented a cherry blower that promises to be a great help to the fruit growers of the country. This machine is built in the order of a fan-jug, mill, etc. It is run through all the leaves and foreign material eliminated.

When the fruit comes from the machine it is perfectly clean and presents a very attractive appearance in the cases. The machine is so constructed that the cherries are not bruised or injured in any way, coming out as perfect as they went in.

INVENTS CHINESE ALPHABET

Only 55 Characters in Oriental Educator's Scheme

Dr. T. P. Lam, a distinguished Chinese scholar, sailed from San Francisco the other day, on his way to China to submit an alphabet of 55 characters intended to revolutionize the written language of China. Dr. Lam also has devised a telegraphic code of dots and dashes to be used in connection therewith.

His system, he said, proved practical in a test given in the Chinese schools. He was led to devise the alphabet, he said, because China's present written language was so cumbersome that it proved a handicap in a fast moving world. His alphabet, he said, could be placed on a Linotype and adapted to the typewriter.

For six years Dr. Lam has been associate professor of Oriental languages and literature in the University of London.

SURE TRAIN STOP IS SOUGHT

Fortune for Inventor of Device That Will do the Trick

Wanted—a cock-sure, practical, automatic train stop. An independent fortune, it is estimated, awaits the inventor who can produce the precise device that has long been demanded. In the investigation of the Amherst wreck on the New York Central, and in the report of the Interstate Commerce Commission on the New Haven wreck near Millford, Conn., railroads were urged to develop some means of stopping trains on signal without depending upon the engineer.

The device, when worked out, in all probability will be electrical. It must exert force sufficient to shut off steam and throw the air brakes of the locomotive and be independent of the throttle lever in the engineer's cab.

Numerous inventions of signals which would act in the cab have been patented, but nothing which will successfully stop the train. The New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad some years ago offered a prize of $10,000 for the device, but the inventor of a successful automatic stop would be able to make many times that sum.

There is a rat in the home of Mrs. M. Huddle of Belvidere, N. C., that keeps all the cats napping. Mrs. Huddle had seen the rat run by the cat-purse so many times without attracting the cat's attention that she caught the rat in a trap and put the cat and rat in a cage together to see if her cat really meant to be lazy.

Just as the cat started out for the rat, the cunning old rodent stood up on his hind feet in one corner of the cage and began to do funny tricks with his paws and mouth. When the cat was within about two feet of the rat, she stopped and mewed and then fell fast asleep.

Another cat was dropped into the cage and she did likewise. This queer rat, conquered every cat that was trapped in the trap, and he soon had half a dozen of them lying about in the cage all seemingly enjoying a most peaceful sleep.

While Mrs. H. was experimenting the rat made his escape from the cage. He has been looked for several times, but has not been found.

PLAYS PIANO IN HORSE STABLE

Undertaker Says Music Cheers Animals After Funeral

Ray Eggs has placed a piano in the stable back of his undertaker's as a convenience for the horses.

Mr. Eggs said, when he read a few months ago about a phonograph being used in a chicken coop to make chickens lay and also about a dairy woman who put one in her barn to soothe the cows and make them give more and better milk, he decided these reports, but now he has been convinced that music has a soothing effect on animals.

One of the men employed at the tables, plays the piano proficiently, and he verified Mr. Briggs' statement that when the horses came in from a funeral procession, with their nerves at high tension, with their nervous at high tension, they immediately become calm and complacent when they hear the soothing strains of a popular waltz.

The Northville Record.

Published by NEAL PRINTING CO. An Independent Newspaper published every Friday morning by the Neal Printing Co. at Northville, Michigan.

NORTHVILLE, MICH., JULY 7, 1916.

WHY NOT "SAFETY FIRST"?

Attention of the Record has been called to the fact that in spite of the state law to the contrary, children under the legal age for such avocation are habitually permitted to drive automobiles in Northville and vicinity; that our speed regulations are frequently violated, particularly on the side streets, and that a few of our motorists are in the habit of rushing cars around street corners without any warning signal.

MORE ABOUT THOSE ROADS.

On a recent trip to Novi, Northville and home again, a distance of about 24 miles we found three miles of good roads in Lyon township, and about one mile of good road in Northville township and we now believe the editor of the Northville Record used very mild language when he wrote the following concerning the Novi roads.

"The poorest lot of highway corn mashes in Michigan doubtless live in Novi. For want of a little scraping the worst roads in the state prevail all over the town to the detriment of farm property and the health of the South Lyon Herald."

There are not many roads in the state that are better than the Novi roads, and it is not surprising that the Novi roads are the envy of all motorists.

It is not surprising that the Novi roads are the envy of all motorists. It is not surprising that the Novi roads are the envy of all motorists.

Here's a suggestion for the pessimist to worry over. When Detroit has spread out far enough to meet all the suburban towns that are spreading out towards it, and then the unbridled spreaders spread all over the rest of the state where in thunder are we going to grow garden sass and taters and wheat and all the rest to feed all of us?

There is talk among the scientific agriculturists that the present year, 1916, is in danger of being a "cornless year" like 1816, on account of the unfavorable weather conditions. Universal cornlessness would certainly be bad for chiropodists and Johnny cake lovers, especially.

The Redford Record goes the usual form one better and wishes for a newly married couple "a long life of wealth and happiness," thereby suggesting the inference that the two are not synonyms, popular belief to the contrary notwithstanding.

And some folks try to make us believe that the human race is deteriorating! Listen to this: Brighton is the proud possessor of a 16-year-old boy who stands six feet four inches in his stocking feet and weighs 212 pounds.—South Lyon Herald.

Can it be possible that the rise in the price of shaves is due to the fact that one of the presidential nominees wears whiskers?

Editor Hisey of the Wayne Weekly has taken a life partner. Congratulations hereby extended.

The Sunday School at 11:30. The Superintendent and his helpers will do their best to welcome you.

At 7 o'clock a union service of special interest to everybody. The music will be an important part of the service. Can you sing? Do you enjoy it? Come and help. Rev. J. E. Webber will preside.

The Ladies Aid society will meet at the home of the president, Mrs. Cobb, on Grace ave., Tuesday afternoon, everybody is wanted at this meeting.

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor) The topic for Sunday morning will be "The Party of the First Part and the Party of the Second Part in the Plan of Salvation."

Sunday school follows the morning sermon.

The Union service Sunday evening will be held in the M. E. church. Rev. Webber will preach. Come if it is hot.

Just a word of caution. During July and August Christians should look after their spiritual interests very closely. These two months are very trying and are sure to reveal all shams or adulterations. Don't lay your religion away for safe keeping. Many have done this to their sorrow. Keep it right with you everyday. Constant exercise is the only sure preservation. Beware of any feeling of indifference regarding church services. It's one of the symptoms of decay.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastors) Morning service at 10 o'clock. The Summer Communion of the Lord's Supper will be observed. All members of the church should avail themselves of this sacred service.

To us will be so the long during the months of July and August.

The Sunday school will meet as usual.

The Union evening service will be held in the M. E. church at seven o'clock. The subject, "The Normal and the Supernatural Considered."

These Union services should not furnish an excuse for remaining idle, but the rather they furnish an opportunity for the Christian forces to become better acquainted with each other and to form a more effective unity in the work which all are trying to do.

A very generous offering was taken for the War Sufferers at the meeting last Sabbath evening. Had the attendance been as good as the offering.

PERE MARQUETTE Why the Road "Went Broke"

The Pere Marquette Railroad is, I believe, after two years' study of the situation, not in bankruptcy for the reasons commonly accepted by those who have not given serious thought to the matter, but for the very plain and simple reason that it has not been able to earn enough during its existence to pay its way because of—

First, Light traffic density, and Second, Low rates. Light traffic density—While the Road serves considerable territory which is well settled, and in those portions of the State the density of traffic is fairly heavy, half of its mileage is in branch and sidelines, most of which run through sections but sparsely settled. One half brings in three-fourths of the passenger revenue, for example, while the other earns but one-fourth.

The Pere Marquette is not a trunk line with an abundance of heavy traffic and long hauls. It is rather an originating and distributing line for other roads which handle the through business. For this reason it is impossible for it to make the same showing as trunk line roads operating in this territory.

Low rates—The freight rates in the section in which Michigan is located, are the lowest of any in the United States, the average being but six mills per ton mile. In other words, the Pere Marquette carries a ton of freight on the average one mile for six-tenths of a cent, or three miles for less than the value of a two-cent postage stamp.

Before the system was organized, the lines which were put together to form it were earning an average of nine mills per ton mile, but the decline of the lumber industry, which furnished about one-third the traffic at fairly good rates, forced the Road to look somewhere else for business, and now it is handling a third of its tonnage in coal, which carries a low rate. The average rate in Michigan, already low because based on the through rate from Chicago to New York, was reduced 33 1/2% through this purely economic change.

Passenger rates were also lowered through legislative action in 1907 by the same percentage.

While the earning power of the railroad was being cut one-third, operating costs were going up, taxes, materials and supplies, wages, in fact everything the Road used or had to have jumped in price. The "high cost of living" hit the Pere Marquette as well as everyone else.

To me, it is no wonder that the Road "went broke." It would have been a miracle if it had not. Like any other business when "it costs more than it comes to," there is bound to be trouble.

Freight rates have been advanced somewhat (about 5%), and interstate passenger fares increased to 2 1/2 cents per mile. These are steps in the right direction and have helped the situation. The next step should be to increase passenger rates within the state to 2 1/2 cents to conform to the interstate rate.

What the Pere Marquette needs is business to support its mileage and fair rates for handling it. Then it will pay its way and stay out of bankruptcy, and be in a position to give more and better service to the people of Michigan.

The Jewel Worshiper

BY VARICK VANARDY

Copyright by the Frank A. Munsey Company

"But—why need you leave me? It is almost morning now. See—it is nearly half past three."

"I MUST leave you, Lorna."

"Where are you going?"

"I am going to make one more effort to recover the lost jewels," he replied gently.

"Oh, if you only could! And yet I don't think care—near. I have been all my life a jewel worshiper. It is a mania, and it is horrible! I have sat in that black room by the hour, all alone, gloating, gloating, gloating, until every fiber in me burned and glowed just like the stones I worshipped. But all that is past now, thank God! Oh, thank God for it!"

Moreaux picked up his hat.

Lorna sprang from the couch and went hastily to him, resting her hands upon his shoulders, and with her beautiful face dangerously near to his; and he pushed her away from him, almost roughly.

"Birge," she said quickly, but with conviction, "next to Jerry and Papa, I love you more than anybody in the world."

A moment later that Birge Moreaux was again in the street.

CHAPTER XV.

The Third Key

His errand, then, took him to that part of the city which is known as Greenleaf, where he found a house at Charles street, which must be his home.

He opened the outer door with an old-fashioned key which he had had taken from the pocket of the sleeping Suidahr in the room over the saloon down at Crewe's.

He had for a long time had the impression in his mind that the key that went with the three of the three keys that Christy secured for him. The procurement of that impression long ago had been a mere matter of expediency, when the opportunity had offered itself to secure it.

Inside the house it was then nearly four in the morning. He ascended to the top floor and halted before a door which was securely fastened with a Yale lock, and the sound of the key fitted it perfectly, and he passed inside the room.

Every characteristic of the juggler was visible there—implements and various paraphernalia of his trade, Oriental ornaments and curios, odd weapons, and a number of articles that were entirely foreign to Moreaux.

He paid little heed to any of them beyond a mere glance, but his eyes roved rapidly from place to place, seeking the most likely place for the stolen jewels, for a precious trinket with Lorna and her statement that the man to whom she had given the package was an expert jeweler.

More than likely the Court Square was the only place at that location where a face at least she did not know.

Nevertheless the search was not a simple one.

Suidahr was crafty and shrewd. Where would a man who was both crafty and shrewd be most likely to conceal such small articles as the lavastone, the tiara, the bandeau, and the two bracelets?

We need not describe the search more than to say that within a short time the interior of that room was in a state of utter confusion, for as he searched various articles he hustled each one into the middle of the floor, lest he waste moments in searching them a second time.

A leather case, containing an E-flat cornet, remained when it seemed to Moreaux that he had examined every thing else that was there; and—well, he found what he sought, tightly wedged in the bell of the cornet, and covered by the soft cloth which was kept for polishing the instrument.

Did he take those jewels away with him? Not a bit of it. He had made a promise to two certain men of his acquaintance, and Moreaux believed in keeping his word.

He replaced them in the bell of the horn and returned that to its case. Then, leaving the room still in disorder, he left the house, hurried to the elevated station at Eighth street, and traveled as quickly as possible to police headquarters.

"I wish to see Captain Muchmore and Detective Bunting as soon as possible," he told the man in charge of the desk at the bureau. "If you can communicate with either of them by telephone or otherwise—"

"Muchmore is asleep on the coach in the skipper's room right now," the lieutenant at the desk interrupted him. "You are Mr. Moreaux, I believe?"

"Yes."

"It was late when Muchmore got in, and he had to be here early in the morning," said the lieutenant, and he turned to the skipper's room.

possibly telephone to him—that you suggested that you would."

Moreaux was already moving toward the door of the inspector's private office. "Thank you," he said over his shoulder and passed inside.

"Here are two keys, Muchmore," he said when the captain was aroused. "The brass one fits the door of number—Charles street. The flat one unlocks the door nearest to the top of the second flight of stairs. Inside of that room, in a corner near the window, is a leather case containing an E-flat cornet, and in the bell of that horn you will find the missing jewels. You had better send for Bunting, and go there without delay."

"Good gracious, Mr. Moreaux! How in the world—"

"Wait, please. I have not finished—and never mind how."

"Very well, sir. But I'll take off my hat to you if this is correct."

"It is correct, as you will discover. Now listen! When you have recovered the jewels make a list of them and bring them here. Then at eleven o'clock, or shortly after—before twelve, certainly—go to Crewe's. If Crewe is not there—but he probably will be—ask for Christy for the key to the room over the saloon, where Suidahr is now, and will be there, a-leep."

"What a monkey! There is one more thing I do not want Suidahr to find and presented, but I do want him to be sent out of the city, and out of the country, also, I want you and Bunting to get the credit for this affair as I promised."

"I'll try to do it, Mr. Moreaux. If you will go personally to the commission and prefer the request that I have made, I feel sure that he will grant it. But I want you to freighten the life out of Suidahr, so that when he is sent away he will never attempt to return to this country. Can you do that?"

"Can I? Say, you watch my smoke! What about Crewe in this affair?"

"This about Crewe, Captain Muchmore. Without his aid we might never have recovered the lost jewels. I will say that much and no more in regard to his connection with the affair. But you know that it is a principle of his not to permit an article to be made in his place, and if he is sent out of the country, he will be sent away in regard to that, for he is to be assumed that he will betray others in the same trade. I happen to know that he is as anxious to rid the commission of Suidahr as we are."

"And the jewels? What is to be done with them?"

"After you have done your duty to your chief, and to the commission, take them to Mr. Richard Delorme, and tell him how and where they were found. My name need not be mentioned—nor Crewe's. You understand?"

"Perfectly, Mr. Moreaux."

Moreaux returned for Lorna at eight o'clock, took her to breakfast, and then to the train for Buffalo, for he had telegraphed to Fitzgerald Beverly as soon as he left police headquarters.

"Lorna," he said to her when they were about to part, "you need confess to nobody but your husband. Your father need never know, and it is better that he should not. The man to whom you gave the package to mail was a professional thief who was sent to your wedding reception for a special purpose."

"Beside being a thief, he is also a sleight-of-hand performer—a juggler. He gives lessons in the art. Jerry Beverly, your husband, has been one of his pupils; his friend Ross MacGregor has been another. They have studied it, apparently, merely for the pleasure it could afford them in entertaining their friends."

"Young men are fond of doing such things. But, nevertheless, for a time, I was not sure that either Jerry or young MacGregor might not be jewel worshipers, too—and I was not entirely sure that you were."

"Never again, Mr. Moreaux," she replied with a shy smile. "Oh, how can I thank you?"

"By being the happiest little wife in the world, and by making Jerry the happiest of husbands," was the quick reply. And then the train began to move.

Crewe was behind his bar, at 11:45 that forenoon, when Muchmore and Bunting entered the place in South Fifth Avenue.

"I will go up-stairs with you," he announced when told of their errand; and he led the way in fact.

Suidahr was still asleep, but a few heartbeats betrayed him, and he sat up, rubbing his eyes sleepily. Muchmore held out his hands, containing the missing jewels, and Suidahr stared at them for a moment.

terror. He began instantly an attempt to explain how he came by them, but Crewe stopped him.

"You are not to be arrested and imprisoned, Suidahr," he said coldly. "You are to be sent out of the country, never to return, so you need not try to lie out of it. There is no occasion for that. There is a ship that starts for Italy this afternoon. From Genoa you can get a P. and O. steamer for Bombay. If you ever show up in this country again you will be locked up in it, take it from me."

That is all.

The records show that Baxter and Marline were both dismissed from the force, but whether because of the specific acts in association with Robert Rickett, or because of an accumulation of misdeeds of like character, and worse, cannot be said.

Late that same evening Birge Moreaux called upon Mr. Richard Delorme at his home, and was properly amazed to hear that the lost jewels had been returned, and just how, and when, and where they were recovered, and the old gentleman concluded his tale by saying:

"I telegraphed the good news to Lorna, at once. And say, Birge, the remarkable thing about it all is that the cameo brooch was with them. Lorna will be delighted."

[THE END.]

Whisky has caused many a man to go to work—in order to get the price.

Forty-one

By EVELYN GILL KLAHR.

Copyright, The Frank A. Munsey Co.

Mr. Johnson Bennett nodded to himself most hearty approval of the young man who had just left his office.

He had seen to it personally that young Chapwell be promoted from his position in the basement of the Johnson Bennett department store to be from Walker of Fifth street on the floor.

He knew, too, that young Chapwell would no longer have a longer long anywhere, for that matter, on his persistent upward climb. It would be long before he was buyers, nor would he stop there, either.

Young Chapwell, too, was confident of all this, and more, as he walked home that evening to his boarding house.

But that did not in the least interfere with the fact that his present position was very good, and shows that couldn't be carried in a heart without making it swell somewhat.

But what is the use of good news unless there is some one to whom to tell it?

That's what young Chapwell thought. So he started out early next morning, that he might stop and tell Kittles about it.

Kittles, of course, was already in the little antique shop.

He was going the place this morning sweep when young Chapwell arrived, bustling up a little of the flour dust from under carved tables, and from his cardboard boxes.

"You don't tell me? Kittles exclaimed, though his words, as he looked at young Chapwell's new, bright, clean, brought to New York exactly the same resplendent light that years ago, back home, had been so concerned about old lady Cooper's silk coat or Madam Picken's new banyan."

"You don't tell me? Why it don't seem more than a day ago since you was an independent, upish little chap, just starting in business as a cash-boy. You're like Mr. Briggs, back home. He started out sweepin' up in Al Hastings's feed and grain store. That was fifteen years ago. Now he's got a third interest in the store. Where're you going to stop?"

He beamed affectionately on the youth and then added: "Bet you'll go and get married now."

Young Chapwell regarded Kittles with candid, boyish eyes.

"And oh, what a girl! Sweeter and younger and dearer than ever he had dared to hope! The dressiest and most coiffured ladies on the floor became nonentities beside her in her plain little dark blue serge with its white collar."

But the morning wasn't offering him leisure to marvel at his miracle. Indeed, that very moment there entered a stout, peremptory patron with three snobbish-looking misses in her charge.

"Forty-one!" he called.

She looked at him but made no move. Apparently she had forgotten her number. Poor little thing! She didn't belong in a place like this, anyhow.

He motioned for her. Her eyes opened a little wider, but still she did not come. He motioned again, and this time she came, a deep flush mounting to her cheeks and a queer, little one-sided smile on her lips.

"Did you want me?" she asked.

"This lady will show you what you want, madam. The special sample suits? Right over there."

A few minutes later he made a point of passing that way again to see how she was making out, and was tenderly amused to hear how bravely she was recommending the garments in Miss Murdock's own special manner.

"That fits you lovely. Perfectly lovely, lady. Believe me, madam, I'd never want you to take it if it didn't."

Presently Miss Murdock, a blue velvet costume thrown over her arm, came back to the glass-case of the expensive suits, gave a bewildered glance round, caught sight of Forty-one with her customers, gasped, and said—

"Oh, my glory!"

It irritated him exceedingly to see how she stood and stared at Forty-one. The girl was going splendidly, young Chapwell told himself. And suppose she didn't make a sale?

What of it? Murdock needn't think she could get naggy about it. She'd better be careful!

When the peremptory motion and the three snobbish misses left without saying a word to him, he was left to give her a friendly smile. She was standing and looking a little dejectedly at the array of suits displayed over chairs.

"That's all right," he assured her kindly. "Bring 'em up and get ready for the next one. Better look next time."

A few seconds later, from another part of the floor, he observed at the rear of Miss Murdock as he saw her join Forty-one and talk long and excitedly with her.

"She'd better let her alone," he muttered to himself.

Then he saw Miss Murdock begin to explain to her about charge accounts and credit slips, and felt glad for her.

But when shortly after, that head a body motioned to him that the young man who had one of the best customers, and many seasons had often bought as many as four suits in one afternoon, why then, he couldn't even trust himself to reply.

It was surprising how many opportunities the day offered for talking with her.

And weren't they having a good day of it? He could scarcely trust himself to answer that.

Their relations had traveled so amazingly for this day, with only trifles and smiles and a safe handling of words for impressions, that he was awed, with the wonder of it, and, consequently, more and more concerned over her white dress.

"She's not used to it," he thought. "Poor little kid! And just as soon as I decently can—"

He found that he wasn't the only one that kept watching her.

During the day he saw the saleswomen in little groups staring at her, and was annoyed with the curiosity or jealousy, or whatever it was, that prompted it.

He found himself under observation, too; and more than often met stares that were curious and amused.

For himself, he didn't mind—he had encountered a little of that every time he had gone to a new department—but he was impatient for Forty-one's sake.

The worst thing of all happened right after lunch. He had felt, rather than seen, a new epidemic of excitement suddenly spread over the department, and his eye, searching the cause, had found Mr. Bennett himself, standing there on the floor, staring, staring at Forty-one.

Whether the girl was aware of it or not couldn't be told, for she went right on showing twelve dollar suits to an undecided, shabby, middle aged customer.

Young Chapwell walked away with an angry scowl.

Bennett himself! Bennett, Bennett, who owned the whole place! He didn't pretend to understand, but he didn't like it!

He wished he could take her away that very evening—but he supposed people had to know each other a few days before that sort of thing.

He begrudged even those few days. Then when closing time came she sought him out to say "Good-by"; and that, he knew, must be quite a nearly new one.

"Good-by," he said; and hoped he knew how much more than "Good-by" he was really saying.

She took a deep breath and smiled up to him. "Good-by! Haven't we had a glorious day?"

Then she was gone, but he knew that she did know.

And all the way home he was wearing vivid, wonderful dreams that came more real every minute.

So he stopped in at Kittles's dusty, cluttered store, this time not because Kittles was a good neighbor, but because he wanted the dusty contents of the store held for him a new and mysterious—things that helped make a home.

Kittles shook a coquettish finger as he noted Chapwell's new interest.

"Ah! You ARE going to get married, aren't you?"

gave her a third interest in the store on her eighteenth birthday, and besides when her mother died she got a fortune which she couldn't spend if she was to take, all her time to it."

He remembered now, he had pictured her ecstasy over the tea-set—she, who could have bought out Kittles with a little of her nose change!

"She'll think she's dreaming fairy stories!" he quoted himself bitterly.

None of these excuses did he make even in his own heart.

With a dull apathy he remembered the gut mirror and the work-box and the tea-kettle.

He remembered, too, the veneered mahogany rocker at Kittles's—the one that was to have stood by the window.

"That night after supper he walked wearily around to Kittles's to tell him not to save the rocker.

So immersed was he in his heart-aching gloom that he didn't hear his landlady from her doorway call, "Hi, Mr. Chapwell!"

Nor, of course, her subsequent assurance to the shy young girl in dark blue who stood on her doorstep, "Hurry on, miss! You'll catch him easy!"

But it was not easy to catch him, though the girl in dark blue hurried and hurried and hurried.

Now and then when the passers-by were not noticing too much, she took little running steps, but even then she did not overtake him until he had actually turned in Kittles's door.

She slipped in the door, too, and stood within, leaning against it, too breathless for the moment to speak.

"I thought I'd never catch up," she gasped, her boyish eyes smiling into his.

Speechless, he stared back at her. She went on.

"I wanted to, apologize for yesterday—that trick I played—but I couldn't do it in the store in front of every one. Could I? So I got your address from the manager, but when I got there you'd just left, and you couldn't turn over to look back, or slow down, or anything. I thought I'd never catch up!"

Then Kittles, playing chair to a woman, customer in the rear of the store, turned and saw them.

"Best if there be an antelope!" he exclaimed in delighted surprise.

The feline customer and came forward, nudged with business-like politeness to the girl, and then spoke confidentially to young Chapwell.

"Now, look here," he said, "you know that your young lady's going to buy for your young lady? Well, I got a customer back here that wants it bad. Wouldn't care to give it up, would you?"

"She can have it."

Kittles's face dropped with disappointment.

"But I told her she couldn't!"

"She can have it," young Chapwell repeated. "I've decided not to get it."

"But I want you to have it," Kittles persisted. "Even if you ain't got the money now, it's all right."

"No—no," young Chapwell began to object, but Kittles wouldn't let him do it. He returned back to his woman customer.

"I'm going to hold it for you," he warned young Chapwell.

The young girl drew a bit nearer to the dusty oval table and to young Chapwell, a little of the gay dancing and the brightness gone now from her eyes.

"I wish you'd let me buy it for her," she begged.

"Don't!" she stopped her, sharply.

The girl's mouth drooped with her hurt.

"I know," she said, "that you're awfully put out about yesterday, and I'd like the chair to be a peace offering and a—sort of thank you for the awfully nice time I had yesterday."

She looked at him anxiously. "You ARE cross, aren't you?" she said.

He shook his head. No, he wasn't cross.

He would have answered if he could.

"Of course, I shouldn't have done that yesterday," she admitted. "But it WAS fun, selling things, and I've always wanted to. I think it's in my blood. You see," she explained simply, her boyish frank eyes upon his until they gave back to him for the moment the strange illusion that she was again Forty-one, some one of whom he might take care and make happy with pink and gold tea-sets and mahogany rockers—

"You see," she was continuing "when my father met my mother, she was clerk in a dry-goods store and he was in a grocery. I was born above a little five and ten, the first store my father owned. And we'd never in this world be where we are now if my mother's brother hadn't died in Alaska and left us some gold—that and father's nerve and luck."

"And waitin' on trade is in my blood just as some folks have rheumatism and others natural piety. And Paris and check-books can't take it out, either. I'm more Forty-one than you'd think. And there are heaps of things I've always wanted to do—she drew little circles on the dusty onyx as if to indicate the heaps—"and I couldn't do them. I don't know just why, except that I couldn't."

"No one expected me to, because I'm an heiress person. And then yesterday when you called me it suddenly seemed as if there was one thing I wanted to do that I could do. You made it possible for me to do it. And we did have a good time, didn't we?"

He didn't answer.

"Didn't we?" she persisted.

"Yes, we managed to get out."
