NORTHVILLE BUSINESS CHANGES HANDS

THE MCKAHAN GARAGE PURCHASED BY L. L. WEST OF NOVI AND ROY ROYS OF PLYMOUTH.

One of Northville's important enterprises changed hands Monday when the McKahan garage business in the Lockwood block was sold to Lee L. West of Novi and Roy Roys of Plymouth. Mr. West has been for years one of the best known prosperous farmers of Novi township, and for several years past has been sales agent in this section for the Dodge automobile. He will now have his sales headquarters and service station here, in addition to the regular garage business for all cars.

Mr. Roys, a master mechanic, from Plymouth, will have charge of the repair work for the company which will be known as the Northville Motor Sales Co.

Horace Boyden, who has been connected with the Record for the past six months, will have charge of the office.

The headquarters of the McKahan Fuel & Ice Co. will be moved to its old stand in the office of Capt. Noble on Center street.

THE NORTHVILLE CHEMICAL COMPANY

NEW AND PROMISING INDUSTRY QUIETLY ESTABLISHED HERE SOME MONTHS AGO.

Northville has a new industry of which perhaps many of our residents are as yet ignorant, or but vaguely aware, and yet it has been established for several months and is already doing a fine and increasing business. This is the Northville Chemical Co. of which Langfield & Son are the proprietors.

Mr. Langfield came here a couple of years ago from Detroit and purchased the Thornton property at the corner of Rogers and Mill streets, beginning and carrying out at once extensive improvements on the house and grounds. Mr. Langfield is a practical chemist, formerly employed at the Farke Davis plant, where the son is still connected with the private formulae department.

At the laboratory on his premises, Mr. Langfield manufactures and puts up an exclusive line of toilet articles and household remedies, which are commanding excellent sales, increasing as the high class of the products becomes known through use. The industry already bids fair to become one which may be a source of local pride and industrial importance.

Mr. Langfield and family have already become "acclimated" here, to the pleasing extent that they consider our pretty village one of the most desirable places of residence possible to find.

GARRICK THEATRE, DETROIT.

"Katinka," last season's sensation in New York, will be presented at the Garrick theatre, Detroit, for one week beginning next Monday evening, in exactly the same superbly sumptuous style that characterized its engagement of a solid year on Broadway.

"Katinka" is a musical play, which has eclipsed in popularity the two previous successes of these authors, "The Firefly" and "High Jinks."

The plot of the play, taking the personage as it does through Russia, Turkey and Vienna, offers unusual opportunities for rich and elaborate stage settings, and for gorgeous costumes. The play tells the story of the little Russian maiden, Katinka, who is forced into a marriage with the elderly statesman, Boris, whom she detests. Her lover, Ivan, discovers that Boris already has a wife living, and with the aid of his American friend, Hopper, he steals Katinka away on her wedding night. The remainder of the play deals with the search through Turkey and Austria for the first Mrs. Boris, which is finally crowned with success, after numerous ludicrous complications.

Auction Sale.

George Nichols will sell horses, farm tools, cows, poultry, vehicles, hay, grain, harness, potatoes, household goods etc. at the farm 1 mile west of Novi and 1-4 mile north of Grand River road Tuesday, Oct. 31, at 1:00 sharp, local time. John E. Wedow will be the auctioneer.

THE ROBIN.

My old Welch neighbor over the way - Crept slowly out in sun of spring Pushed from her ears the locks of grey And listened to hear the robins sing.

Her grandson playing at marbles stopped And cruel in sport-as boys will be, Tossed a stone at the bird which hopped From bough to bough in the apple tree.

"Nay," said the grandmother, "have you not heard My poor bad boy-of the fiery pit And how drop by drop this merciful bird - Carries the water that quenches it?"

He brings cool dew in his little bill - And lets it fall on the souls of sin. You can see the marks on his red breast still - Of the fires that scorch as he drops it in.

My dear Breann Rudden, my breast - bird Singing so sweet from limb to limb, Very dear to the heart of my Lord - Is he who pities the lost like Him?"

Answer: I said to the beautiful myth, Sing, bird of God, in my heart as well. Each good thought is a drop, where - with To cool and lessen the fires of hell.

Prayers of love like raindrops fall, Tears of pity are cooling new, And dear to the heart of Lord-are all Who suffers like him in the good they do.

IN THE POLLING BOOTH.

In these last days, too much emphasis cannot be placed upon the individual responsibility of the voter as he stands in the polling booth, "alone with his ballot, his pencil and his God."

At such a solemn moment he must face the question of whether or not he dares to vote to perpetuate an institution which may run his own boys and is unquestionably destroying the boys in the homes of his neighbors and fellow citizens.

He may for the time being silence his judgment on the economic phase of the question, he may deliberately ignore the convincing testimony he has had presented to him of the benefits of prohibition, but if there has been aroused in his soul a sense of his obligation as a brother, a father and a patriot he will be afraid to do otherwise than make his ballot tell for the abolition of the liquor traffic. -The Union Signal

FIRST NUMBER LECTURE COURSE

The attendance at the first number of the High school lecture course given in the Alseium last Friday evening was not as large as the quality of the entertainment would warrant. The program of readings, music and a playlet by three charming ladies was unusually fine.

The next number will take place Monday, November 13 when the Kentucky Jubilee Quartet are scheduled to appear in the local theatre.

Miss Flora Miller won the wrist watch offered by Manager Thompson for the biggest sale of tickets.

LETTER FROM THE WAR ZONE

SON OF FRED WARD IS WITH TROOPS ON MEXICAN BORDER.

The writer of the following letter is a grandson of Mrs. Helen Welsh of this place. He lived with his parents on a farm north and west of town for a number of years before their removal to Ann Arbor. The article was taken from the Daily News of the latter city.

"Following are extracts from a letter received recently by Mrs. Fred E. Ward, of 907 Monroe street, from her son, Earl Ward, of Company A, Signal corps.

My Dear Mother: Well here I am in Camp Stewart, El Paso, and believe me I'm a long, long way from home. I arrived here Tuesday morning and began unloading immediately so we had camp made by 1 o'clock, but we are not straightened around yet. It was some trip as you may well imagine. We passed through Michigan, Indiana, Illinois, Texas to get down here, and I would be safe to say around a thousand towns and cities or more. We passed through Bay City, Saginaw, Battle Creek, Lansing, Alma, Albion, Marshall, Jackson, Criss, Michigan City, Chicago, Kansas City, Dehison, San Antonio and El Paso. All put together we traveled over 3,000 miles going about 800 or 900 miles out of our way around San Antonio - Cotton fields, sugar cane, tobacco, prairie, mountains, plans, cactus-wow! and heat! I can't begin to write down all that I saw and the scenery was beautiful.

When we passed through the cotton fields and plantations, the colored people would run out of their huts and wave their bandanas and the fields were full too. About every place had from ten to 20 in the family, if not more, and every one would pile out of the little log huts when the train came through. In some places we stopped and hiked through the cotten fields, picking some Wouldn't the old mammy and fappie run out and fret, then the fellows would pile out all the more just to tease them.

When we reached the Mississippi, about 5 o'clock in the morning, I got out of the train with some others and we walked over it for the dickens of it. The train was going slow as it always does over such places.

We stopped in San Antonio and it seemed alive with Mexicans, and they seemed to have a desire to shoot us, although in some places along the road we had come, they wave as we passed and seemed to like the idea of our coming down here.

We are to be here until the first of January at least, so you see I will have a fine chance to see a lot and get a lot of practice. Just now we are waiting for horses to grill with. The homes and places of north are as different from the south as black is from white. In comparison, the north looks wealthy, populous and fine in other respects. The west is better in scenery, but the south is thinly populated, wide prairies and waste-land small towns, and the country is hot enough to scorch one's skin. On the way down here we saw prairie dogs, and coyotes, and some fellows who went out yesterday saw some lizards. They caught a scorpion quite young. They are deadly poisonous around here.

There are about 70,000 men in camp here and 30,000 are on a 15-day hike for 200 miles. We are stationed between the Ohio Signal corps and the Kentucky troop. The Alabama troops are coming soon. The Illinois and Washington, D. C., troops passed us on the road going home. They were some glad too. Most of them were colored.

To give you an idea of the situation here, there are mountains of the west, prairies and plain on the east, railroads on the north and south, camp on the south, and snakes and prairie dogs underneath. It is getting hot here now, I suppose you are having snow at home, aren't you?

It is so level around here that one can see for miles, and the mountains look to be only about a mile away and they are fully 12 or 14 miles. Some of us are going to the top of the mountain Sunday. I will write and tell you about it.

There is no danger from the Mexicans around here as practically everything is quiet, at least I hope so.

IS MONSTER COW STILL ON EARTH?

Amazing Remains of Prehistoric Animals Unearthed in South America.

How would you like to own a cow twenty feet high and forty-seven feet long, with udders enough to give twenty times the quantity of milk offered up by the champion milkers of the day?

Or to live in a land where a rat is the size of a St. Bernard dog, and you were obliged to keep a cat the size of a tiger and a dog the size of a horse to chase away the pesky rodents?

And where, for amusement, you could enjoy the antics of your little pet-horse, the size of a dog?

Sounds like a dream of an opium fiend, doesn't it? Makes you think of Rider Haggard or a tale by H. G. Wells. But such conditions once were undergone by mere man, and not such a tremendous number of years ago, either.

Indeed, so comparatively recent was it that there is reason to believe that the grypotherium—as the ante-historical cow was termed—still exists and that somewhere on the broad plateau of Patagonia it frisks about the landscape, whisking its fifteen foot tail, above its ten-foot legs and enjoying life to full.

In 1897 Dr. Moreno, director of the Plata museum in Argentina, discovered remains on the boundary between Chub and Patagon that led to the unearthing of the remains of a grypotherium in such an excellent state of preservation that practically the entire skeleton now is being mounted in the American Museum of Natural History in New York.

Moreno discovered pieces of a tough, thick skin, with bony patches and three inch long hair, hanging on a tree near Last Hope Inlet. Investigation proved that government officials had secured the remainder. Further search led to a cave where the skin had been found originally, and, when three feet of debris had been dug from the bottom, the remains were unearthed.

More skin was discovered. There were also the bones of the animal; two axis-made-from-the-leg-bones of a dog; the skull of a prehistoric man, and evidence that the grypotherium had been maintained in a state of domesticity.

There was a quantity of cut hay. There was the skeleton of a rat the size of a dog; of a horse no bigger; of a tiger-sized cat and a horse-sized dog. Ashes and charred wood showed that the primitive occupant had understood the methods of fire and it is believed that the grypotherium was kept exactly as a cow today. The huge prehistoric creature had an extraordinary series of udders in the region of the thorax and would have yielded the milk of twenty cows.

Conditions led Dr. Moreno to believe that the life of the entire family had been snuffed out by a falling bowlder, which crashed off from the upper portion of the cave and buried them beneath it.

With the change of time the average grypotherium, following the order of descent, altered its size and shape to meet altered conditions of nature. The result is found in the little tree sloth so common today in tropic countries.

But the grypotherium was as nought compared to the remains of a dinosaur recently unearthed by Prof. Earl Douglas, of the Carnegie Museum of Pittsburgh, in Jensen, Utah. The specimen is perfect and the biggest ever unearthed in this country measuring 175 feet in length, with a neck 65 feet long, and thigh bones 3 feet in diameter.

Which would mean that the animal could lean against a ten-story building and pick cherries off the flagpole or stretch half a city block in length and fill the open space from pavement to pavement.

Of course, the frolicsome grypotherium wasn't quite as cumbersome as that around the caveman's home. If it stood upright on its hind legs it would have reached only to the top of a four-story building, which isn't so bad when one considers it.

How the caveman milked his pet is a question involving higher mathematics as complicated as those employed by the builders of the pyramids. It is inferred that he borrowed the outfit of a friend's lightning rod agent or else climbed a tree.

But one thing is certain. Milk famines never bothered the caveman.

Of course "I'll never play poker with a palmist again." "Why not?" "Why, he could read my hands."

HORSE ON HIND LEGS 2 DAYS

Falls in Well Too Narrow for Other Posture.

New York—With block and tackle searchers for a horse thought to be stolen, hauled him from a well 12 feet deep off the Boston Post road near Larchmont. The horse, belonging to the Owens Coal Company, had been standing on his hind legs two days in the shaft, which is only five feet wide, with three feet of water about his body.

The horse's neighbors drew the searchers from the adjoining farm of James B. Neville, from which he had been missed. He had backed into the well and stuck in his strained position. He was lustily hungry when released and showed no injuries in a veterinary's examination.

TIMELY TOPICS FOR ALL INTERESTED IN BETTER FARMING

Rye for Pasture.

It behooves every farmer to provide all the home grown feed possible this year. It is not yet too late to sow rye for winter and early spring pasture. An acre of such pasture will save several bags of calf and pig feed. Sheep may be grazed upon it whenever the ground is bare and frozen. Many sow rye instead of wheat following oats for the sake of the winter pasturage of sheep. Pasture yards should be sown to rye also.

Good Poultry Practice.

As the hens have ceased to lay during the moult it is a great temptation to withhold feed, but that is a very serious mistake. Moulting is as heavy a drain upon the hen as egg production, and she must be as generous fed as at any time. She requires even more animal protein in the form of milk or meat scrap. No fange, but what a flock will feed, well raised and kept free from lice will return two dollars or more for every one invested in feed, that is if it is invested wisely. No combination of feeds will secure a profitable egg yield unless it contains either milk or meat scrap. But it is not necessary to feed a great variety of expensive grains. The Ohio experiment station found hens gave the largest profits when fed corn alone as their grain. It will probably be possible to use bin and ruddings in the dry flesh.

Hens to be kept for producing hatchings eggs next spring should not be forced by high feeding to return to laying at once. A higher percent of fertile eggs will be secured if they have a few months rest, though a smaller number of eggs will be secured for the year.

Good poultry men are now selling all last year's stock except that wanted for production of hatchings eggs, and they are transferring the pullets to their winter quarters. This should not be postponed beyond this month. Give the houses a thorough renovating before the pullets are transferred. Of course the cockerels should be sold or confined for fattening.

Concerning Buckwheat.

There was a larger acreage of buckwheat than usual sown. It is not especially well filled, however. Owing to the very high price of wheat, beans, potatoes and meats, it should all be saved for human consumption. For this purpose it should command at least $2 per hundred pounds. Its stock food value is about that of oats, and it fills just about the same place in the ration. This gives it a value of $1.50 per hundred pounds.

Many men will say they have too small an amount to warrant getting a threshing, but it is very easily flaked out and cleaned with a hand mill. It will pay to do it.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON FOR OCTOBER 29, 1916.

Lesson Title: "The Voyage."

Lesson Text: Acts 27:1-38. Memorize vs. 22-24.

Golden Text: "Commit thy way unto Jehovah; trust also in him, and he will bring it to pass." Ps. 37:5.

I. Conflicting Advice.

Someone has wittily remarked that the greatest vice in the world is "Advice!" We all benefit and suffer from it. Without advice the accumulated wisdom and experience of the past would be lost. A great amount is lost in any case, because young people have to learn a great many things from experience. After they have learned their lesson, then they begin giving advice to others! Their advice is good, but again we see a great deal of it lost because a new generation must learn by experience like its predecessors.

In case of doubt whose advice shall prevail? Where do you go for your advice? What is your spirit toward those who speak kindly words of admonition to you? How much attention have you given to your mother's advice? How far have you followed the precepts of your father? What attention have you paid to the directions of your teachers?

After Paul had appealed to Caesar the governor made ready to send him to Rome. After embarking and proceeding as far as Crete, they encountered severe weather, and were in doubt about going farther. Paul advised them to wait. The owners desired to go on. Shipwreck followed.

II. The Freight Men Carry.

The Record says that first the boats labored exceedingly with the storm, and the next day they began to throw the freight overboard. When it comes to the question of saving human life other cargoes can be dispensed with. The storms of life always reveal what we regard as the most valuable cargo. Some loads which we carry are necessary. Other loads are unnecessary. We should get along far better and with greater safety if we threw out earlier some of the useless cargo of life. When sorrow comes we are led to get rid of some useless things and ideas. When business reverses overtake us we are again compelled to do it. We get down very speedily to the rock-bottom necessities of life. We find out what things really give contentment and peace and joy. Is there any useless cargo on board your life ship? Why not get rid of it now before the storm comes on?

III. The Basis of Bravery.

Danger and sorrow bring out the real character of men and women. No matter what they may say when the skies are clear and the sun is shining, what they actually do when sorrow comes shows where they find their surest reliance in danger.

We have an interesting illustration of this in the story of Paul and the shipwreck. Paul's trust was in God. He had a message of comfort from the God to whom he belonged and whom he also served. But the soldiers and sailors with them were in desperate straits. They did not know where to turn. So it came about that the prisoner became the real captain of the ship. The despised Jew and servant of Jesus became the leader of the ship's company.

A new winter outfit for the girl who skates.

All sorts of attractive things have been designed for the girl who loves the outdoors in winter. In the picture is shown a new skating set of tan color velour, edged with black velvet and a black tassel. The cap is finished with a band of black velvet and a little black velvet ball perches on the top.

I have seen godless men find wisdom in a community turn like children to some godly man whom they trusted in order to secure comfort and sympathy in a hour of sorrow. Never does a Christian man or woman show to better advantage or help the cause of Christ more, than in giving unselfishly of his time and sympathy to those who are sorrow or are discouraged, or who are overcome by temptation.

IV. Bon Voyage.

We wish our friends "Bon Voyage" when they start on a long journey. We are all of us going on a long voyage from the cradle to the grave—and on into the Great Beyond! "What insures safety and peace of life's voyage?" Is it not worth while to have a Pilot who knows the rocks and the open waters? Who is your Pilot? God's word is a sure chart for life's voyage. Jesus Christ is a sure Pilot. "Jesus, Savior, pilot me, Over life's tempestuous sea, Unknown waves before me roll, Hiding rock and treacherous shoal. Chart and compass came from Thee, Jesus, Savior, pilot me!"

A SWEET BAKER.

Blanche Sweet, Lasky star in Paramount Pictures.

Blanche Sweet finds as much fun in baking a cake and mixing the dough for the daily bread as she does "playing" in pictures. This is self-evident from a snapshot she sent us recently.

SOME APPLE RECIPES

Jellied Apples—Choose tart apples; peel core and slice moderately thin. Place in good-sized crockery dish in alternate layers of granulated sugar and fruit. Put in medium oven with a close-fitting plate on top held down by a weight. They should remain in oven about three hours. When cool, pour carefully into a glass dish and put on the ice when the slices will be found embedded in the jelly. With a margin on top, either with or without boiled custard or cream is same. A delightful variation of this dish may be served.

Apple Sauce Cake—One and one-half cups apple sauce, two cups brown sugar, one-half cup butter, two and one-half cups flour, one-half nutmeg, two teaspoons cinnamon, one teaspoon cloves, one cup raisins, one teaspoon soda. Cream butter and sugar, add raisins and spices to apple sauce, then add to butter and sugar, then flour and last the soda dissolved in a little water.

Apple Sauce Cake—One cup apple sauce, one teaspoon soda, one cup sugar, one cup seeded raisins, one-half cup lard beaten light two even cups flour (after being sifted), one teaspoon each of ground cinnamon, cloves and nutmeg, one tablespoon vanilla. Cream butter, add sugar. Mix and sift flour and spices (reserving a little flour to mix raisins), and

Women's Winter Styles

The styles for this Fall are pleasingly new, striking, and effective. The lady will find her wardrobe enriched with new things, new fabrics, new colors. From the evening dress to morning negligee there are strikingly new effects—Millinery finds new ideas—and Winter sports have not been neglected by the designer of styles.

Suits play an important part in Fall styles. Short coats seem to have the boxy appearance, as though built for skating or sport use. The longer models are flared—many pangled. The sleeves vary from loose fitting to semi-fitting effect, while novelty cuffs terminate most models.

The lapels are roll effect—many in contrasting color. Fur is used in many models but not as much as last season. The skirts vary from the flare to the drooping and full effects. Many skirts like the coats that go with them, have a deep well finished panel. The predominating fabrics are velour, duvetyns, sergeens, velvets, broadcloth and serges.

Coats for our lady vary from the piled fabric to the gabardine wool velour, bolivia, duvetyne broadcloth, and velvet. Women are more than ever before seeking style combined with practicability—many of these models are cravenette proofed preparing them for rain. Large cape collars—belted effect, and deep cuffs are the features. The models are large and roomy and seem to be pleasing in their lines and fit.

Shoes are here, too in a more subdued tone than heretofore while they are styled in various colors and combinations of color there is no more of the 'noisy effects' that marked last winter's shoe fashion. Evening shoes will be plain and mostly made without buckles—while for walking shoes we have the high laced shoe, or rather boot.

Millinery splendor lies in its simplicity—large hats and small ones—trimmed with veils, flowers and wings in all colors to match lady's suit, dress or coat.

SANITARY LID FOR TEAKETTLE

Safety. Devise That Prevent Burns When Refilling.

Many a housewife has sustained a bad burn from lifting the hot lid of the kettle she was attempting to refill. A teakettle lid has been invented which will render this impossible. The lid has an automatic valve in the center which opens as the flow of water is turned upon it and closes when the water is shut off. This valve is at the bottom of a depression in the lid, and the concave thus formed is a convenient place to set a cup or other small vessel containing butter to be melted or other ingredients requiring gentle heat. The lid is of aluminum, thoroughly sanitary and endorsed by the cooking experts who have seen it.

HOME-RULE-HOME-RUN.

One fact alone in connection with the much discussed "Home Rule" should be enough to instantly condemn it in the opinion of every citizen who is not an out and out friend of the so-called saloon and its work.

This is the fact that the saloon interests are the promoters of the amendment, while the very title of the bill is intended to appeal to two fundamental American traits—love of self government and love of home—even the man who believes in legalized liquor selling must realize that the saloon interests would never stand behind any movement that is going to better conditions from the standpoint of anybody but themselves.

The framers of the scheme doubtless hoped it would not be too minutely analyzed, and thus would gain the support of every voter not an absolute prohibitionist. This has not proved to be the case, however, as even those who believe in local option and the legislative control—so-called—of the liquor trade have had their attention directed to the fact that if this Home Rule (Home Rule would be a more appropriate term) business is not defeated the present county option home rule will be repealed by a going back to that primitive absurdity in the shape of liquor restriction—township, village and city local option, which is but the merest excuse for restraint on the retailing of booze or for the control of local conditions by vote of the people.

Thus, voters who believe in county option, should be just as interested in the turning down of this amendment as anybody who doesn't believe in any kind of option whatever. Vote NO on "Home Rule" if you don't want home run.

"PIRACY" ON THE HIGH SEIZURE.

While the Record feels greatly complimented at the frequency with which this column appears in other papers, even though without credit, there is always the probability—and very often the actual fact—that the next time the captured item appears, it is in a paper with "conscientious scruples," and so is credited to the paper appropriating it first. As the articles in this department are all original except when otherwise stated, the writers of them naturally object to seeing them "blamed on some other feller."

Now that the bandits who made the $32,000 haul from the Burroughs people, those who got the Edison Co's lucre and the M. C. robbers have all been successfully hunted down, the other young men who had been contemplating giving up labor and taking to brigandage for a living won't be so anxious to adopt the "easy money" profession. It doesn't often prove to be so easy, after all.

As usual at this time of year, hunting accidents, football casualties and Great Lake storm fatalities have commenced to divide the newspaper space with the all-the-year-round motor and railway slaughterings. This by way of reminding us that the danger of the earth being over-populated is not alarmingly imminent.

A man was recently released from an Illinois prison after seven years of confinement there by reason of mistaken identity. Of course he considers it ample compensation when (or if) the state authorities begged him to pardon the mistake after they had pardoned him.

We are only too happy to record an answer to a question in several exchanges: "Can anybody name anything that isn't getting higher all the time?" so we note the following headline in the Pontiac Press-Gazette: "Scores Are Lower." Glad something is lower, even if it was only said about a rifle club meeting.

Rochester has a social club called the "Tschippitoulus." Likely none of 'em could spell it off hand but it probably has a pronunciation—which is obviously not apparent to the uninitiated reader.

A certain class of people who are said to "rush in where angels fear to tread" aren't all dead yet, as witness the following from an advertiser in the Carleton Times: An elderly gentleman would like to correspond with a lady who desires a good home. Object, matrimony. Apply to box, etc.

When you see a "chicken-pie supper" advertised now days for 35 cents a plate there is much cause for suspicion. It is practically a sure thing that either those chickens were not come by honestly—or else that the supper is a church affair and the cost isn't counted.

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)
Regular services both morning and evening, subjects being given from the pulpit.

This Sunday closes our second year's work in Northville. Our faithfulness to the Lord's cause has gone into history. How pleasant it will be to reflect upon. Let us close the year with a good congregation at the little home church. Strangers always welcome.

The every member canvass will be taken up next week. Be ready when you are called upon and do your best. If you are not yet a member and desire to have a part in this matter just give your name to the pastor next Sunday and you will not be forgotten.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor.)
The Sunday school will hold its session at 11:30. Every member of the school will have to be present in order to surpass the good attendance of last Sunday. The number of men present is worthy of note.

The Christian Endeavor will meet at 6 o'clock. This is a service for the young people and it should win their enthusiastic support.

The evening service at 7 o'clock. The subject as announced last week will be, "Wilson, Hughes or Hanley, which Deserves Our Vote." This service will be of special interest at this particular time.

The next two meetings in the Prohibition campaign will be held next Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The Wednesday evening meeting will be held in the Presbyterian church at 7:30 and will be addressed by Dr. Miller of Wooster, Ohio. Dr. Miller was in the recent Ohio campaign and is qualified to deliver a most practical address upon the question as it exists in Michigan. At the Thursday meeting in the M. E. church there will be a moving picture exhibition entitled "Prohibition." This unique way of presenting the prohibition cause will be interesting to all, and no one will want to miss either of these meetings.

Next Sunday concludes the special morning services which have been held during the month of October. The concluding day will be observed as Consecration Day and the subject of the morning service will be "The Renunciation and the Reward." The ladies' quartet which always sings so acceptably, will furnish special music. There will also be a special number by Mrs. Griffin. Every effort is being made to have this service surpass the high standard set by the previous services. If any do not receive a personal invitation to be present, remember nevertheless, that the presence of every one is greatly desired.

The Westminster Guild is to meet with Mrs. Claude McKahan next Monday evening.

CHRISTIAN-SCIENCE SOCIETY.

The conversation had turned to the many men who had met success. There is much complaint of the unsanitary conditions of the temporary school building for the lower grades. No action has yet been taken.

The illness of Mrs. W. J. Thompson which was noted in last week's Record, was due to injuries received while returning home from Brighton where she had gone to attend a funeral. Gladys Ford figured down the Eighth grade Friday.

Major Taylor figured down the Seventh grade Friday.

The Sixth graders are planning a Halloween party for Monday afternoon.

The Fifth graders have been memorizing Wordworth's "Pet Lamb" this month.

The daily weather maps are now being received at the school and are greatly appreciated by the science classes.

Of the twenty-eight who are in the Second grade, only fifteen were present last Friday on account of the rainy weather.

Mrs. E. J. Reynolds, of the Child Welfare Association of Detroit, talked to some of the grades Monday and asked them to help in the work by contributing as much money as possible.

CITES OWN GROWTH TO BOOST PROHIBITION.

Basing its opinions upon the effect of prohibition in its own community, the Highland Park village council, last Monday night, passed an ordinance endorsing the movement for state wide prohibition.

In support of this action the resolution tells how Highland Park grew from a village of less than 500 inhabitants in 1900 and 4,120 in 1910, to one with 35,000 at the present, with the assessed valuation of $52,000,000.

Since then the village has laid 30 miles of pavement; installed a $500,000 water system, with a further appropriation of $5,375,000 authorized, has a million dollar sewer system gearing completion; all without a single dollar of revenue from the saloon, and with village taxes never exceeding $9 per thousand.

The absence of the saloon has made for Highland Park better government, better enforcement of the law, attracted thousands to the community for the establishment of their homes, has made a community where poverty is scarce, and above all has created a better moral influence among the boys and girls, says the resolution.—Detroit Journal.

What is said of Highland Park may also be credited to Northville, as the merchants report a bigger business than during any other previous year.

I beg leave to submit the enclosed blue print giving the results of an economy test made on a 1917 Stock Maxwell Touring Car, furnished by your Boston representatives.

The curve is self explanatory and needs no discussion other than the statement that the carburetor, which was stock, was adjusted to give the best combination of power, flexibility, speed and economy, for such conditions of touring as would ordinarily be encountered.

In tabular form the results (taken from the curve sheet) are as follows:

15	32.7
20	31.2
25	28.8
30	26.1

When the new troops came up we drove the Indians off and got the women and children and wounded officers safely out of it. It was generally conceded that Sergeant Larkins had put up the best fight of any one officer or enlisted man. The colonel recommended him for promotion, and then the secret came out that he had not only got a commission, but had got Miss Bell. But the best part of it was that Larkins was worth half a million in his own right.

HOME-RULE-HOME-RUIN.

One fact alone in connection with the much discussed "Home Rule" should be enough to instantly condemn it in the opinion of every citizen who is not an out and out friend of the so-called saloon and its work.

This is the fact that the saloon interests are the promoters of the amendment, while the very title of the bill is intended to appeal to two fundamental American traits—love of self government and love of home—even the man who believes in legalized liquor selling must realize that the saloon interests would never stand behind any movement that is going to better conditions from the standpoint of anybody but themselves. The framers of the scheme doubtless hoped it would not be too minutely analyzed, and thus would gain the support of every voter not an absolute prohibitionist. This has not proved to be the case, however, as even those who believe in local option and the legislative control—so-called—of the liquor trade have had their attention directed to the fact that if this Home Rule (Home Ruin would be a more appropriate term) business is not defeated the present county option home rule will be repealed by a going back to that primitive absurdity in the shape of liquor restriction—township, village and city local option, which is but the merest excuse for restraint on the retailing of booze or for the control of local conditions by vote of the people.

Thus, voters who believe in county option should be just as interested in the turning down of this amendment as anybody who doesn't believe in any kind of option whatever. Vote NO on "Home Rule" if you don't want home ruin.

"PIRACY" ON THE HIGH SEIZ.

While the Record feels greatly complimented at the frequency with which this column appears in other papers, even though without due credit, there is always the probability—and very often the actual fact—that the next time the captured item appears, it is in a paper with "conscientious scruples," and so is credited to the paper appropriating it first. As the articles in this department are all original except when otherwise stated, the writers of them naturally object to seeing them "blamed on some other feller."

Now that the bandits who made the $32,000 haul from the Burroughs people, those who got the Edison Co's lugre and the M. C. robbers have all been successfully hunted down, the other young men who had been contemplating giving up labor and taking to brigandage for a living won't be so anxious to adopt the "easy money" profession. It doesn't often prove to be so easy, after all.

As usual at this time of year, hunting accidents, football casualties and Great Lake storm fatalities have commenced to divide the newspaper space with the all-the-year-round motor and railway slaughters. This by way of reminding us that the danger of the earth being over-populated is not alarmingly imminent.

A man was recently released from an Illinois prison after seven years of confinement there by reason of mistaken identity. Of course he considered it ample compensation when (or if) the state authorities begged him to pardon the mistake after they had pardoned him.

We are only too happy to record an answer to a question in several exchanges: "Can anybody name anything that isn't getting higher all the time?" so we note the following headline in the Pontiac Press-Gazette: "Scores Are Lower." Glad something is lower, even if it was only said about a rifle club meeting.

Rochester has a social club called the "Tschippitonus." Likely none of 'em could spell it off-hand but it probably has a pronunciation—which is obviously not apparent to the uninitiated reader.

A certain class of people who are said to "rush in where angels fear to tread" aren't all dead yet, as witness the following from an advertiser in the Carleton Times: An elderly gentleman would like to correspond with a lady who desires a good home. Object, matrimony. Apply to box, etc.

When you see a "chicken pie supper" advertised now days for 35 cents a plate there is much cause for suspicion. It is practically a sure thing that either those chickens were not come by honestly—or else that the supper is a church affair and the cost isn't counted.

WEEKLY CALENDAR.

BAPTIST CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor)
Regular services both morning and evening, subjects being given from the pulpit.

This Sunday closes our second years work in Northville. Our faithfulness to the Lord's cause has gone into history. How pleasant it will be to reflect upon. Let us close the year with a good congregation at the little home church. Strangers always welcome.

The every member canvass will be taken up next week. Be ready when you are called upon and do your best. If you are not yet a member and desire to have a part in this matter just give your name to the pastor next Sunday and you will not be forgotten.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH NOTES.

(By the Pastor)
The Sunday school will hold its session at 11-30. Every member of the school will have to be present in order to surpass the good attendance of last Sunday. The number of men present is worthy of note.

The Christian Endeavor will meet at 6 o'clock. This is a service for the young people and it should win their enthusiastic support.

The evening service at 7 o'clock. The subject as announced last week will be, "Wilson, Hughes or Hanley, which Deserves Our Vote." This service will be of special interest at this particular time.

The next two meetings in the Prohibition campaign will be held next Wednesday and Thursday evenings. The Wednesday evening meeting will be held in the Presbyterian church at 7:30 and will be addressed by Dr. Miller of Wooster, Ohio. Dr. Miller was in the recent Ohio campaign and is qualified to deliver a most practical address upon the question as it exists in Michigan. At the Thursday meeting in the M. E. church there will be a moving picture exhibition entitled, "Prohibition." This unique way of presenting the prohibition cause will be interesting to all, and no one will want to miss either of these meetings.

Next Sunday concludes the special morning services which have been held during the month of October. The concluding day will be observed as Consecration Day and the subject of the morning service will be "The Renunciation and the Reward." The ladies' quartet which always sings so acceptably, will furnish special music. There will also be a special number by Mrs. Griffin. Every effort is being made to have this service surpass the high standard set by the previous services. If any do not receive a personal invitation to be present, remember nevertheless, that the presence of every one is greatly desired.

The Westminster Guild is to meet with Mrs. Claude McKahan next Monday evening.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SOCIETY.

A Success.

The conversation had turned to the many men who had met success. "There, for instance," said one man, pointing down the street, "goes a man who began life in poverty and now lives on the fat of the land." McFee looked. "Yes, I know him," he replied. "He's an agent for an antitax concern."—Judge.

The Sergeant's Promotion

By M. QUAD

It may have been known among the officers that she was coming—a blue-eyed, fair haired girl of eighteen from the east named Miss Bell—but the first we heard of it was when we went to the depot as an escort.

Miss Bell was a regular chatterbox. She couldn't understand the wide gulf separating officer from private, but in ignorance thought a soldier was a soldier, no matter whether he carried a saber or a sword.

From the first Sergeant Larkins sal apart from us and seemed moody and taciturn. There was no question but that jealousy was at work, and he hadn't the strength of mind to throw it off and realize the situation.

The first move on our part, seeing that the women and children were safe, was to secure cover behind the bowlders and open fire on the Indians. They had counted on a sure thing, and their yells of rage when they knew of our presence were loud and long.

We had them between two fires, and yet so well were they sheltered that they had no means of knowing that they had only two un wounded men in front of them, armed with revolvers.

We solved the difficulty by sending one man back to the post for reinforcements, while we held the Indians with our fire. When the new troops came up we drove the Indians off and got the women and children and wounded officers safely out of it.

It was generally conceded that Sergeant Larkins had put up the best fight of any one officer or enlisted man. The colonel recommended him for promotion, and then the secret came out that he had not only got a commission, but had got Miss Bell. But the best part of it was that Larkins was worth half a million in his own right.

DENTAL PREPAREDNESS.

What is the most important attribute of a soldier? Good feet? No. Good eyesight? No. Good brains? No. What then? Good teeth. Asoldier may have good feet, good eyesight, and good brains; but if he has bad teeth he can't eat. If he can't eat he can't march near enough to the enemy to see him and use his brains to fight him. How does a soldier get good teeth? By having good teeth in childhood. How do children keep good teeth? Through being taught by their mother how to keep their teeth clean and having their teeth looked after while they are growing. This makes good teeth for future soldiers.

It would seem as though the first patriotic duty of a mother was to keep her children's teeth in good condition. It is:

Ridicule. It is an immense blessing to be perfectly glib to ridicule, or, which comes to the same thing, to be conscious thoroughly that what we have in us of able and delicate is not ridiculous to any but fools, and that, if fools will laugh, wise men will do well to let them.—Doctor Arnold.

LABOR'S ENEMY— THE PROHIBITIONIST

- Big Interests want prohibition in Michigan.
- 50,000 jobless men, who would become job-seekers instead of wage earners under a program of state prohibition, would be a great help to Big Interests.
- Big Interests could then tell every worker that—"50,000 other men are looking for a job—your job."
- Big Interests could strangle organized labor in Michigan—
- IF—
- PROHIBITION WERE IN EFFECT.
- Big Interests are doomed to disappointment.
- Prohibition will not carry in Michigan.
- Sane voters will protect 50,000 workers and property valued at $30,000,000.
- Sane voters will vote "NO" against prohibition November 7.
- Big Interests will still be forced to meet with organized labor.
- Big Interests will be denied the weapon wanted—50,000 jobless men.
- In Colorado, after prohibition went into effect, thousands of men marched in a body to the state capitol to DEMAND WORK.
- Big Interests are now slowly strangling to death organized labor in Colorado.
- Big Interests favor the "dry" agitators in Detroit.
- Big Interests would throttle labor organizations in Detroit.

Cadillac Company Can't Break Up Machinists' Noon Day Meeting

Not all the power of the poorly paying open-shop Cadillac Motor Car Co. with the Detroit Employers' Association, founded according to his present statement by Henry Leland, president of the Cadillac concern, was able to stop the organizers of the International Association of Machinists from speaking near the big plant on all the Woodward avenue last Monday noon. Organizers went there Friday noon, but police officers stopped them, several organizers being taken to the police station.

General Executive Board Member Nicholson interviewed Detroit's new police chief, James Couzens, Monday morning. He gave permission to hold noon-day meetings at the Cadillac or any other plant. Nicholson and others proceeded to the Cadillac plant. The police were there to receive them. They declared no meeting would take place. Speakers for the "dry" campaign were not bothered, but were permitted to continue their talks. The police declared that the union men were blocking the sidewalk as soon as they opened up, although the "dry" men were not criticized. One of the union officials called Police Commissioner Couzens on the telephone. He ordered the lieutenant of the Bethune station to go at once to the scene. He did so and he and all others could see five mounted policemen and seven patrolmen, all the men from the neighboring five station and a crowd of from five to seven thousand men. He ordered the police to let the machinists talk. But even then a sergeant did his best to break up the meeting.

The meeting was successful and considerable literature given the Cadillac employees.

"Commissioner Couzens and the police superintendent gave us a fair shake; it was a sergeant down there who was giving all the orders against us," declared James Henderson, the machinists' union organizer.

Detective Stories

These stories give the exploits of one of the craftiest and most daring criminals of French fiction. The stories are now appearing on the moving picture screen and have just been released.

FANTOMAS

These stories are along typical French lines which portray the "crook" as he actually is, and not as a hero in any sense of the word.

SYNOPSIS

All Paris was stirred by the daring crimes of a clever crook, FANTOMAS the mysterious Juve, a noted detective, with a newspaper friend named Fandor were on the trail of the criminal, who under various names and disguises was captured repeatedly—only to escape by some remarkable trick. FANTOMAS had masqueraded as Dr. Chalek and was captured through the help of a woman companion, but Dr. Chalek escaped by a clever ruse only to be followed by Juve and Fandor. Juve received warning that FANTOMAS was going to put him away by means of the silent executioner. Juve and Fandor in Juve's bedroom, a few nights later, are surprised by a huge box so-arrived released thru the window by Dr. Chalek—Juve has a narrow escape from death and was saved only by a suit of armor he had worn. As the two friends saw the snake escape, they heard an automobile make a sudden start and go down the street.

Episode II.—"The Man in Black."

THE CHARACTERS

Dr. Chalek Loupart, "The Man in Black."
Inspector Juve.
Fandor
Lady Betham.
Josephine.

Fourth Part.—The Man in Black.

After the failure of the great snake to accomplish the end of Juve, Fantomas made the mistake of retreating to the villa at Neuilly. The Protean criminal, who had frightened the world under such disguises as those of Gurn, Dr. Chalek and Loupart, soon discovered that the villa was surrounded. Finding that every means of egress had been barred, he made no attempt to conceal himself. However, he prepared for the attack which he realized was inevitable. He garbed himself in a close-fitting suit of black silk which made him practically invisible in the dark and also made it hard for one to hold him if one laid hands on him.

As soon as Juve had placed his police wherever there was danger of Fantomas getting away, he presented himself at the gardener's lodge at the head of a number of his men. Fantomas saw them enter. He showed himself at the front door, then he went into the house, bolting the door after him.

Fantomas had planned a diabolical end for the persistent man who pursued him. He had connected electric wiring with a dynamite bomb concealed in a room into which he intended to lure Juve and his officers. By this explosion he would destroy all his pursuers at once.

From room to room the trail led. The detective believed that the haul stand would be made in the large basement, since it had so many places suitable for hiding. It was also lighted by a number of manholes through which Fantomas might endeavor to escape. In each of the rooms through which they passed the detective left one or two of his men. With Fandor and a few officers he finally reached the basement.

Fantomas was not to be found. Everything was as it had been on their last visit. The bottle still floated idly in the tank. Not on listening closely at the furnace they could hear a noise as of a man climbing through one of the pipes. Juve ordered a man made in the furnace to smoke the man out, and then went to the room into which the pipe issued and there waited.

However Fantomas had been to clever for Juve after all. When he retreated to the basement he had realized that he was surrounded. The only means of escape that presented itself to his wonderful imagination was the tank of rainwater. Taking the bottle and breaking a hole in the bottom of it, he had jumped into the tank. Holding the bottle in the position it had maintained while floating, he had breathed through it while the searchers were in the room.

Cautiously, Fantomas finally raised himself from the water. Ascertaining that he was alone, he sprang out of the tank and quickly escaped into the garden through one of the manholes.

Juve ordered the grating to be removed from the hole in the wall whence issued the hot-air pipe through which he expected Fantomas to emerge.

"Surrender," shouted the detective. There was no answer, but the noise of some one climbing continued. It sounded also as if some one were moaning in the pipe.

When the grating was taken away, the men were stricken cold at the sight of a huge snake which seemed at one turn of its great body to spring into the center of the room. It was like a monstrous cable with thousands of turnings and windings. This, then, was the silent executioner of which Fantomas had spoken.

Each man whipped out his automatic pistol and began firing. It was only when the head had been completely severed from the body that the men lost their fear of the monster. Even then they did not approach too close, for his formidable fangs were still active in the agony of death.

Suddenly an officer, who had been stationed in the garden, rushed into the room.

"Fantomas is escaping. He's in the garden," he cried.

There was a mad rush to get out. Fantomas had placed the wires connected with his dynamite bomb in an outbuilding, and it was to these that he hurried after climbing out of the basement. He waited at the switch until the sound of the pistol-shots told him that the men were gathered in the room about the boa-constructor. Then he threw on the current.

The detonation was terrible. The house seemed to collapse and then about it rose an impenetrable wall of smoke and dust.

In the confusion Fantomas made his escape.

Are Juve and Fandor buried in the ruins?

When the fire department arrived an effort was made to rescue the men known to be under the ruins but the only one discovered alive was Fandor. He was taken to a hospital, where it was found that his wounds were not as severe as they had appeared to be at first sight. The following day he had recovered enough to be allowed to read the newspapers. These confirmed his worst fears. While it was practically impossible to identify any of the bodies, one had been marked as that of Juve. Thus passed a courageous man, Fandor thought, as he let his mind dwell upon the admirable qualities of his friend he loved his jovial character as much as he admired his courage.

When Fandor was discharged from the hospital he would have discovered some very curious things if he had frequented the neighborhood of the Palace of Justice. In one of the dingy second-hand stores with dirty windows and a gloomy interior dwelt Mother Toulouche. The house was frequented by a certain class of citizens who knew that they could depend upon its proprietor. She was in fact a receiver of stolen goods, but the police had never been able to convict her.

A few days after the explosion at Neuilly, Mother Toulouche had taken into her home a half-witted creature that spoke only in monosyllables. The poor fellow had the faithfulness of a dog without a dog's intelligence. The woman nicknamed him Cranajour, which means "head full of holes." Despite the fact that he was a simpleton, Cranajour was the only person in Paris who knew that Juve was not dead.

Very strange things went on in the store. Apaches and women of the underworld made it a storehouse for stolen belongings. They brought clocks, watches, bronzes and jewelry, as well as clothing and furniture. Mother Toulouche haggled with them over the price, and paid as little as she had to. After the sellers had departed, Mother Toulouche always had Cranajour lift a heavy trapdoor in the floor and carry the purchases to the room below. This cellar was crammed full of articles which it would have delighted a policeman to have inspected.

On the shelves, in every corner, andaped in piles were objects of art that in the aggregate must have cost an immense sum. There were clocks, chandeliers, furniture, statuettes—in a word, it was a big storehouse of goods stolen over a period of several years. The prudent woman never made a sale until several years had elapsed. Although she had a great deal of money in this fashion, yet it gave her a remarkable margin of safety in the disposing of the stolen wares.

By means of a door which she made little effort to conceal, there was an opening into one of the large sevens of Paris. This led into the scene only a short distance away. Through this passage were taken all the bulky packages which would have aroused suspicion had they been brought to the front door of the shop.

Cranajour knew something else beside the fact that Juve still lived. He knew that Fantomas also was alive. Both facts he kept to himself. An other thing which he knew was that Mother Toulouche had a confidential man who did a great deal of work for her. He was still a guard at the prison, although suspected of having had a hand in the escape of Fantomas at the time the actor, Valgrand, was substituted for him in his cell. This guard was named Nibet.

The Drama of Norvins Street.

Jack Dillon, a young painter of creams, established himself in a pretty little studio in Norvins street. This was a side street in Montmartre that still maintained its atmosphere of other days despite the modern building which had been going on all around it. One night as he sat reading, the curtains moved, and through them appeared a foreboding-looking creature. As Dillon's back was to the window he did not see the sinister spectre that approached him. The figure was that of an athlete. He was dressed in black silk tights, black silk slippers, black silk waist, black gloves. His face was completely hidden by a black mask. Through the mask could be seen two blue-steel eyes, cold and cruel.

This black figure of crime and death was Fantomas.

The artist was unmindful of the man's presence, and did not move as Fantomas drew toward him. Fantomas stood behind him. In his hand was a piece of cotton. Suddenly he sprang upon the unsuspecting young man, as a bird swoops down upon its prey. It was evident that the cotton had chloroform sprinkled upon it. For after a few seconds, during which Fantomas held his hand over the artist's mouth and nose, Dillon ceased to struggle.

Returning to the window, Fantomas waved his hand. Soon he opened a door to admit two men similarly attired. They carried a large basket.

When the housekeeper came to open the room in the morning, she was surprised to see the painter seemingly asleep in his chair. Thinking that he might be ill, she approached him as soon as she had drawn the curtains to admit the morning sun. But as she did so she beheld a young woman leaning over the table unconscious. This was too much for the poor woman. She ran screaming from the room, and would not venture in again until she had secured a policeman to accompany her.

A doctor was called. He found that the artist was still alive, but the woman had been dead for some hours. By working over the young man, the doctor was finally able to revive him. "Do you know this woman?" was the first question put to Dillon by the police officer.

The young man looked at her closely, then recoiled in terror.

"Who? She is the Baroness de Vibray."

"How did she happen to be here? Under what circumstances did she die?"

"How can I tell?" asked Dillon in reply. "I seem to have been dreaming. I was asleep when you came. Last night I was there by that table reading. I think I received some kind of shock, a blow on the head. Since that happened, I can't remember a thing."

The policeman picked up a note he found lying where the woman's feet had stood.

"It's signed by you. I'll read it to you. 'Dear Madam—If you are not afraid to climb up Montmartre some evening soon, I shall be glad to show you the ceramics I plan to exhibit at the Salon. My sister Elizabeth is expected home soon. With the sincerest respect, I am, Jack Dillon.' Now this explains everything," continued the policeman, shaking the note in Dillon's face. "The baroness answered your invitation. You lured her here. Under the circumstances there is nothing for me to do but to take you to headquarters and lodge a complaint against you."

The horrified artist defended himself as best he could against the accusation, but without avail. The officer insisted on taking him before the nearest magistrate.

The examination before the magistrate brought out nothing which the policeman had not already developed. Dillon admitted that he had written the business, but he insisted that he had not expected her that night. Upon his own statement and the facts in the case, the magistrate was forced to order that his finger prints be taken and measurement made by the Bertillon experts. He was then to be committed to prison to await a formal examination.

Dillon went through the measurement of the hand mechanically. He seemed to be still under the influence of the powerful drug to which he had succumbed the evening previous. He understood that each step was a step nearer prison for him, but why, he could not understand. He was conducted by two guards, men who never left him for an instant.

At last the arrest was conducted to his cell. One guard sent the other away and himself entered the cell with the prisoner. Suddenly and without warning the guard sprang upon Dillon and strangled him. After the victim in the unequal struggle was quite sure the man was dead, he quietly left the cell.

The guard was Nibet. Fandor had been assigned by his paper to the remarkable crime committed in the house of Norvins street. He had just finished writing an account of the strange crime when he learned that young Dillon had been strangled in prison. Hastening to the prison, he was unable to learn much more than he had already heard over the telephone. On entering the cell, the guards found that Dillon had been strangled. That is all the headkeeper could say.

While Fandor was trying to piece together the few facts he had collected, Dillon's sister was announced. She had just reached Paris, and had hastened to the prison to see her brother. The news of his death was broken to her as gently as possible by Fandor. The poor girl asked that she might view her brother's body. Fandor and the headkeeper walked with her through the gloomy corridors. The journalist was a sceptic, not believing that the artist had committed suicide, as some insisted.

Two guards stood in front of the cell. The headkeeper ordered that the door be thrown open. The room was empty. "Then they've already come for the body?" the headkeeper asked Nibet. "No, it is still there." "But it isn't." "Indeed it is, sr. We were put here as soon as his death was announced, and we haven't moved since."

The headkeeper took Nibet and his companion into the cell and showed them that it was quite empty. They appeared to be astonished, but in reality their astonishment was not really as great as it should have been at the thought that the body had been removed from the cell without their noticing it. An immediate investigation was made, but no one was able to furnish a clue that would lead to the discovery of the body.

Elizabeth Dillon was overcome at the new turn affairs had taken, and Fandor had to escort her home. When he left her he impressed upon her his desire to be of assistance if there was anything he could do at any time.

In company with the housekeeper Elizabeth Dillon began an immediate search of her brother's effects in an effort to find something which might throw light on the mystery. The only thing she discovered was the fragment of a possible memorandum. It had only these words:

Baroness de Vibray, April 3rd, Jack Dillon.

Dep. Soua-Danidoff, April 12th. Thomery, in May. Nanteuil, end of May.

The girl did not understand what these names could mean written on one sheet of paper, but she hoped that it might furnish something of value. What was surprising was the linking together of her brother's name with that of the baroness and the date of their mysterious deaths. It was the first ray of light on the dark road which she was traveling.

Meanwhile, strange things were happening in one of the great sewers of the city of Paris.

Lying on the slimy floor was the body sought in the prison. Over it stood Fantomas and Nibet, the prison keeper. The master criminal seized one of the hands of the dead artist in his left hand. In his right hand Fantomas held a surgeon's knife.

WOMAN BLIND FOR 62 YEARS NOW CAN SEE

Her Boy Was Most Beautiful Thing She Hoped to See, Her "Great Big Boy."

San Francisco.—Dawn peeped in the window of St. Francis Hospital and found a woman waiting. A bird chirped on the window sill.

"So this is day?" mused the woman. "And that is a bird. And those are flowers. It is all just as I dreamed it would be."

"Yes," repeated the nurse. "This is day and that is a bird and those are flowers." The woman, Mrs. Mary O'Farrell, saw daylight for the first time. She had been blind for 61 years. Dr. Aaron Green had performed the operation that brought light out of darkness.

All night long the woman waited restlessly for the day, so that she might enjoy the things she has visualized in her years of darkness.

"And what is the most beautiful thing you hope to see?" inquired the nurse.

"I have already seen it," was the reply. "It was my boy—my great big boy whom I never saw until last night. My only regret is that I never saw my husband, that he died before my vision was restored."

Mrs. O'Farrell's son, 24 years old, visited her at the hospital. She did not know him. At his own suggestion he was presented to her as a physician. But the instant he spoke, she was in his arms. To her eyes he was a stranger, but her ears she recognized the pet and purpose of all her life.

ROAR LIKE DOZEN NIAGARAS

So Says Young Man With a Bee in His Ear.

Capiton, Ill.—With a bee in his ear and several more angrily buzzing about his head with their bayonets leveled and intent on a charge in mass, Floyd Hammond of the Newman store made a lively getaway when tapping a bee tree on the farm of his father, T. W. Hammond, near Bryant.

He and his father were cutting down the tree, when one of the disturbed inhabitants alighted on Floyd's ear. The bee refused to be brushed off and insisted instead on crawling inside out of sight.

The elder Hammond insisted that no bee was in there, but the buzzing sounded like the roar of a dozen Niagaras to the clerk. Some cold water was poured into his ear and out came Mr. Bee, still much alive. Floyd says he feels none the worse for the experience.

HERE'S THE LARGEST FLESH EATER THAT EVER LIVED

THE SKELETON UNCOVERED ON BIG DRY CREEK, MONTANA

AS IT IS MOUNTED IN THE MUSEUM OF NATURAL HISTORY, SPECIAL PHOTOGRAPHS N. Y. H. SERVICE

Sightseers at the Museum of Natural History, in New York city, have recently displayed keen interest in the mounted skeleton of Tyrannosaurus Rex, a dinosaur of huge dimensions that lived in the cretaceous period and is admitted by scientists to have been the largest flesh eating animal known. The skeleton, discovered in Montana, now occupies a conspicuous place in the museum, and because of its tremendous proportions constitutes about as interesting an exhibit as there is to be found there. The monster is forty-seven feet in length and about eighteen and a half feet in height. When standing fully erect, however, he would have reached a height of twenty feet.

POSTAGE STAMPS CHANGE GARB
Washington and Franklin to Doff Summer Attire and Appear Well Clad for Cold Season.

Some people prefer to change to their winter things later, but on October 1, George Washington and Ben Franklin put on their heavy gum coats. It's their wish and the Government respects it.

Whether the first frosts of winter come in September or November, these two old stickers for convention put their heavy gums Oct. 1, and keep them on until the 1st of next May. If they didn't they would never be able to stand the climate, the Government stamp doctors say.

The next time the man who somehow never seems able to keep any stamps of his own asks for the loan of a 2-cent pale pink lithograph of George Washington you will be absolutely within your rights as an American citizen if you reply:

"Sure thing. How will you have George—summer or winter style?" The same also applies to that other popular favorite, Ben Franklin, whose profile now appears almost as many times as George's on the all-steel art work turned out by the Government presses.

If your query does not stump the perennial stamp-borrower he will be one of the very few American citizens who know that George and Ben are being turned out in two styles—to catch the winter and summer trade—but with no tempting reductions in prices. A 2-cent stamp still costs 2 cents.

Educated people are supposed to know that in spring a young man's fancy lightly turns somewhere or other; that the hardest-shelled crabs turn soft-shelled, and that one's heavy winter flannels are put away in camp and one's light summer affairs are made ready for one to put on. But ever so many well educated and patriotic persons are totally ignorant of the fact that George and Ben are on the crab pattern and need a change of wearing apparel in the hot sultry days.

Just at present George and Ben are wearing their summer weight clothing. They made the change along about May 1, when the warm days set in and the crabs began to shed their armor plate and shop windows were decked out in the latest things in hot weather regery. George and Ben suffer terribly from the heat. Keep them in their winter things beyond the May 1 limit and whole sheets of Georges and Bens will curl up and crack and stick to the furniture and otherwise make eloquent protest against the cruel disregard of their feelings and the dictates of fashion.

Kind-hearted souls in the Postoffice Department down in Washington were the first to discover this little human failing on the part of George and Ben. Gum experts were called into consultation and the problem was soon solved. What George and Ben needed was a change of glue.

The difference between the summer and winter coats worn by George and Ben is one entirely of weight. Suggestions that the flavor of the gum be varied also, so as to appeal more to the taste of those who go in for crushed fruit and chocolate concoctions in the warm days, have never been seriously considered by the attending physicians of the Postoffice Department.

As one of the visiting nurses in the cashier's department of the old post office explains it, George and Ben have become inordinately fussy in their old age and won't stick to their jobs—or to letters—unless their whims are attended to.

"You see," he said, "the winter gum is so heavy it soaks up all the moisture in summer and stamps curl up and crack and spoil on our hands. The summer gum, being lighter, keeps better during the hot season and sticks just as well. The stamps don't curl up and there is less waste. But this light gum won't do in cold weather. It freezes up and the stamps won't stick, no matter how hard you lick them. So we go back to the winter weight gums."

All of which works out very well in Chicago, where Ben and George are in such great demand that the postoffice officials have to send to Washington every week or ten days for a fresh supply. The Government bureau of engraving and printing is already beginning to manufacture winterweight Bens and Georges, and along toward the end of September, when the local office calls for more, it will get its Bens and Georges with their new heavy weight gum coats.

But out in the rural districts the law of demand and supply works less smoothly and there is intense suffering for Ben and George when the cold snap comes. In these places supplies of Bens and Georges are ordered at longer intervals—enough to last three or four months—sometimes—and it frequently happens that Oct. 1 finds the supply still going strong. Thus Ben and George are obliged to enter upon their winter labors wearing their last summer's garments, which is tough on Ben and George, to say nothing of the home folks who have to do the licking.

Dinner Stories

"Ah, my poor man," said the benevolent old lady, "I suppose you are often pinched by want and hunger, are you not?"

 "Yesum, and cops."

Making the best of a bad situation, a campaign orator replied to the claims of a rival candidate for office as follows: "Fellow citizens, my competitor has told you of the services he rendered in the late war. I will follow his example, and I will tell you of mine. He basely insinuates that I was deaf to the voice of honor in that crisis. The truth is I acted a humble part in that memorable contest. When the tocsin of war summoned the chivalry of the country to rally to the defense of the nation, I, fellow citizens, animated by that patriotic spirit that glows in every American's bosom, hired a substitute for that war, and the bones of that man, fellow citizens, now lie bleaching in the valley of the Shenandoah!"

Some years ago a Philadelphia merchant sent a cargo of goods to Constantinople. After the supercargo saw the bales and boxes safely landed, he inquired where they could be stored. "Leave them here—it won't rain tonight," was the reply. "But I dare not leave them thus exposed; some of the goods might be stolen," said the supercargo. The Mohammedan merchant burst into a loud laugh as he replied: "Don't be alarmed; there isn't a Christian within fifty miles of here."

MONUMENTS ON BORDER WEST

MAJORITY ARE OF CAST IRON, WEIGHING 800 POUNDS EACH AND 6 FEET TALL

VERY FEW CITIES ON THE LINE

At Highest Point There Is an Abundance of Game and Excellent Hunting.

Washington—That most of the United States—Mexico boundary line—extending from El Paso, Tex., to the Pacific Coast is described in the following war geography bulletin of the National Geographic Society:

"After leaving the Rio Grande, the natural boundary, and striking due west from El Paso for 100 miles, the international line between the United States and Mexico changes direction five times before reaching the Pacific Coast. As if it had struck an insurmountable obstacle in the Big Hatched Mountains, it turns at right angles, and extends to the south for 30 miles, then strikes west again for a distance of more than 160 miles to a point beyond Nogales. Forming an obtuse angle, the line now runs in a northerly direction for its longest leg more than 230 miles, until it reaches the Colorado River, which forms the boundary for 20 miles from southwest to northeast. At Yuma, near the juncture of the Gila River, with the Colorado, the line takes its final change of direction, toward the west, terminating in the Pacific 140 miles distant.

"This boundary is marked by 258 monuments, more than 200 of which are of cast iron weighing 800 pounds. They are six feet tall, and set in concrete. The expense of their erection, borne jointly by Mexico and the United States, averaged $150 each.

"With the exception of Bisbee, Santat Cruz, Yuma and San Diego, there are few settlements of any size within a 20 mile zone on each side of the boundary, embracing an area of 24,000 square miles.

"Although the boundary was chosen arbitrarily, when the work of surveying began it was found that the line between the Colorado and the Rio Grande followed almost exactly the summit of the divide separating the waters flowing north into the United States from those flowing south into Mexico.

"The highest point on the line is at the summit of the San Luis range, a part of the continental divide. The elevation is 6600 feet, which is nearly 3000 feet above El Paso. It is in this high altitude that quantities of game are to be found, making it one of the most interesting sections of the line. Here antelope, deer, bear and wild turkeys are plentiful, and the valleys from the evergreen oaks of the picturesque valleys attract great flocks of wild pigeons. Many years ago there were a few straggling settlements in this region, but they were abandoned during the raids of the ruthless Apache chief, Geronimo.

"One of the most considerable towns along the border is Bisbee, Ariz., with a population of 9000. It is situated in the Mule Mountains, 10 miles from the border. Tombstone, which is 20 miles northwest of Bisbee, was once one of the great mining camps of the world.

"In a valley to the west of the Baboquivari Mountains, also called the Pozo Verde Mountains, 200 miles east of the Colorado River, the traveler sometimes is so unfortunate as to encounter a sand storm which in severity rivals the torrid tempests of the Sahara Desert."

"Home rule"

in the deceptive sense in which the brewers use it is saloon rule!

It has nothing whatever to do with the home!

It is a trick to get home-loving workmen to lend their vote to something that they SUPPOSE will benefit their homes and the homes of their drink-addicted co-workers!

"Home Rule" is a wolf in sheep's clothing. It hides its fangs under the cloak of apparent respectability, in the hope that it may lure the unthinking into voting for a measure that would help perpetuate the saloon!

Under "home rule" ONE "WET" TOWN could debauch fatherhood and young manhood and impoverish homes in EVERY DRY TOWN NEAR IT!

Statewide Prohibition

will knock out every saloon in the state and stop this foul liquor traffic

Statewide prohibition of the liquor traffic will prevent any possibility of ONE "WET" Town or County debauching the surrounding dry towns or counties!

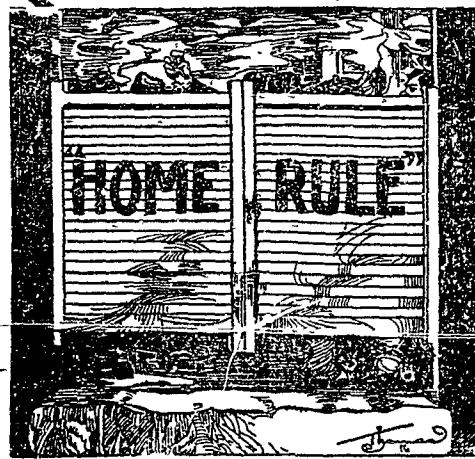

Statewide prohibition will cure this state of the saloon and liquor traffic with its trail of slow death, crime, insanity and poverty!

Statewide prohibition will insure food, clothing, shelter and peaceful security to thousands of families who now lack these things because the saloon gets the money that should be spent for them!

Statewide prohibition will remove the corrupting influence of the saloon from politics!
