KNIGHTS TEMPLAR HOLD INSPECTION

The annual inspection of Northville Commandery No. 39, Tuesday evening was a very enjoyable one for the Sir Knights, and the gathering was well attended.

Right Eminent Sir Edmond S. Rankin of Kalamazoo, Grand Commander of Michigan, was the officer detailed to inspect the books, quarters and give instruction regarding the smooth handling of the ritual work. His criticisms and suggestions were kindly given and very instructive and greatly encouraged the officers and members.

A company of 45 Sir Knights set down to a Thanksgiving dinner prepared by Chef Newton Colt and served by members of Union Chapter, all under direction of the Commissionary department, whose efficient chairman is Sir William Gorton.

Northville Commandery has been growing vigorously during the past two years and its membership increased from 57 to 113, with still further additions for December. This is in line with similar developments in most Commanderies through the state. The local increase is significant for Northville Commandery, as it has attracted the favorable attention of both Grand and individual Commanderies.

Next Tuesday evening, the Sir Knights will have the pleasure of seeing the Order of the Temple exemplified by Sir Frank W. Lansing, P. C., Howell Commandery, No. 28.

Some other Grand officers may appear at this time also.

REPAIRS STILL GOING ON.

The repairs and alterations being made at the Ford plant on Main street, east, are being pushed as rapidly as possible, though frequent delays have been caused by inability to secure the necessary material.

A handsome new cornice is one of the latest improvements being added to the exterior of the building, while new doors are being put in the main building. The first floor of the small brick building adjoining the plant is being remodeled into an office, while the second floor is being converted into a rest room for women. On this floor commodious toilets will be placed for women and men also. All the changes and repairs are being done in a very painstaking manner and have the appearance of permanency.

There will be toilets on each floor and all the plans seem to have in mind the comfort and well-being of those who will be employed there. The building will be really better than a new one when all the changes and repairs have been made, for the material used in its construction was of much better quality than could be secured today.

A new addition for the power plant will be erected on the north side and the remodeled engine will be ready within a few weeks.

MICHIGAN FARMERS PLAN HEAD-QUARTERS.

Michigan farmers who will attend the International Live Stock exposition at Chicago from November 29 to December 6, or the Hay and Grain show at the same time, are planning to have a central headquarters so that they can all be together. The Hotel Brevoort, 120 West Madison street, has been designated as "Michigan Headquarters," according to an announcement sent out by Frank Sandhammer, assistant state leader of county agents. Those who plan to attend the shows are advised to secure their hotel reservations at least a week in advance, as Chicago accommodations are expected to be taxed to the limit by the great crowds of farmers who will gather from all over the country.

PARENT-TEACHERS ASSOCIATION.

In accordance with the announcement made at the recent reception to the teachers of the village schools, Supt. D. C. Bowen has called a meeting of parents and those interested in school work, for next Tuesday evening, November 26th, at the High school gymnasium. At this time a Parent-Teachers association will be formed. The need for such an organization is apparent. Northville is making rapid growth in population and the school is growing with it. At the meetings the association plans can be discussed and the administration enabled to form a definite educational policy for the district.

It is hoped that all parents will feel under obligation to be at the school house on next Tuesday evening. The time is 7:30.

FORESTERS HAD A MERRY TIME

The meeting of Northville Foresters Monday night was one of the big events of the season and nearly 300 people gathered to partake of the hospitality so generously extended by the officers and members of the local court. The members of the Union degree team of Detroit came in a special car over the D. U. R. bringing with them Grand Chief Ranger, A. J. Hamlin and Grand Past Secretary, A. H. Saunders of Detroit, Past Grand Chief Ranger, S. S. Crohn and Grand Secretary, Wm. H. Brown of Pontiac. The visiting degree team gave a mock initiation which created great merriment, and at the conclusion of the work Chief Ranger Geo. Martz called upon the Grand Court officers for remarks and all responded with words of appreciation and good fellowship. Northville has a member of the Grand Court in the person of Lester D. Stage, who is grand junior beetle, and he was called upon and responded in a most creditable manner.

A fine lunch was served and then dancing followed, music being furnished by Montgomery's orchestra and a good program was enjoyed.

VERY PLEASANT ENTERTAINMENT

The festival given by Graham Harris, violinist, at the Alceum theatre last Friday night, under the auspices of the Northville Woman's club, proved a delightful treat and afforded all who attended a very pleasant entertainment. Mr. Harris was assisted by Margaret Hannebach pianist, and Mr. Gusikoff, cellist, and the program rendered justified all the complimentary things that were said of Mr. Harris by those who planned the delightful affair. While all of Mr. Harris' numbers clearly displayed his skill as one of the most promising of our young violinists, his rendition of Concerto No. 1, by Cecil Burrell, and Concerto D. Minor by Weintraski, was accomplished with artistic triumph.

Mr. Gusikoff, cellist, rendered a cello Sonata, by Grieg, and responded to the hearty encore given him. The closing number given by Mr. Harris was "Tambourin Chinois," by Kreisler and at its conclusion the audience would not let him go without another selection.

The Woman's club and those who had the arrangements for the recital in charge deserve special praise for their efforts in affording Northville people such a really enjoyable treat. The Record trusts they may be encouraged to bring other attractions here during the winter months.

DEATH OF FORMER NORTHVILLE LADY.

After an illness of only a few months, Mrs. Charles B. Bristol died at her home in Highland Park, Friday night, November 14th. Mrs. Bristol was 55 years of age and leaves besides her husband, one daughter, Lora. The funeral was held from the home Monday afternoon with interment in Wood Lawn cemetery at Redford.

Mr. and Mrs. Bristol and daughter were residents of this village for many years and were held in high esteem by their many friends, who deeply sympathize with the family in the great loss that has come to them.

Mrs. Bristol was very active for many years in the local circle of The King's Daughters, serving as leader for two years and she was a member of the state executive board for a period of six years. All who enjoyed her acquaintance loved her for her gentleness and the sweet christian character she always displayed.

FARMINGTON BOWLERS WON.

Last Friday night a very enjoyable bowling contest took place at the Hinkley alleys in this village, when teams representing Farmington and Northville contested for honors. The visiting team was composed of Messrs. Gildemeister, Grace, Clark, Moss and Lapham, while Messrs. H. S. German, Perry Austin, Campbell, Jas. Woolley and Albert Baughman represented Northville. The first game of the series was won by Northville, but the other two were captured by the Farmington team.

GAVE AN AT HOME.

A very charming affair was given last Friday afternoon from 3 to 5, when Mrs. L. F. Eaton entertained in honor of her daughter-in-law, Mrs. Levi M. Eaton, at her home on Rogers street. The guests were received by Mrs. L. M. Eaton and her sister, Miss Cumloss of Toledo. The rooms were prettily decorated with chrysanthemums, and during the afternoon dainty refreshments were served.

"I CANNOT ORDER; I AM A SLAVE."

Synopsis: In 1832 Lieutenant Knox of the regular army is on duty at Fort Armstrong, Rock Island, Ill. In territory threatened by disaffected Indians, the commandant sends him with dispatches to St. Louis. He takes passage on the steamer Warrior and makes the acquaintance of Judge Beauchamp, a planter, and of Joe Kirby (the Devil's Own), notorious gambler. Knox learns Judge Beauchamp has a daughter, Eloise, and a granddaughter, Rene, offspring of a son whom the judge has disowned. Rene's mother is a negress, and she and her daughter, having been freed, are slaves under the law, although the girls have been brought up as mistresses. Kirby induces the judge to stake his plantation and negro servants on a poker game unfairly dealt by Joe Carver, Kirby's partner. Kirby accuses the judge of cheating. Beauchamp, infuriated, drops dead. Knox tries to induce Kirby to give up his stolen winnings. Kirby and Carver throw Knox overboard. The lieutenant swims ashore and reaches a hut. Knox has unconscious for ten days. Recovering, he finds he is in a cabin owned by Pete, a "free negress" who had shot him, mistaking him for an enemy. His dispatches have been forwarded. Recovering from his wound, Knox sends Pete to bring Haynes, Beauchamp's lawyer, and they arrange, with Pete's help, to get the women to the cabin of an abolitionist, Amos Shunk, before Kirby comes. At the Beauchamp place Knox overhears a conversation between the sheriff and his deputy, and learns the truth about the situation. He is witness to an interview between Kirby and a girl who says she is Rene Beauchamp. Kirby insults the girl, and Knox attacks him. Believing Kirby dead, Knox explains affairs to the girl, and she agrees to try to escape with him. They fail to find Pete where he had been posted, so Knox seizes the sheriff's keelboat, along with Sam, the slave left in charge, and they begin their voyage up the river. Next day a steamer passes and Sam recognizes Kirby on board. At Shunk's place they find a dead negro, treacherously shot down from behind, lying in the woods near the cabin. It is a stunning surprise.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

He was slow in following, hanging back as I approached closer to the motionless form, and I could hear the muttering of his lips. Unquestionably the man was dead; of this I was assured before I even knelt beside him. He lay on his face in a litter of dead leaves, and almost the first thing I noticed was the death wound back of his ear, where a large-caliber bullet had pierced the brain. His exposed hands proved him a negro, and it was with a feeling of unusual repugnance that I touched his body, turning it over sufficiently to see the face. All at once I knew him, unable wholly to repress a cry of startled surprise as I stared down into the upturned face—the dead man evidently murdered, shot treacherously from behind, was Free Pete. I sprang to my feet, gazing about blindly into the dim woods, my mind for the instant dazed by the importance of this discovery. What could it mean? How could it have happened? By what means had he reached this spot in advance of us, and at whose hand had he fallen? He could have been there only for one purpose, surely—in an attempt to guide Eloise Beauchamp and the quadroon Della. Then what had become of the women? Where were they now?

I stumbled backward to the support of the log, unable to answer any one of these questions, remembering only in that moment that I must tell Rene the truth.

"Tell me—please," she begged. "Is the man dead? Who is he, do you know?"

"Yes," I replied desperately. "He is dead, and I recognized his face. He is the negro Pete and has been killed, shot from behind."

"Pete," she echoed, grasping at the log to keep erect, her eyes on that dimly revealed figure in the leaves. "Free Pete, Carlton's Pete? How—could he have got here? Then—then the others must have been with him. What has become of them?"

"It is all mystery; the only way to solve it is for us to go on. It can do me no good to stand here, staring at this dead body. When we reach the cabin we may learn what has occurred. Go on ahead, Sam, and we will follow—don't be afraid, boy; it is not the dead who hurt us."

She clung tightly to me, shrinking past the motionless figure. She was sidehill, and so overhung with trees as to be invisible, except from the direction of our approach. We could see only the side wall, which contained one open window, and was a one-room affair, low and flat-roofed, built of logs. Its outward appearance was peaceful enough, and the swift beat of my pulse quieted as I took rapid survey of the surroundings.

"Sam," I commanded, "you are to remain here with Rene, while I learn the truth yonder. Yes," to her quick protest, "that will be the better way; there is no danger and I shall not be gone but for a moment."

I seated her on a low stump and left them there together, Sam's eyes rolling about in a frightened effort to perceive every covert in the woods, but the girl satisfied to watch me intently as I moved cautiously forward. A dozen steps brought me within view of the front of the cabin. The door had been smashed in and hung dangling from one hinge. Another step, now with a pistol gripped in my hand, enabled me to obtain a glimpse within. Across the pincheon threshold, his feet even protruding without, lay a man's body; beyond him, half concealed by the shadows of the interior, appeared the outlines of another, with face upturned to the roof, plainly distinguishable because of a snow-white beard.

CHAPTER IX.

The Trail of the Raiders.

Shocked and unmanned as I was at this discovery, to pause there staring at those gruesome figures would have only brought fresh alarm to the two watching my every movement from the edge of the clearing. Gripping my nerves, I advanced over the first body, watching for any sign of the presence of life within the cabin. There was none—the work of the murder had been completed, and the perpetrators had fled. The dead man, with ghastly countenance upturned to the roof rafters, and the spiny beard, was undoubtedly the negro helper, Amos Shunk. Pete's description of the appearance of the man left this identification beyond all dispute. He had been stricken down by a savage blow which had literally crushed in one side of his head, but his dead hands yet gripped a rifle, as though he had fallen fighting to the last.

The other man, the one lying across the threshold, had been shot; although I did not ascertain this fact until after I turned the body over sufficiently to reveal the face. This was disfigured by the wound and covered with blood, so that the features could scarcely be seen, yet I instantly recognized the fellow—Carver. Surprised out of all control by this unexpected discovery, I steadied myself against the log wall, fully aroused to the sinister meaning of his presence. To a degree the complete significance of this tragedy instantly gripped my mind. If this fellow Carver had been one of the assailants then it was absolutely certain that Kirby must also have been present—the leader of the attack. This inevitably meant that both men had been aboard the steamer, and later were put ashore at the mouth of the Illinois. And, now that I thought about it, why not? It was no accident, and I wondered that the possibility had never occurred to me before. The gambler naturally knew all the gossip of the river, and beyond question he would be aware of the reported existence of this underground station for runaway slaves. It was common talk as far down as St. Louis, and his mind would instantly revert to the possibility that the fleeing Rene might seek escape through the assistance of Shunk. The mysterious vanishing of the boat would serve to increase that suspicion. Even if this had not occurred to him at first, the steamer would have brought news that no keelboat had been seen on the lower river, while the captain of the John B. Glover, or someone else on board, would have been sure to have mentioned the negro helper and suggest that he might have had a hand in the affair. To follow that trail was, indeed, the most natural thing for Kirby to do. He had not overtaken Rene because she was not yet there, but he had unexpectedly come upon the other fugitives, and, even though the encounter had cost the life of his henchman, Carver, it also resulted in the death of two men who had come between him and his prey—the negro and the abolitionist. The scene cleared in my brain and became vivid and real. I could almost picture in detail each act of the grim tragedy. The two revengeful trackers—at there were only two engaged, for others might have been recruited on the steamer—must have crept up to the hut in the night or early morning. Possibly Kirby had learned of some other means of approach from the river. Anyway the fact that Shunk had been trapped within the cabin would indicate the final attack was a surprise. The negro might have been asleep outside and met his death in an attempt at escape, but the old white man, finding flight impossible, had fought desperately to the last and had killed one antagonist before receiving his death blow. This was all plain enough, but what had become of Kirby, of the two women, Eloise and the quadroon mother?

Uncertain what to do or how to act, I could only turn to the waiting girl and the negro to tell them what I had found.

They listened as though scarcely comprehending, Sam uttering little moans of horror, and appearing helpless from fright, but Rene quiet, merely exhibiting her emotion in the whiteness of her face and quickened breathing. Her eyes, wide open, questioning, seemed to sense my uncertainty. As I ended the tale and concluded with my theory as to what had occurred following the deed of blood, her quick mind asserted itself.

"But this must have happened very lately; the fire still smoldered, you said. When do you think that steamer could have landed here?"

"Why, perhaps, early last evening," I said. "And it has not occurred to you that the boat might have waited here while the man Kirby went ashore?"

"No; that could scarcely be true, if the steamer was transporting troops; what was it you were thinking about?"

"It is all dark, of course," she said slowly, "we can only guess at what happened. But to me it seems impossible that the man Kirby could have accomplished this alone—without assistance. The boat we saw at the landing was not his; it must have been Pete's, and there is no evidence of any other trail leading here from the river. If, as you imagine, he knew the captain of that steamer, and some of the other men aboard were Missourians and defenders of slavery, he would have no trouble in enlisting their help to recover his runaway slaves. They would be only too glad to break up an abolitionist's nest. That is what I believe has happened; they came ashore in a party, and the steamer waited for them."

"And you think the prisoners were taken along? Yet Kirby would not want to transport them up the river." "As to that," she insisted, "he could not help himself. He needed to get away quickly, and there were no other means available. He could only hope to connect later with some craft south-bound on which to return."

"You may be right," I admitted, impressed, yet not wholly convinced. "But what can we do?"

"She looked at me reproachfully. "You should not ask that of a girl." The words stung me. "No; this is my task. I was thoughtlessly cruel. Neither can we remain here, only long enough to bury those bodies. It would be inhuman not to do that. Sam, there is an old spade leaning against the cabin wall—go over and get it."

He started on his mission reluctantly enough, glancing constantly backward over his shoulder to insure himself of our presence and carefully avoiding any approach to the open door. Unpleasant as our task was it proved to be less difficult of accomplishment than I had anticipated. There were blankets in the cabin bunks, and in these I wrapped the bodies. They were too heavy, however, for me to transport alone, and it required some threatening to induce Sam to give me the assistance necessary to deposit them in the shallow grave. Only the fear that I would not have him with us longer compelled his joining me. He was more frightened at the thought of being left alone than of contact with the dead. Sam filled in the loose earth, rounding it into form, and the two of us stood above the fresh mound, our bent heads bared to the sunlight, while I endeavored to repeat brokenly a few words of prayer. Now our first necessity was food. Of this I found a fair supply, and compelling Sam to assist me, we hastily prepared a warm meal over the open fire. It was eaten without one of us desiring to remain in the midst of that scene of death; and the very knowledge that the dread burial was completed and that we were now free to depart brought to all of us a renewed courage.

It scarcely seemed probable that one man alone, or even two men, had committed this crime, and the sole survivor disappear so completely with the prisoners. I had turned each detail over and over in my thought, while I worked; yet to but little purpose. The only present solution of the problem seemed to be our return to that hidden basin where our boat lay, and then remaining there in concealment until the darkness of another night rendered it safe to once more venture the river.

I spoke of this to her, as I finally approached where she rested on the stump, eager and glad to escape from all memories of that somber cabin I had just left.

"You—you are no longer so confident," she said; "your plan has failed."

"I am afraid it has," I admitted. "For it was based altogether on the assistance of Amos Shunk. He is no longer alive, and I do not know where to turn for guidance. There would seem to be danger in every direction; the only question is—in which way lies the least?"

"You begin to regret your attempt to aid me?"

"No," impulsively. "So far as that goes I would do it all over again. Your safety means more to me the now than ever before—you must believe that."

"Why should I? All I have brought you is trouble. I can read in your face how discouraged you are. You must not think I do not understand. I do understand—perfectly. What you have done has been only a response to impulse; merely undertaken through a spirit of adventure. Then—then why not let it end here; and—Sam and I can go on to—whatever is before us? It is nothing to you."

"You actually believe I would consent to that?" I asked in startled surprise at the vehemence of her words. "That I could prove such a cur?"

"But why not? It would not be a cowardly act at all. I could not blame you, for I have no claim on your service—never have had. You have done a thousand times too much already; you have risked honor, reputation, and neglected duty to aid my escape; and—and I am nothing to you—can be nothing."

"Nothing to me?" "Certainly not. Why speak like that? Have you forgotten again that I am a slave—a negress? Think, Lieutenant Knox, what it would mean to you to be caught in my company; to be overtaken while attempting to assist me in escaping from my master. Now no one dreams of such a thing, and no one ever need dream. You have had your adventure; let it end here. I shall be grateful to you all ways, but—but I cannot bear to drag you deeper into this mire."

"You order me to leave you?" "I cannot order; I am a slave. My only privilege is to request, urge, implore. I am merely insisting that it will be best—for us both—for you to go. Surely you also must realize that this is true?"

"You have been brooding over all this," I said gently, "sitting here alone, and thinking while we worked. I am not going to answer you now. There is no need. Nothing can be done until night, whatever we decide upon. You will go back with us to the boat?"

"Yes; I simply cannot stay here," her eyes wandering toward the cabin. "I took the lead on the return, finding the path easy enough to follow in the full light of day. The sincere honesty of her plea—the knowledge that she actually meant it—only served to draw me closer, to strengthen my determination not to desert. Her face was ever before me as I advanced—a bravely pathetic face, wonderfully womanly in its girlish contour—appealing to every impulse of my manhood. I admitted the truth of what she said—it had been largely love of adventure, the rash recklessness of youth, which had brought me here. But this was my inspiration; no longer. I had begun to realize that something deeper, more worthy, now held me to the task. What this was I made no attempt to analyze—possibly I did not dare—but, nevertheless, the mere conception of deserting her in the midst of this wilderness was too utterly repugnant for expression. No, not that; whatever happened it would never be that."

The last few rods of our journey lay through thick underbrush, and beneath the spreading branches of interlacing trees. Suddenly I emerged upon the bank of the creek, with the rude log wharf directly before me. I stopped transfixed, staring at the water—nothing else greeted my eyes; both the boats were gone.

This unexpected discovery came to me like a blow; the very breath seemed to desert my lungs, as I stared down at the vacant stream. We had been outgunned, tricked, and all our theories as to what had occurred were wrong. The duty we had performed to the dead had cost us our own chance to escape. Instead of being alone, as we had supposed, we were in the midst of enemies; we had been seen, watched, and while we loitered ashore the murderers had stolen our boat and vanished, leaving us there helplessly marooned. All this was plain enough now, when it was already too late to remedy the evil. The struggling girl emerged through the tangle of shrubs and paused suddenly at my side, her lips giving utterance to a cry of surprise.

"The boat! It is not here?" "No; there is not a sign of it. Those fellows must be still in the neighborhood; must have seen us when we first came."

"But what are we to do?"

I had no ready answer, yet the echo of utter despair in her voice stirred me to my own duty as swiftly as though she had thrust a knife into my side. Do? We must do something! We could not sit down idly there in the swamp. And to decide what was to be attempted was my part. If Kirby and whoever was with him had stolen the missing boat, as undoubtedly they had, they could have possessed but one purpose—escape. They were inspired to the act by a desire to get away, to flee from the scene of their crime. They must believe that we were left helpless, unable to pursue them or create alarm. Yet if it was Kirby why had he fled so swiftly, making no effort to take Rene captive also? It was she he was seeking; for the purpose of gaining possession of her these murders had been committed. Why, then, should he run away when he must have known the girl was already in his grasp? The same thought apparently occurred to her.

"You—you believe that Kirby did this?"

"What other conclusion is possible? We know that he passed us on the steamer—Sam saw him plainly. It was his man, Carver, whom we found dead in the hut. It could have been no one else."

"But," she questioned, unsatisfied, "he would have only one reason for being here—hunting me, his slave. That was his one purpose, was it not? If he saw us then he must have known of my presence, that I was here with you. Why should he make an attempt to take me with him? Why should he steal our boat and run away?"

"One theory is as good as another," I said. "And mine so far have all been wrong. What do you make of it, Sam?"

"Who, sah? Me, sah?" "Yes, take a guess at this."

"Pears like," he said, deliberately, rubbing his ear with one hand, "as how it mought have happened dis yere way, sah. Ah ain't a-sayin' it was—'t mought be. Maybe Massa Kirby nebber got no sight ob us 'tall, an' was afeerd fer ter stay. He just knowed a party was yere—likely 'nough sum Black abolitionists, who'd be huntin' him if he didn't cl'ar out, just so soon as dey found dat Amos Shunk was dead. Here was his chance, an' he done took it."

He bent suddenly forward, his glance at the edge of the log. "Dey ain't took but just de one boat, sah, fer de odder an shovd under dar out'r sight."

As I stooped further over I saw that this was true, the small rowboat, with the oars undisturbed in its bottom, had been pressed in beneath the concealment of the log wharf, almost completely hidden from above, yet to all appearances uninjured. The very fact that it should have been thus left only added to the mystery of the affair. If it had been Kirby's deliberate purpose to leave us there stranded ashore why had he failed to crush in the boat's planking with a rock? Could the leaving of the craft in fit condition for our use be part of some carefully conceived plan; a bait to draw us into some set trap? Or did it occur merely as an incident of their hurried flight? These were manseverable questions, yet the mere knowledge that the boat was actually there and in navigable condition promised us an opportunity to escape. While hope remained, however vague, it was not my nature to despair. Whether accident or design had been the cause made no odds—I was willing to match my wits against Kirby and endeavor to win. And I must deal with facts just as they were.

ONE EVENING

By MILDRED WHITE.

(Copyright, 1919, Western Newspaper Union)

The leaves blew in crackling heaps across the wind-swept veranda as the man hurrying to escape an October shower ascended the steps. To all appearances the old house was vacant; darkly unwelcome the windows confronted him, and there was no response to his ring.

The stranger lingered as though loath to leave, then went slowly around the garden path. At the lower end of the house a light rewarded him. It shone from a curtained window, and the man went unhesitatingly to a side door set in a vine-covered porch.

As he raised his hand to the old-fashioned door bell, he paused, struck by a comfortable home-like picture. Inside, a woman was seated in the glow of a rose-colored lamp. Her face was bent over the crimson wool she was knitting, and her silvery hair in curling tendrils touched her pink cheeks. There was something singularly youthful about that bent head, notwithstanding the whiteness of its soft coiled hair. Though cold winds shook the porch, the woman inside was clothed in dainty white. And presently, as though instinctively aware of a watching eye, she raised her face in the lamp light, while the man outside caught his breath, as one who had seen a vision.

Then, no longer hesitant, his summons pealed through the rooms. The woman, arising, stood startled by the table; as she uttered a word, a great dog came from beneath it, aggressively speaking protection. The animal, preceding her to the door, she opened it, awaiting the stranger's mission.

The sound of his voice was pleasing assurance.

"I found no one at home in the front of the house," he said, "and so came around here to beg for shelter. I am overtaken on a dark road in the storm. May I ask the liberty of running my car into the barn and, if possible, accommodation for myself over night? Twice I have found accommodation; he hastened to add at her stare of astonishment, "in this same house."

"I see." The woman's voice sounded sweet in his ears.

"But you misunderstand. That was in the great part of the house which is separated from my small wing. I live here—alone. My neighbors have gone away for the evening but will return later."

She considered a moment, her hand on the dog's head, the wind tearing around the corner tossed wet leaves against their faces.

"You are welcome to wait in my sitting room until they return," she said impulsively.

"It may help you pass the time, Mr. Cole," she said. But the man took a chair opposite her own, regarding her thoughtfully.

"I would like," he said, "to tell you of one evening in my life which this one recalls."

She looked at him with a quick, inviting smile, then into her blue eyes came a wondering, retrospective light. "It was on just such an evening years ago," the man went on, "that I lost my way in this same road, and begged for shelter for the night at the same house. An elderly couple welcomed me hospitably, and by their fire-side, in a room like this, we sat and talked of many things. They were interested in all that I could tell, while nearby, her fingers busy with embroidery, but her beautiful eyes often upraised to mine, sat a young girl. The man paused. "There seems nothing more to tell about her than that," he said musingly, "but her very presence there, her personality appealed to me as no woman ever had appealed—before."

"It was she who bade me good night, passing at last up the high stairway with but one backward glance to soften my disappointment. I was obliged to leave very early the next morning. Back in my city home I realized in astonishment that I had not learned the name of my protectors or more about the young girl than that they called her 'Le.' Discouraging this finality, to an ardent heart which would have confided its affection to paper, seeking the faint hope of a reply, the girl's unforgettable face haunted me for a year. Then a second time I went back to the lonely road and sought shelter. Strangers opened the door of the house, strangers took me in. The old MacGregors were dead they said."

"Their daughter?" I asked breathlessly.

"Dead also," they replied.

"It was as though my future had ended suddenly before its beginning. Yet in my heart 'Le' still lived. One evening had made for me her personality a deathless thing. Always I saw her, silent, sweet, appealing."

The man arose, his face was white with emotion.

"Tonight," he said, "I came again."

The woman arose also. She spoke softly, hastily.

"I—remember it all," she said. "I was visiting grandmother and grandfather then. There was something about you that one did not—forget; your glad frankness, perhaps yourself. I am Leonie. When my grandparents died they left to me this home. I rent the bigger half, and try to make my own little home—here."

In the rosy lamp light the two stood and looked into each other's faces. Before them seemed to stretch a future as rose-colored and as bright.

She Clung Tightly to Me, Shrinking Past the Motionless Figure.

not sobbing; her eyes were dry, yet every movement, each glance exhibited her depth of horror. I drew her closer, thoughtless of what she was, my heart yearning to speak words of comfort, yet realizing there was nothing left me to say.

"Do not mind me," she said, pausing before the utterance of each word to steady her voice. "I—I am not going to break down. It—it is the suddenness—the shock. I—I shall be strong again in a minute."

"You must be," I whispered, "for their lives may depend on us."

It was a short path before us and became more clearly defined as we advanced. A sharp turn brought us into full view of the cabin, which stood in a small opening, built against the

TO ERECT LIVING MEMORIALS.

A state-wide campaign for the erection of memorial community houses to honor Michigan men who served against Germany has been started in this state by the American Legion. Putting up of such structures in every city and town of Michigan in which the Legion is represented is urged in the campaign, which will follow lines similar to the organized effort being carried on by the Bureau of Memorial Buildings or War Camp Community Service.

Michigan communities which will have social centers as living memorials to local men who served against the Kaiser include Detroit, Adrian, Alpena, Big Rapids, Eaton Rapids, Fremont, Grand Haven, Grand Rapids, Harbor Beach, Houghton, Ludington, Mt. Clement, St. Joseph and Zeeland.

In their crusade to have communities erect the memorial centers, the heads of the Bureau of Memorial Buildings point out the need for perpetuation of the cause for which Americans fought and died and died. The ideals for which they made their sacrifices, say the Bureau leaders, must be kept alive.

"There is a form of memorial which can do all this and more," says a recent Bureau statement. "This is a community building—a Liberty House—which is at one and the same time symbolic and practical. It symbolizes the ideals of democracy and service for which the war was fought, in providing a means by which those ideals may be carried into effect. It is practical because it enables our soldiers' fellow townsmen to give with their heads as well as with their hearts—for such a structure will help the living while commemorating the dead. Its main purpose would be to serve the town's common good."

"This living memorial is appropriate also in that it would provide a meeting place and center both for the men who are home from service in the army or navy and for the citizens in general. Here rank and social standing would be left at the door and all would meet on a common level of mutual worth and good fellowship."

"In many vital ways," the statement says further, "the Liberty House would meet the hitherto unmet needs of community life. Its social, recreational and educational value would be potentially immense and would easily be translated into facts."

The matter of erecting a suitable memorial for Northville boys has been discussed briefly and there is considerable sentiment in this community for such an undertaking. Surely there is need in Northville for just such a memorial as many other towns are planning and could it not be a good idea to set the necessary machinery in motion here? The people of this section could do a great many more things for their boys and it would be a living memorial to our boys.

The shooting of United States service men at the Armistice Day celebration at Centralia, Wash., has caused a wave of indignation to sweep the country and in many places I W Ws and their followers have been pretty roughly used. Force seems to be the only thing these fellows fear and then only when the opposing forces are strong enough to beat them into submission. The government is taking a hand and it is hoped no quarter will be shown these irresponsible agitators. They have no respect for law and order, no regard for American institutions, and the government can do nothing better than to deport the whole outfit. When any man or set of men attempt to kill "our boys" who offered themselves in defense of their country while these miserable devils were at home trying to make trouble in our nation's plants, in our factories and upon our farms, it is high time they were taught some respect for the laws of the country. If the government cannot or will not handle this situation the people of the sections infested with these trouble-makers can be depended upon to clean up the gang. It's the government's place, however, to clean its own household, and the job ought to be done now and done thoroughly.

During the past week The Record has been forced to pay at the rate of $150 a ton for white print paper, such as it uses every week in producing this paper. Only a few years ago paper of this quality could be purchased at $2.10 per hundred pounds and the writer has purchased print at $38 per ton. The news print situation throughout the country is becoming very serious and during the past few days some of the large

Chicago dailies have offered ten cents a pound for one thousand tons of roll print, but could find no paper manufacturer who would accept their offer. As a result of the high cost of paper and labor many country weeklies have been compelled to raise their subscription rates to $2.00 and some to $2.50 per year. One thing is certain no publisher can extend unlimited credit on subscriptions in these times.

And now the price of chewing gum is to be raised again. Better look under the tables and chairs for the old "quid," girls.

At the conclusion of the feast the officers executed their work in a very pleasing manner to Mrs. Earl as she complimented them on their work.

The officers of Pontiac then gave their drill which was enjoyed by all.

RECORD SMASHING ENTRIES.

The interest in live stock has not been impaired by war exigencies is indicated by the heaviest entries for the twentieth anniversary exhibit of the International Live Stock exposition this year.

The 1919 entries exceed by nearly 700 head those of any previous exposition. Numbers, however, will not be at the expense of quality, as the aristocrats of the animal world, the prize winners of all other shows, will be assembled here in a final contest, making the 1919 exhibit superlative in every degree. The best seen stock of the world will be on view, insuring a series of the most spirited contests ever witnessed in a live stock display arena.

Fat as well as breeding stock will make a stellar display. The open air show, always a conspicuous feature, is a record-breaker.

Figures talk, possessing a reputation for veracity, not to be disregarded and a colossal exhibit of approximately 3,000 pure-bred and high-grade horses, cattle, hogs and sheep at Chicago this year, during the first week in December, will mark high tide in the sphere of live stock improvement effect.

MONSTER PREPARATIONS.

A small army of mechanics and laborers are at work preparing the mammoth structures for the 1919 International Live Stock Exhibition. This essential preliminary task, in order that we may fully celebrate the twentieth anniversary event, is being conducted on a more elaborate scale than ever before, the management being determined to insure the comfort of visitors, exhibitors and their charges. The spacious buildings and grounds are being artistically decorated.

Owing to the wonderful growth of the show and to properly house all entries, several more buildings are in process of preparation. An effort is being put forth to make the International Grain and Hay show, a new department of the International Live Stock exposition, on the same high level attained by this last mentioned institution.

Since the inauguration of the exposition, it has been the policy of the management to spare no expense to insure perfection in every detail.

Owing to increased cost of material and labor, these details might have been neglected this year, but the directors decided that it would be doubtful economy and the high standard of previous years will be maintained it not excelled.

When the gates of the exposition are opened on November 29th, for the great live stock roundup of the season, the public will realize that regardless of obstacles and abnormal conditions nothing is essential to the success of the exposition has been overlooked.

TO IMPROVE PHONE SERVICE.

According to the following Lansing dispatch the days of the habitual "listener" and visitor who very frequently interrupt telephone service are numbered.

"Those sweet young things—and older ones too—who persist in chattering a lot of things over telephone lines, are about to come under the ban of the Michigan public utilities commission."

So, too, those curious party-line listeners in

The commission is blazing new paths. It wants to establish standards of telephone service and practice, for the companies as well as the subscribers.

A tentative plan has been outlined. This authorizes the company to cut off service to "any and all persons on party lines who persistently insist on listening in and thus interfering with the service."

Then is wallows those who persist in gossiping for lengthy periods.

The plan would deny service to "any and all persons who persistently continue to visit beyond a period of five minutes over the telephone line."

In the same category are placed those who habitually use profane, indecent or insulting language to the operators or over the lines of any company, and "those who refuse, without adequate reason or excuse to surrender the use of a party line after a conversation of five minutes."

Further protection for patrons is proposed in the last of the 16 paragraphs so far planned. This states that "rendition of reasonably adequate service" shall entitle the company "to collect the legally authorized rates" and provides that in such service "shall not at any time be furnished, the subscriber shall be entitled to a credit upon his bill for the next ensuing period charged for, an amount of the advance payment billed equal to the ratio that the time he was without service bears to the period for which the advance payment is billed."

PROTECT YOUNG TREES.

The trunks of young orchard trees need careful protection at this season of the year against injury during the winter from mice and rabbits. Fruit tree bark furnishes such a palatable food for these small animals that serious loss is very likely to occur in orchards that are not protected.

"Trees that have been grown in sod or that have corn shocks stacked between the rows are particularly liable to injury from mice," says Prof. C. P. Halligan, head of the horticultural department at the Michigan Agricultural college. "On the other hand, trees that are in the neighborhood of thickets or brush run the same risk from rabbits."

There is no patent paint or wash that we can recommend to apply to trunks of trees to prevent such injury. Many of the materials that are often recommended are very likely to injure the bark. The most desirable protection of the trunks is given by the use of 1/4 inch mesh galvanized screen. This should be wrapped around the trunk and pressed into the ground for a depth of from 1 to 5 inches. It should extend up to the frame-work branches.

"Protection of this kind will effectively stop the animals from feeding."

Don't Mistake The Cause

Many Northville People Have Kidney Trouble and Do Not Know It. Do you have backache? Are you tired and worn out? Feel dizzy, nervous and depressed? Are the kidney secretions irregular? Highly colored, contain sediment? Likely your kidneys are at fault. Weak kidneys give warning of distress.

Heed the warning—don't delay—Use a tested kidney remedy—Read this Ann Arbor testimony.

P. J. Desmond, 301 W. Summit St., Ann Arbor, Mich., says: "Whenever my kidneys get weak, causing my back to ache or be sore, or the kidney secretions pass too freely, or when I am tired or languid, I use a box or so of Doan's Kidney Pills. I am soon all right again. Doan's have never failed to help me and I keep them in the house all the time and wouldn't be without them. I advise anyone to use Doan's Kidney Pills if troubled with their kidneys."

When it is remembered that Mr. Woods is the producer of such classic successes as "Within the Law," "The Yellow Ticket," "The Song of Songs," "Common Clay," and others, it must be acknowledged that a melodrama must be of the highest excellence to be classed among his best efforts.

"The Woman in Room 13," will be presented by a notable company of distinguished players, including Robert Edeson, Catherine Tower, Kenneth Hill, Charles Waldron, Mary Newcomb, DeWitt C. Jennings, others in the company are William Halligan, Charles Mather, Doré Rogers, Fay Wallace, Dorothy Parker and Roma Ray.

MESOPOTAMIA TO COME BACK

Prophecy That Ancient Land Is to Be Redeemed From Present State of Barrenness.

It may be remembered that when Gen. Sir Stanley Maude had to lay down his work with his life in Mesopotamia, that work was taken up and carried on successfully by Gen. Sir W. R. Marshall. The expedition which he sent up the Euphrates freed that river from the Turks, and just before the armistice the force which he led up the Tigris from Bagdad captured the entire Turkish army of 7,000 about 50 miles south of Mesul, the city which stands on the west bank opposite the ruins of Nineveh. Since then the country has had peace, and all the way north and west from Basra there has been a notable revival of commerce and agriculture. With a beginning of the great irrigation scheme devised by Sir William Willcocks. It was through irrigation that in ancient times the land developed its extraordinary fertility, and traces remain of the network of canals that formed the center of Babylonia.

Is there to be a renewal of that fertility in place of the desert barrenness produced by Turkish neglect and misadministration? General Marshall, who has returned to England, is of that opinion. Speaking recently at Durban he made one very remarkable statement. As a result of experiments, he said, it was believed that Mesopotamia would become the finest cotton-growing country in the world. That is a large expectation, too large to disturb cotton growers in other countries. Details of the experiments, showing surprising results, will have to be made known before the "sea island" territory of Georgia, South Carolina, and Florida can believe that its supremacy is threatened by Mesopotamia, or that the beautiful long-stapled silky wool of its peculiar variety can be excelled anywhere.

AZORES AT A STANDSTILL

Population Has Shown Little Change In Last Century—Lost Trade in Sugar and Tobacco.

The population of the Azores is about 245,000, the number of inhabitants having changed but little in the last century, and, if anything, having diminished. This fact is probably due to various political and social conditions, rather than climatic, agricultural, or other conditions of the islands. In the early days the Portuguese literally "raised cane" on the islands, and established a large sugar trade with England and other countries. Tobacco and fruits were also produced in great quantities, but with the discovery and settlement of Brazil, and other South American countries, Portugal rather discouraged production in the Azores in order to aid her colonies in South America. With the sugar and tobacco trade snatched from them, the Azoreans began the cultivation of the vine, and the making of wine and other liquors became one of the chief industries of the islands. The population consists mainly of Portuguese, Moorish, and Flemish settlers, with a few negroes and a fair sprinkling of English settlers.

Novel Apartment Building.

A San Francisco woman realty operator has planned a novel building. Her idea is to utilize a steep bluff 350 feet high. On it she proposes to erect a series of apartments running in stair-step fashion from the street down to the water of San Francisco bay.

It is proposed to have each apartment equipped with its own elevator entrance, pergola and roof garden, with a glass-covered inclined elevator connecting all with the private wharf for fishing and boating. Other features projected are a specially warmed sea-water bathing tank and glass inclosed and a heated playground for children on the beach. Steam heat, hot water, laundry, garage, billiard, club and ball rooms are to be provided as matters of course. The site commands a fine view of the Golden Gate and the sea outside, according to the prospectus, and it is said the apartments, which will rent at a prohibitive (for most of us) price, are already under lease, even before the building has been started.—Kansas City Star

His Opinion.

"True, women's fashions are so immodest as to shock the pure," said J. Fuller Gloom. "The summers are also hotter and the winters colder than they ever were before. Just as usual, the country is going headlong to the dogs. Every town in America has more fools and crooks and gossips in it, in proportion to its size, than any other town in America. The poor are always growing poorer and the rich growing fatter. The end of the world is always at hand, and probably always will be. In fact, there is everlastingly something to howl about, if you want to howl. The women have always worn exactly what they pleased in just the manner that suited them best, and there never was and never will be any help for it. And if their diaphanous garb offends you there is no law compelling you to keep edging around until you get a comely woman betwixt yourself and the sun, confound you!"—Kansas City Star.

FORD OFFICIALS IN EUROPE

E. L. Klingensmith, vice-president and treasurer of the Ford-Motor company, and A. L. Sorenson, superintendent of the Fordson tractor plant at Dearborn, left Detroit November 10 for Europe. It was said at the time that Mr. Klingensmith was making the trip to study the general industrial situation in the British Isles and on the continent. Mr. Sorenson, it is said, will go to Cork, Ireland, where the Ford interest contemplate the establishment of large industrial and electrical works for the manufacture of Ford cars and Fordson tractors.

NORTHVILLE DEFEATS PLYMOUTH

The largest score that was made by either Northville or Plymouth upon the other, was made last Friday by the Northville boys. The whole team played well and all the backfield men made good gains. Frydahl still seemed inclined to fumble and Green hasn't gotten over the tendency and run back, which is very poor judgment. Both men made long runs. The work of Chapman on defense and offense was the outstanding feature of the game. Stilwell's work was of the stellar order. Dye and Taylor played well on the ends. Dye showed the value of following around, recovering a couple of fumbles. Litsenberger is playing hard but his tackling is too high. Watts and Buckley played the tackle and Kestel and Atchison stopped the line smashes of the Plymouth team.

Farmington—Dr. G. R. Switzer and Miss Elsie V. Chilson, both residents of Farmington, were united in marriage at 2:30 o'clock Tuesday afternoon by Rev. Paterson in Detroit.

Excluding the machinery, an average airship is made of 20,000 different parts, a total length of structural material of 20 miles, 60 miles of wire and more than 2,000,000 rivets.

Detroit—Bodies of 111 Michigan members of the 339th regiment who died or were killed during service in northern Russia were expected to reach Detroit about November 13 and 14. The steamer Lake Dartaga, according to word received here from Congressman Nichols, will reach New York from Archangel on November 9. Detroit officials expected to plan for a public service for the dead as soon as the list of names could be received and relatives of the Michigan men could be conferred with. Burial of bodies of Detroit men will possibly take the nature of a public ceremony.

BUSY.

"Are your farm hands keeping busy?"
"Yes," replied Farmer Cornstassel. "I don't see how they stand it. Besides doing some work on the farm they hold meetings lasting eight and ten hours a day deciding on whether they are doing too much work."—Washington Star

Get All the Rest Possible.

Remember always to relax when no activity is required of you. When you sit down rest all over—do not choose a rocker and waste your energy propelling it to an invisible destination, nor tap your fingers on the chair or on the back of your hand, nor finger the buckle at your waist or the chain about your throat, nor tie your feet up in bow knots when they should rest easily on the floor. If you think about it you will be amazed to find how much real rest you have always wasted.

M. degree by Northville Lodge F. & A. M. Monday night, in the presence of a large number of members of the order. At seven o'clock a sumptuous supper was served—one of those bountiful feasts for which Northville Masons are famous.

Northville's new pavement was given a bath the first of the week. Some plan will, doubtless, soon be worked out by the council for keeping the pavement clean at all times. It seems receptacles for paper could be placed about town and then people exercise care about throwing waste paper in the streets it would help greatly in keeping our streets clean.

A cheap suit today isn't as good as the cheap suit of yesteryear and the advertisement that quotes good clothing this winter at 1914 prices is the worst kind of an insult to American intelligence.

THE MODERN FEAST PROVIDER

The modern day pilgrim, while retaining some of the principles of the first pilgrims, has enlarged his scope of activity. The spirit of freedom, equality and peace is being spread throughout the universe, and American democracy, it is to be hoped, is to be followed in spirit by the peoples of other nations. And then when the universal day of Thanksgiving comes, all the people will know and realize what it means to be an absolutely free nation. Our photo shows the pilgrim of today, emulating his forefathers who went forth as he did to secure his bird for the feast.

DAY OF UNIVERSAL PRAISE

For All Its Blessings the Nation Lifts
Its Hands to the Lord in Grateful Thanks.

Such sentiment as is aroused by the great day whose yearly coming sounds
the note of praise for multitudes of souls, could not be set to poet's verse of framed in choral chant. Deep down where underlying are the sentiments that sanctify, reside the feelings centering in the day whose glad advent is tuned to thoughts of peace and praise to the one above from whose wide-open hands bestowments come,
such as have never yet been known to other nations of the earth. Into the churches at the usual hour the worshippers will pour and from their doors, when comes the end of praise and song, will pass those worshippers again, with loftier views and freer minds and with their souls tuned to the sentiments that are expressed from all the pulpits of the nation on the day on which the people offer their thanks to God.

For all the blessings to the land,
this day the nation lifts its hands in humble praise; for all the blessings to the homes the land lifts up its eyes to God in gratitude; for all the signal signs of God's goodwill the land will give its praise in thought, in word, in act. Although the curtain of the future falls across the vistas and the prospect hides, no one has fear the land will not be free from all the harsh disorders of the earth, and saved to sanctify the world anew to the pleasant things of peace and lasting joy. For the bright prospect of the nation's use in the fast-crowding years to come, the people give their praise and in their prayers they lift their thoughts with faith to the Lord, who says in perfect peace he keeps the ones whose thoughts and hearts are stayed on him. For all his ways are pleasantry, his paths are peace, the psalmist says.

So for its cheer, for its gift of peace,
so for the record of blessings felt and those in prospect yet, the people give their heartfelt thanks, making this day that sees other nations wrecked by the battle's effect, a day peculiar for its cause for praise. And thus, though sobered, will the cheer abound in myriad hearts on this great day for raise and giving thanks.

HOME TOWN HELPS

FATAL LACK OF ENTERPRISE

Some Communities Seem to Forget
How Vital Are Business Enterprises to City's Growth.

Contrast the intelligent employment or present opportunities in certain communities with the lack-of-plan situation in most cities.

Contrast it, if you will, with the attitude of an Indiana city which found not long ago, that one chief industry of the community, a glass factory, would likely move because the supply of natural gas, which had attracted the factory in the first place,
was about to fail.

In the gas-boom days the community had sunk gas wells and had invited this factory to come. But the old spirit soon died, and no effort was made to get additional gas or the additional factories which would have resulted.

And when the glass manufacturer found the supply failing, two or three years ago, he appeared to be about the only person in the community who was particularly concerned. There was some vagrant talk of the possibility of finding some additional natural gas. But nothing was done about it until the manufacturer himself decided that rather than move his home,
he would take a chance on a new well.
He found gas and is still there, though not through the enterprise of the city, which would apparently have allowed him to move rather than destitute itself.

And even now there is no movement for sinking additional wells, though this experience indicates that such wells might reasonably be expected to pay.—From The Nation's Business

WALKS OF MUCH IMPORTANCE

No Greater Mistake Than Neglecting
Attention to the Needed Pathways Between Buildings.

Walks between buildings add a good deal to the ease and comfort with which the chores can be done and reduce the amount of dirt that is carried into the house. Concrete is one of the best materials for making walks, and when they are properly made the construction is permanent, says the state college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

In making the walks it is wise to excavate from 8 to 10 inches and fill in with from 4 to 6 inches of cinders or similar material, well tamped to make a good base. On top of this place 3 1/2 inches of concrete, tamped in place and a top coat of 1/2-inch of cement mixed in the proportions of one part of cement to two of sand.
The gravel for concrete should be well graded in sizes from 1/4 inch to 1 inch,
and for this material the proportions may well be one part cement, three of sand and six of gravel. Poorer materials should have a richer mixture.
The top coat should be troweled to drive it into the concrete base but not necessarily to make it smooth.

A rough-surface walk may be advisable, in which case a little finer gravel may be used in the concrete and the full four inches made of this material.

Diseased Trees.

Owners of elm and maple trees who find small reddish or light-colored bunches on the leaves will have to rest
as easily as possible for a while, says
C. L. Fluke, entomologist at the Wisconsin experiment station, for no control measures for this particular trouble have yet been found. The bunches are galls caused by small mites which look like tiny spiders.
They live within the galls and thus cannot be reached by sprays. Undoubtedly there is some point in the life history of the mites where control measures can be used, says Mr. Fluke, but so far there has not been much study of these insects and this point has not been found. The injury to the elms is in the form of small, light-colored globular bunches. The galls on the maple leaf are red or black,
and there are sometimes as many as a hundred on one leaf. Maples are also subject to blister galls, caused by the larvae of the flies called gall midges. These galls are in the form of spots having a green center surrounded by rings of yellow and deep red.

Looking to Business Future.

A manufacturer who finds that there is a market for a certain product does not abandon that and turn to something which his facilities are not capable of making. He multiplies the product for the manufacture of which he has equipped himself. By the same token, the business man who is interested in community development needs to look about him; analyze what he sees, and while undertaking the improvement and further promotion and enlargement of present factories, seek new ones in the same or in a similar line, if it appears that there is room for them—and there usually is.—Exchange.

She Was Optimistic.

"My dear," moaned the patient, as he tossed restlessly on his bed, "it's the doctor I'm thinking of. His bill will be terrible!"
"Never mind, Joseph," said his wife, consolingly. "You know there's the insurance money."

—land equal to that which through many years has yielded from 20 to 40 bushels of wheat to the acre—grazing land convenient to good

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It

Applicants for Insurance Often Rejected.

Judging from reports from druggists who are constantly in direct touch with the public, there is one preparation that has been very successful in overcoming these conditions. The mild and healing influence of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its remarkable record of success.
An examining physician for one of the prominent Life Insurance Companies, in an interview on the subject, made the astonishing statement that one reason why so many applicants for insurance are rejected is because kidney trouble is so common to the American people, and the large majority of those whose applications are declined do not even suspect that they have the disease. It is on sale at all drug stores in bottles of two sizes, medium and large.

However, if you wish first to test this great preparation send ten cents to Dr.
Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., for a sample bottle. When writing be sure and mention this paper.—Adv.

HIS SCHEME DIDN'T WORK

This Colonel Evidently Was Wise as to the Foxy Ways of His Junior Officers

In the regular army it is one of the customs of the service, when at a regular army post, for the junior officers to call upon the senior officers. To comply with this custom without making the calls, the junior officer frequently waits until he knows the senior officer is away and then calls at his home and leaves a card. One night when I was stationed at a post in Texas, I saw the colonel-down town and on my way home stopped at the colonel's quarters and put my card under the door. I was just leaving the porch when I noticed a car at the gate, and on closer inspection I noted that the colonel was in the car and was awaiting me at the gate. He laughingly said: "Kind of late to make a call, isn't it, Lieut.?" This became one of the colonel's best stories, and to say that I was more than once embarrassed would be putting it mild.

By Way of Comparison

It is a good plan to compare the prices you are compelled to pay at home with those charged by dealers in other towns and cities once in a while. In those comparisons this store has never suffered because our regular every-day prices are as low as good fresh merchandise can be offered.

We invite your attention to the following taken from the Detroit Journal of Tuesday, and ask you to make your own comparison:

Fair prices which Detroit "cash and carry" grocers should charge the people for a number of commodities were agreed upon Monday afternoon at the second meeting of Prosecutor Bishop's committee on the high cost of foodstuffs in the city.

It was a long, drawn-out session that many times threatened to explore channels far distant from the immediate issue at hand, and the prosecutor several times was forced to bring the members back to the direct matter involved.

NOW READ THIS LIST

of "Fair Prices" in Detroit and compare them with our regular every-day—six days in the week—prices:

	Detroit Prices.	Our Prices.
Commercial Flour	$1.66	$1.63
Columbus Flour	$1.78	$1.73
Gold Medal Flour	$1.86	$1.83
Potatoes, peck.	55c	50c
Chesse,	45c	44c
Rumford B. Powder,	30c	30c
Calumet B. Powder	30c	30c
Gold Dust,	5c	5c

We aim to supply our Grocery Department with the best and freshest goods we can obtain and we invite you to compare our prices with those of other dealers at all times. We are willing to abide by such comparisons, and upon that basis we solicit your patronage.

INCREASED PRICES NECESSARY.

Picture Theatres, as well as nearly every business, are feeling the increased cost of operation. The prices of good films have recently been increased, labor is much higher and the fuel used in making the play house comfortable costs much more than in former years. These increased costs all conspire to bring about a condition over which theatre managers have no control and they are compelled to either cheapen the character of the pictures shown or else raise the price of admission.

Manager Thompson of the Alseum Theatre has always endeavored to give his patrons the best service possible and naturally he does not desire to present cheaper pictures than those his patrons have become accustomed to. To maintain the splendid service he has heretofore given he is compelled to increase his admission charges and beginning with next week the prices of admission will be 11 cents for children under nine years, and 20 cents for adults.

Northville is fortunate in having as good a play-house as the Alseum and it is a matter of congratulation that we have a theatre manager who strive at all times to give the public high-class, clean and wholesome pictures.

OBITUARY—CAROLYN A. BABBITT.

On Tuesday, November 11th, Miss Carolyn A. Babbitt stepped across the threshold into the great Beyond and thus there passed from our midst a quiet, unobtrusive, life, yet a life in which were blended those rare traits which constitute a noble womanhood and a genuinely heroic spirit.

The prolonged illness of her mother first brought out and developed these noble traits. With rare devotion she set herself the task of ministering to her mother's needs, making life for her as easy and pleasant as possible. Against the remonstrances of other members of the family who were more than willing to relieve her of at least a part of her self-appointed task, she persisted in spending herself lavishly for the sake of the one she loved.

Then came illness into her own life, and for years she was an almost constant sufferer. Yet thru it all with conditions such as would have brought despair to many a heart, she met the situation with such fortitude and heroism and withal maintained such cheerfulness and optimism that she became the wonder and inspiration of all who came in touch with her.

All that medical skill could devise or suggest was tried, but to no avail, and after an operation in Grace hospital, Detroit, successful in itself but from which her weakened body was unable to rally, she passed on into the fuller life where, unhampered by a body subject to the ravages of disease, her spirit may have full development and full expression.

Miss Babbitt was born in Northville township, April 5, 1874, and spent her lifetime in this vicinity, living for the most part in the home of her brother, Louis A. Babbitt. Others of her immediate family surviving are her mother, Mrs. Ella Babbitt, another brother, K. R. Babbitt of New York City, and a sister, Mrs. Henry F. Brown of Detroit.

Funeral services were held from the home of Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Babbitt last Thursday afternoon and the numerous floral tributes attested to the esteem in which the deceased was held by the people of this vicinity.

Poke Easley yearns for the good old times when the merchant threw in a pair of socks, a pair of suspenders and a necktie with an $8.00 suit of clothes.
