THE GREAT POETRY (Jean Francois Milîet)

The most joyful thing I know is the peace, the silence, that one enjoys in the woods or on the tilled lands. One sees a poor, heavily laden creature with a bundle of faggots advancing from a narrow path in the field. The manner in which this figure comes suddenly before one is a momentary reminder of the fundamental condition of human life toil. On the tilled land around, one watches figures hoeing and digging. One sees how this or that one rises and wipes away the sweat with the back of his hand. "In the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread." Is that merry enlivening work? And yet it is here that I find the true humanity, the great poetry.

THE SAME IN KENTUCKY AS IN MICHIGAN.

(Schuyler L Marshall in Republican-News, St Johns) As this is being written in a hotel room in Middleboro, Ky., we can look out the window and see the Cumberland mountains dimly outlined against the murky sky-some small change line. A few minutes ago we went to Lee's Corner Drug Another cold way Store for the evening edition of the Knoxville evening afternoon. Snow came about the erobody has a new number. paper. = A young lady waited on us, and as she handed us decided downward turn Monday ious accident Tuesday while repairour change, we asked her some questions. "Yes, I have morning chermometers about town ing a machine in the Globe Furnilived here all my life . . . sure, I know the kind of people saturday afternoon of last week on his left hand was the result who live in the mountairs-and work in the coal mines? considering their work, they are no different than any other people I know."

During an afternoon ride we had seen shacks of the squalid sort—dirty, tumbledown, with a raft of dirty little urchins running about Perhaps, a few rods further, there would be a very near, new bungalow, slick premises, flowers blooming—the kind that St. Johns and most Michigan towns need to rent for $25 to $30 a month. There would be a dozen of the slum-type shacks and then one of the fine modern kind. We couldn't understand it. The good ones were not segregated : 7. instead interspersed with the squalid shacks. "Why is this so" we asked the girl in the drug store.

"Why really," she replied in a delightful drawl these Kentucky girls have. "there's nothing mysterious about it. Mister. Some of the men save their money. Some of the miners' wives have pride about the same, I suppose, as' people anywhere. Those who save build a nice, new little home. Those who drink and carouse and whose wives are not the saving kind, continue to live in those shacks until they tumble down on their haids."

That made sense to us . . . in Kentucky or Michigan. We saw in a leisurely day's ride the finest type southern; mansions, all the range of homes between and on down to the kind of home that a Riley township farmer would be ashamed to house his hogs in. In one little mountain village we saw an elegant new school building about completed with the red, white and blue WPA signs consoicuously posted about. Less than ten rods away on a side hill was a group of filthy little urchins playing around a shack, mingling with pigs and chickens in a muddy yard. Those little folks must attend that fine school . . . and then go home to that hog-pen of a home. We wondered what effect it would have on them as they grew older.

CALIFORNIA SMILES AGAIN

(Upland, Calif. News) Well the sun is shining again on Southern California

True—the floods have left a scar on the face of Mother Earth and brought sadness in death and destruction of taxes. There's no use trying to tell worst of scars—and the work of reclamation is already equal justice on all. But buck and receives he can barely live and bay work. But even what the daughters under way in numerous instances. There is much to be under way in numerous instances. There is much to be rear as much as we like the Amerdone-but it will be done.,

SCE upon a time, not so many years ago, it cost $3,000 to build a mile of farm line to carry electricity. In many places the farmer was required to pay a large part of this line cost before he could have it extended. This meant that electric service was a luxury available to relatively few farm families. Now, all that is changed. In the area served by The Detroit Edison Company, farm electrification has been a large reality for ten years. This has been accomplished by continued efforts to reduce the cost of bringing service to farmers. Costs have been reduced in two ways: (1) Cost of building farm lines has been lowered by engineering developments. (2) The Michigan Plan for financing farm line extensions on a sound economic basis has brought rural electric lines to the farmer at little cost to him.

A new type of line was developed by Detroit Edison engineers, and new ways of erecting the line. Lines were placed in fields some distance báck from the road, to eliminate the expense of tree trimming and the danger of interruption to service by trees falling against the line-during storms. To allow longer spans, we made use of aluminum wire with a steel core, which is stronger for its weight, and makes a farm line possible at lower cost. The result: In stead of $3,000 per mile, farm lines are now built for less than 50 per cent of the former cost.

The plan known as the Michigan Plan, and the one which this Company offers, makes it easy for a group of farmers to finance an electric line. A base price of $500 per mile of new line is charged, from which is deducted a credit of $100 for each customer taking service on that mile. Where there are five customers per mile of line, the total of their credits equals the base price of $500, and the line is built without cost to the farmers. When there are less than five customers per mile of line, the Company assumes anyhow the lion's share of the capital expenditure of building the farm line, and the customer only contributes a small part towards paying for poles and wire, insulators and transformers, labor and supervision.

Experience has proved this plan to be an equitable one. The results it has produced speak for themselves. It continues to stimulate economically bund electrification of rural areas. For the bounty of the earth, there is no substitute. The land is our heritage. Michigan is fortunate in its acres of rich farm lands. And in Southeastern Michigan, farm electrification has been a reality for ten years.
