women get tired of standing in line to get a bus or street car, or to purchase their groceries during the evening rush after work, or to have only one evening a week when the stores are open for other necessary purchases.

This was brought out in reports submitted to the War Manpower Commission by 16,600 war plants employing 134,000 persons four million of whom are women.

Women in these plants are quitting at a higher ratio than men. Even separations are being applied to those separated from their jobs for any reason whatsoever, run higher for women than for men in these plants despite the fact that separation rates for men include those called into military service.

The "quit" rate for women in these surveyed war plants was 6.2 per cent of total female employment (four million) in June, 243,000. This figure includes those women who left their jobs for their own protection.

The quit rate for men during that month was only 3.9 per cent of the total male employment.

Separations for women were 7.5 per cent in the month; for men, 6.6 per cent. Hiring rates for the same period were 11.6 per cent of the total female employment and 7.3 per cent of total male employment.

The War Manpower Commission estimates that in the year ending July, 1944, about 1,400,000 women will have to be added to the existing female labor force.

A service man is transferred from one camp to another. His wife quits her job, packs up and goes to live near him. This, together with marriage, birth, or family illness, is one of the groups of "personal" problems which War Manpower Commission considers the most important in women's decisions to leave their jobs.

Just about as important as these personal problems are the "community" problems which confront women working in labor shortage areas. Inadequacy of child care is one of the reasons most frequently given for leaving the war job. Transportation and shopping difficulties are others.

A Sinclair of Detroit to give an illustrated chalk talk. Included in his program for this afternoon will be the story of Paul Bussey. Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Stewart announced the engagement of their daughter Janet to Ensign Jack W. Reynolds, U.S.N.R., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Reynolds of Detroit. Ensign Reynolds who graduated from the University of Detroit in 1942, is on active duty in the South Pacific.

No Christmas Decorations

This Christmas holiday period is going to look different from any other Christmas in Northville for many years. There are no street decorations, no Christmas lights burning and few Christmas decorations in any of the windows. Northville merchants have a bit of decorating within their stores and a Christmas touch here and there has been added to the window decorations. But outside of what the merchants have done, there is little to indicate that this is the Christmas season. It is just as well—with so many of our boys away from home—a great many of them for the first time. When they come back, then we will do the decorating.

BURT THOMAS

His cartoons are reprinted more widely than those of any other artist in America!

For sheer story-telling and fact-dramatizing qualities, the Burt Thomas cartoon is equalled by none in the land.

Then, too, the fact that Burt Thomas, a Detroit, understands Michigan and its people, makes it possible for him to impart a local slant to his trenchant artwork, a characteristic impossible to the average cartoonist who must base his picture appeal on a strictly national basis.

Read Burt Thomas' cartoons regularly and you'll understand why they're reprinted more widely than those of any other cartoonist in America!
