General Operating Expenses

The electrical industry is a large purchaser of supplies, including millions of miles of copper wire, millions of poles, arms, and insulators, thousands of tiucks, as well as great quantitle of çoal, oil and natural gas. Although there may be some further price mereases on some of these products, yet the corner has turned downward on the average. This should benefit the utilities so long as we avoid war with Russia or the Chinese Com-

The only "nigger in the woodpile' is the attitude of utility regarding rates Many utility comparies are in need of higher rates, especailly street railway and bus compan.es which have large labor expense. As, however, these rate-making hodics clearly understand that to take care of their customers for various mission projects and the utilities must have more capital, and in order to raise more capital must give investors a

Utilities as Inflation Hedges Utilities of operating companies can be recommended for safety and for income, but they should not be selected as hedges against inflation. If considering only the cost of replacement, stocks of operating companies should be worth double what they were ten years ago provided they cannot be caught by the 'Depre ciation Formula'. The fact, however, that utilities are not free to raise their rates without special permission, is a distinct handicap Hence, for inflation hedges it is better to buy steel, oil or merchandising stocks.
