Voters say 'yes' to school millage proposal

By MICHELE McELMURRY

Three years after defeating a school millage renewal, Northville voters went back to the polls Monday to restore the full 9.5 mills lost to the district in April, 1981.

Voters approved the 9.5 mill issue — which included a 7 mill renewal and a 2.5 increase — by 201 votes. The millage was approved for two years.

Of the 2,727 voters casting ballots in Monday's election, 1,451 voted in favor of the millage with 1,250 voting against the issue. Twenty-six ballots were counted invalid.

Voter support of the district's 9.5 millage request marks the first millage increase approval for the district in seven years.

Millage supporters gathered in the Northville High School cafeteria Monday night to await election returns remained optimistic despite the negative turnout of the first three precincts reporting vote counts.

Voters in Precinct 1, which includes the downtown city area, defeated the millage request by the largest margin among the district's six precincts. Of the 395 voters casting ballots in that precinct, 177 voted in favor of the issue with 214 casting "no" votes. Four ballots were invalid.

Though voters in both Precincts 5 and 6 defeated the millage request, only a handful of votes decided the outcome of the balloting in those areas.

In Precinct 5, which includes Edenderry and Shadbrook subdivisions and King's Mill Cooperatives, 124 of the 264 voters casting ballots supported the request with 137 defeating the proposal. Three ballots were invalid.

Only nine votes defeated the issue in Precinct 6 (Moraine Elementary area), where 263 voters cast favorable ballots and 272 voted against the request. Of the 545 votes cast in Precinct 6, 10 were discarded as invalid.

By 9 p.m. Monday, returns indicated defeat of the millage request in all three precincts by some 58 votes.

However, returns from Precinct 3 (Winchester area) and Precinct 2

(Silver Springs-Highland Lakes) — considerably outweighed the previous majority of "no" votes.

Of the 599 voters casting ballots in Precinct 3, 356 approved the millage request with 239 saying "no." Four of the ballots were invalid.

In Precinct 2, 187 of the 319 voters casting ballots approved the request with 129 no votes cast. Three ballots were invalid.

The largest voter turnout in the election was in Precinct 4 (Amerman area), where 605 residents cast ballots. The last precinct to report returns, the 344 favorable votes cast in that precinct locked up the election.

While the 201 votes deciding the millage issue accounts for approximately 10 percent of those casting ballots in Monday's election, the final count is far below the number of voters who defeated the 9.5 mill renewal request in April, 1981.

In that election, some 800 "no" votes defeated the renewal issue with 1,827 voters turning down the request and 1,055 supporting it.

After all returns were counted Monday night, School Superintendent George Bell said he recognized that within the next two years "we're going to have to prove to those people who voted no that we need their support."

He also noted that despite the narrow defeat of the issue in three of the district's six precincts, he felt positive about the election's outcome in light of earlier returns.

"At 5 p.m. this afternoon we had lost this election," Bell told the crowd gathered at the high school. He noted that volunteers at the polls calculated that 48.6 percent of the 1,418 residents casting ballots by 5 p.m. were on a positive voter check list compiled by the schools.

"We were running neck and neck by 5 p.m.," Bell added.

Acknowledging the close margin between favorable and negative votes, Bell told millage supporters 201 votes "is a whole lot better than a poke in the eye with a sharp stick."

The 9.5 mills approved by voters in Monday's balloting will be used to offset a projected $1 million deficit facing

Three candidates file for school board posts

Northville voters going to the polls in the June 11 school board election will find only one new name among the slate of candidates vying for two trustee posts.

Larry VanderMolen, a Ladywood resident in Northville Commons and political science professor at Schoolcraft College, joined incumbent Chris Johnson and former school board trustee David Llewellyn in filing nominating petitions by Monday's 4 p.m. deadline.

Johnson, currently serving as president of the Northville Board of Education, announced his intent to seek a third four-year term on the board last month.

Llewellyn, who did not seek reelection to the board at the conclusion of his term last June, had a change of heart and announced his candidacy at the board's March 26 meeting.

With only three residents vying for two seats, this year's election leaves voters to choose from among the sparsest slate of candidates in two years.

In 1982, five candidates sought election to two available seats and last year's slate of six candidates marked one of the most contested school board races in five years.

The three candidates in this year's election will be seeking the school board posts currently held by Johnson and trustee Gerald Munro.

Munro, elected to the board in June, 1980, after narrowly defeating contender Ron Barnum, announced he would not seek reelection at the board's March 26 meeting.

Personnel Director at Schoolcraft College, Munro told the board he could not commit to another four years due to conflicting time constraints.

Munro's decision not to seek reelection leaves one seat open to a non-incumbent.

A new — though not unknown — contender for one of the two board posts, challenger Larry VanderMolen served as a member of the Northville

Township races heat up

There are now at least 10 potential candidates for election to the seven-member township board of trustees this year, with several weeks remaining before the June 5 filing deadline.

Nominating petitions were drawn last week for Miron Kasey, who told township staff members he would be a Republican candidate for trustee.

Others who have made formal announcements of their candidacies or drawn nominating petitions are clerk Susan Heintz, deputy clerk Georgina Goss, township homeowners association president Kitty Rhoades, recreation commissioner Liz McCarville, Marilyn Little, Don Williams, and Larry VanderMolen.

Heintz will run for supervisor, Goss and McCarville for clerk and the others, presumably, for trustee.

VanderMolen announced this week he is a candidate for the school board but was unavailable for comment on how that candidacy relates to his anticipated run for the township board.

Incumbents who have indicated interest in reelection include treasurer Richard Henningsen and trustees Richard Allen and Thomas Cook. Trustee James Armstrong will not seek reelection. James Nowka has not made his intentions known.

Incumbent supervisor John MacDonald has announced he will not seek reelection, opting instead to make a bid for the 35th District Court judgeship from which Dunbar Davis retires this year.

As of Monday, McCarville was the only potential candidate affiliated with the Democratic party.

City to get its own 'Jaws'

A fundraising drive launched a mere three months ago has already provided the city fire department with the target amount of more than $9,000 for the purchase of a "Jaws of Life" device.

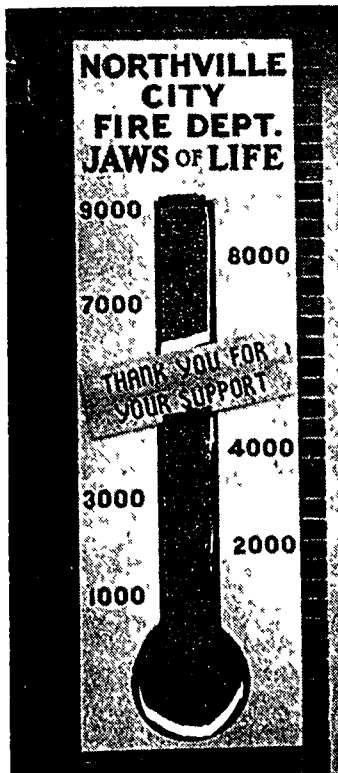

The tool is used to extract victims of automobile accidents from damaged cars when the doors or other access points are blocked. "Jaws of Life" is the trade name for one such tool manufactured by the Hurst Corporation. There are others.

The fundraising effort was launched with $2,200 realized from the sale of obsolete radio pagers. The rest was gathered from private contributions donated during several fundraising events, primarily car washes operated by the firefighters themselves.

Mayor Paul Vernon said at the last council meeting the department should be commended for the effort. He and other council members noted that the firefighters "really seemed to enjoy themselves" at the car washes.

The fundraising effort was charted on a "thermometer" graph posted alongside the large doors at the fire hall on Main Street. When it peaked out, city manager Steven Walters noted, the department hung a sign on the graph thanking the citizenry for their contributions to the effort.

Walters told council members demonstrations of several brands of the extraction devices would be conducted at 9 a.m. at the DPW yard last Saturday and next, inviting council members to attend the demonstrations.

NHS girls at center of Boys State debate

By JEAN DAY

Application of two Northville High School junior girls to attend the American Legion-sponsored Boys State convention beginning June 13 at Michigan State University was the subject of a special meeting Sunday in Milford attended by about 35 unhappy American Legion members and State Representative Willis "Bill" Bullard Jr.

The students, Karen Brining and Tracy Kohl, made application to Boys State, according to high school counselor Gladys Cohen, when — through a local snafu — their applications to attend Girls State sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary were not processed by the deadline.

Initially, she said, five girls had been interested and three sponsors had supplied funding to the program. When the applications arrived late, however, the girls were placed on an alternate list with "really no chance of acceptance."

Learning that there still were openings to attend Boys State and that the deadline to apply had not passed, the girls "following due process," according to the counselor, decided to make application.

They also enlisted the aid of their state representative Bullard (R-Highland) who represents the Oakland County portion of the city of Northville. Both of the girls' families live in Oakland County. Tracy Kohl is the daughter of Northville's city attorney.

Bullard announced last Thursday that he had co-sponsored a special resolution in the House of Representatives urging the American Legion to allow high school girls to participate in the annual Boys State program.

Bullard said he has received support from nearly every woman in the house to include women in the all-male political conclave.

TRACY KOHL

"The resolution we are introducing today requests that the American Legion accept these two capable young women to participate in the 1984 Boys State program," Bullard stated.

"These two women should not be excluded from this educational experience just because they happen to be female. Boys State and Girls State are fine institutions, and serve a fine purpose, but I think to better reflect political realities, the gender gap that exists should be bridged."

The Boys State program was developed by the American Legion for high school boys, aged 16-17, with a year left to be completed in their secondary education. It emphasizes learning how government functions by having participants set up their own state programs. A similar program for 11th grade girls is sponsored by the American Legion Auxiliary and is held each summer at different campus locations, this year at Central Michigan University in Mount Pleasant.

In a telephone interview Friday Bullard explained that he introduced the resolution as he feels it is "important to hold the program in Lansing where the Boys State representatives have the use of the house chamber."

He noted that there had been legislative opposition to this use of the chamber but said his feeling is that it is the taxpayers who built and maintain the building and that it should be used for such purposes as the legion program.

He said that the YMCA had sponsored a Youth Legislature attended by both boys and girls in Lansing the end of March and that they had used the house chamber.

"It didn't appear to me that anything too terrible was happening," he observed, stressing that he feels it is "important to hold such programs in Lansing and to use the chamber."

"My basic philosophy," he said, "is that if two young girls in my district want to go and there are openings, they should be able to."

At the Sunday meeting of members of the Northville, Livonia and Milford American Legion posts, however, Bullard agreed to let his resolution die in committee. Commander Gene Keyes of the Milford Post agreed with Bullard that he personally in the future would be interested in an integrated program but argued that it would take time to implement properly.

Northville Mayor Paul Vernon, who had headed local arrangements for Boys State participants since the death of postmaster John Steimel, said that he had tried to help the girls get into Girls State but confirmed that the checks to reserve space had been sent in too late.

Township Wage and Salaries Commission — a citizen's advisory committee on wages, salaries and administration problems and issues.

A professor at Schoolcraft College for 19 years, he also serves as a member of the Oakland University Legal Assistant Advisory Committee.

VanderMolen holds a Ph.D. in higher education and administration from Michigan State University and received a legal assistant degree from Oakland University in 1979.

Johnson, who is making his third run for a four-year term on the school board, was elected to his first term in 1976.

A longtime Northville resident and Northville High School graduate, Johnson was only 21 when first elected to the board — making him the youngest resident ever to win a local board seat.

An attorney with Cummings, Mc-

Clorey, Davis and Acho, he won reelection to his second term in 1980.

Llewellyn, whose seat was filled last June by newcomer James Petrie, said in his announcement to seek another term that "a year of inactivity" has brought him back to the board.

Elected to a four-year term in 1979, Llewellyn said he would like to see the district's long-range plan come to fruition. A product engineering supervisor in body and chassis engineering for Ford Motor Company, Llewellyn sat on the board during its approval of the district's long-range plan.

In announcing his candidacy, VanderMolen stated, "I intend to devote my efforts toward encouraging standards of excellence and creativity in the Northville School District. My schedule has been established to allow plenty of time to spend evenings in meetings for the Northville Board of Education. My legal research background should provide in-depth analysis on the major issues confronting the district."

Bullard aids NHS girls in Boys State placement

He stated this week that he is "all for equality of programs" and will work to have it in effect for 1985. He said he will emphasize that junior class boys will be eligible to attend on a competitive basis and that leadership qualities will be a condition of their acceptance.

More students from Northville have been sponsored by local businesses and clubs to the Boys State program than to the Girls State because the latter program sometimes has had more space limitations. In past years the Girls

State program has been held at Eastern Michigan University, Olivet College and at Central Michigan.

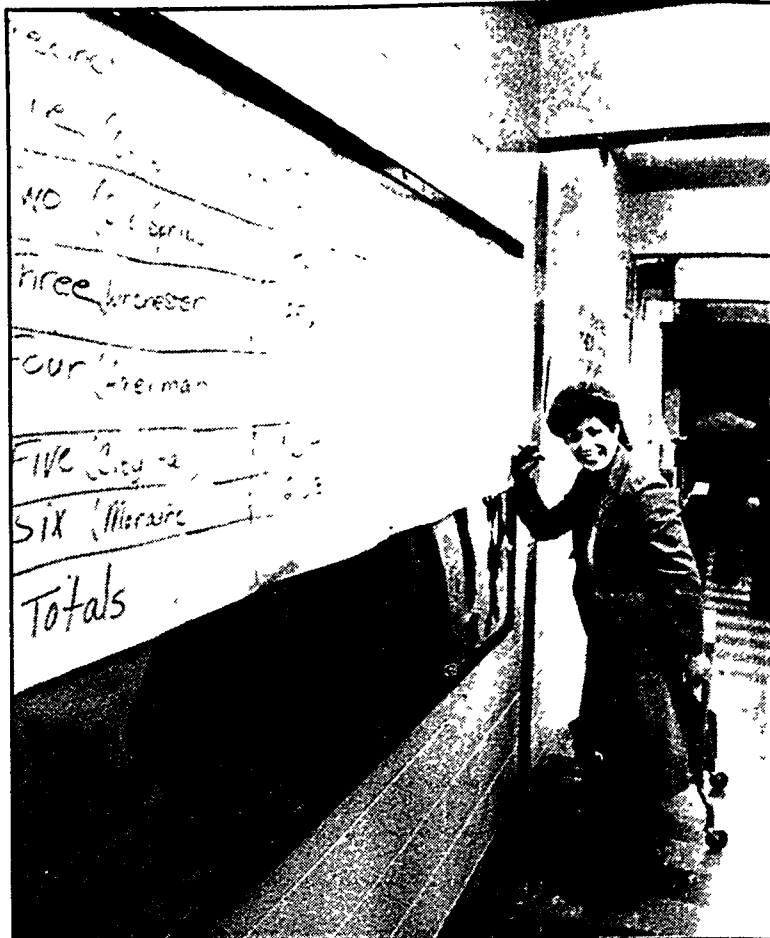

The inequity that exists in the number of participants in the sessions also has been a concern to Northville High School Principal David C. Bollito who said he has been told that this also has been due to the method of recruiting funding sponsors and emphasizes that it is not in keeping with the high school's philosophy that it has a responsibility to "offer equal opportunities to both young men and women."

The Boys State program long had the enthusiastic endorsement and leadership of Postmaster Steimel until his death in January 1981. Vernon took over the program in memory of his friend and because, he said, he did not wish to see it diminished.

Girls State has not had the advantage of having a long-time volunteer director, he pointed out, which was one of the causes of the missed deadline this year. In the past his wife Norma had helped with the program but had given up doing so as she spent additional time assisting him with the Boys State.

Counselor Cohen said she would like to see an integrated program and added that no matter what the outcome is for Brining and Kohl she feels applying for Boys State has been "a marvelous learning experience."

The girls themselves and their parents, who also have been contacted by the Associated Press after release of news of Bullard's resolution, refused to talk to all reporters. Tracy's mother, Judy Kohl, said both parents and daughters had decided they did not wish publicity on this as they were not making the application for that reason.

the school district in the coming year.

The approval of the 9.5 mills will not increase the district's program, but help maintain the current program.

It is anticipated that despite the approval of the millage request, the district will face an estimated $161,000 deficit in the second year.

A task force has been established by the administration to examine cost savings measures for the district.

Historic Yerkes house may be renovated for offices

By KATHY JENNINGS

A home located on one of the area's earliest settled properties, that of Joseph Yerkes Sr., a Revolutionary soldier, will be renovated and converted to an office building if Daniel Williamson's plans come to fruition.

Williamson, a Novi resident and real estate executive, has proposed renovation of the post Civil War-era (1870) building known locally as the Yerkes house. The home has been entered on the federal, state and local historical registers as a building with historical significance.

The house located on the south side of Eight Mile east of Novi Road retains almost all of its original architectural features, both inside and outside, according to Williamson. On the interior there have been virtually no changes in its arrangement except in the kitchen wing.

The Yerkes home is the first Novi building to be placed on the national historical register.

A Novi ordinance establishing criteria for allowing nonresidential uses in historical buildings was enacted by the city after Williamson proposed using the home for offices.

Under terms of the ordinance any exterior improvements to a historical building must be done in a manner that will not alter the period architecture of the building. If the period architecture is altered, the building reverts to a residential land use.

A historical commission charged with investigating such requests and establishing a local historical register also was initiated by Williamson's proposal.

In a public hearing before the Novi planning board April 4 there were no comments from the audience regarding the establishment of "a nonresidential use of a historical building" in the Yerkes house. But Williamson told the planners his proposal was the best way to preserve the historic building.

"The home is on a major road and it's fallen into disrepair," Williamson recently told the planners. "The only way to save it is to turn it into income producing property."

Williamson has already undertaken work to determine whether it is feasible to use the building for offices.

Questions were raised as to whether interior improvements also were covered under the ordinance. The City Attorney's office told planners the local historical commission should consider both interior and exterior improvements. But the local historical society informed planners it is only interested in regulating the exterior of such buildings.

Williamson explained interior renovations are regulated when historical buildings are located in a historical district. Novi does not have an historical district.

"In a historical district interior renovations are restricted," Williamson said. "The restrictions deal with ceilings, stained glass, period plaster and similar features. But the historical designation is based on the exterior of the building. No more than 25 percent of that can be changed and still retain the historical designation. If I lose the historical designation, I lose it (ability to use it for offices)."

After considering Williamson's comments, planners went on to approve the application to convert the home from a residence to an office. The property was not rezoned.

Williamson still present his site plan to the planning board for site plan approval.

Planners will review the proposed renovations for the home located on land belonging to one of the most prominent families among early settlers of the area.

The Yerkes' property was purchased in 1825 and settled in the following year, according to historical accounts in "Northville — the First Hundred Years" by Jack Hoffman.

Reportedly, a party of 14 followed William Yerkes and Thomas Pinkerton into Michigan. The group first journeyed to Buffalo traveling for four days. After waiting about eight days for the ice to move out of the harbor, they secured passage on a sailing vessel that carried them to Detroit in 10 days.

From Detroit the party of pioneers and their valuables traveled alone, drawn by their own oxen. The Yerkes party probably traveled also a northern route across Farmington, according to historical accounts.

"Northville — the First Hundred Years" says when the Yerkes arrived: "The country was heavily wooded and it was with considerable difficulty that the pioneers settlement was reached. The trail, which only by courtesy could be called a road, extending through a distance of some 15 or 18 miles from Detroit to a point on the river, where a little settlement had been made and a mill erected by Luther Lincoln. Beyond this limit of civilization the way through the woods was marked by blazed trees and the difficulties of clearing a passage for oxen and wagon through the thick underbrush and around fallen trees."

Joseph Yerkes Sr., a Revolutionary soldier, took up 488 acres on the south side of Eight Mile, opposite the homestead of his son William. John Yerkes took 240 acres at Napier and Eight Mile.

Joseph Yerkes was also a cooper by trade as well as being a farmer. By long hours of work through the winters at that trade he helped to make financial ends meet.

Democratic candidate

Laura Toy declares for Wayne commission

Schoolcraft College trustee Laura Toy of Livonia this week announced her candidacy for the Democratic nomination for 10th District Wayne County Commissioner. The district includes both Northvilles, both Plymouths and Livonia.

The seat is currently that of Republican Mary Dumas, also of Livonia, who has announced her intention to seek reelection. Dumas is the sole GOP commissioner on the 15-member board. No other Democratic candidates have announced, but several weeks remain before the nominating deadline June 5.

Toy is secretary and past vice chair of the Schoolcraft Board. She is a co-owner of Cardwell Florist, 32140 Plymouth Road, Livonia.

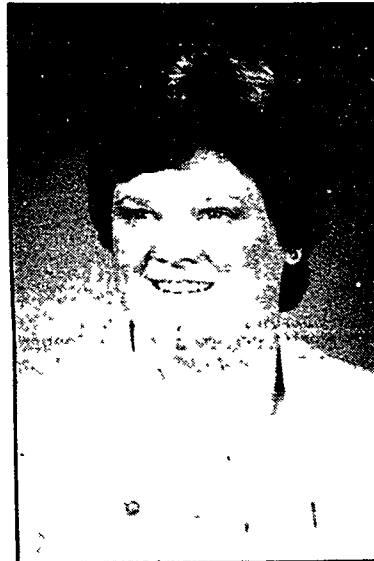

A 30-year Livonia resident, she graduated from Livonia Bentley High School and Schoolcraft College, earned a BGS degree from the University of Michigan and did graduate studies at Eastern Michigan University. While at U-M, she served as Livonia Mayor Edward McNamara's intern aide and later as a 16th District Court volunteer probation officer.

She is also a founder and director of Livonia's Environmental Awareness Center, member of the city's ecology commission, and has worked for Livonia Public Schools Community Education and was program director for the Western Wayne County YWCA.

She has also served as past president of the Livonia Business and Professional Women's Club (BPW), as a Democratic precinct delegate, as financial chair of the Southeast Michigan Women's Political Caucus and is a member of the Private Industrial Council of Livonia.

"It's a new day in Wayne County government," Toy said announcing her candidacy. "We have a new charter, a new county executive, a new organization of the board of commissioners. But we will not have true representation in today's Wayne County using yesterday's solutions. I believe I have the ability and the energy to creatively par-

A "Woodland Walk," a family nature program, will be held at 10 a.m. Park naturalist Mark Szabo will lead a leisurely stroll along the woodland trails and point out early wild flowers as well as signs of animal activity.

"Early Wild Flowers," also a family nature walk, will begin at 2 p.m. Szabo will discuss the early wild flowers of spring during the 1½-hour trek along the woodland trails.

Both programs are free; however advance registration and a vehicle entry permit (daily—$2, annual—$7) are required. For additional information, phone 1-800-552-6772 (toll-free).

Bushnell Congregational to dedicate new local church

By MICHELE McELMURRY

Though its fate has teetered on the edge of uncertainty for nearly four years, the construction of a suburban sister church for Bushnell Congregational finally has become a reality.

This Sunday the congregation will open its doors for a 2 p.m. dedication of the new church at Meadowbrook and Broquet.

Clergy from other area churches will be participating in Sunday's dedication as well as musicians from the Detroit Symphony Orchestra who will perform under the direction of Ray Ferguson, Bushnell's minister of music.

Named Bushnell Congregational Church on Meadowbrook Road, the multi-purpose structure includes a 300-seat fellowship hall, five classrooms, an office, kitchen and storage space.

"The credit for this church goes to a handful of dedicated, extremely generous people," Bushnell minister Robin Meyers explained.

"They built a really handsome, functional building," he noted. "They knew how to build something inexpensively and build it well."

Construction of the new church began last September and was financed through the sale of bonds to the church membership.

Meyers noted the new structure is the first of a three-part building plan for Bushnell.

Anticipating that membership in the suburban Bushnell church will "double" within the first year of the new structure's completion, Meyers said he is optimistic about plans for building a sanctuary in the next phase. The third and final phase will be the addition of an education wing.

The New England-style structure is similar in design to its imposing sister church in Detroit — though more simplistic. Meyers noted that the Detroit church congregation donated many items to the new sister church including a communion table, deacons' chairs and an organ.

"The mother church gave the new church everything it could spare," Meyers said.

He noted that the pulpit in the new church was the one used by Bushnell's founding pastor Roger Eddy Treat. The original pulpit was pulled out of storage from the Detroit church and refinished for use in the new church.

Meyers credits construction of the new church to the cooperation between the Detroit congregation and members of the Meadowbrook church.

For members of both congregations, plans to build a sister church in the Northville- Novi area were marred by the fact that financing a new church would result in the sale of the mother church in Detroit.

Having seen a rapid decline in its membership during the 1970s, Bushnell's board of trustees decided in 1979 to sell the 50-year-old northwest Detroit church.

As a result, the church was put up for sale in 1980 and a 14-acre parcel on Meadowbrook Road was purchased as the new site for Bushnell Congregational. Construction of the new church was to be financed through the sale of the $1 million Detroit structure.

To introduce Bushnell to the Northville- Novi community, the new suburban congregation began meeting at Novi's Village Oaks Elementary School. For the last two years, the approximately 100 members have been meeting for the 9:30 a.m. service at New School Church in Mill Race Village.

"Members of the Northville Historical Society were most gracious and accommodating people in our interim," Meyers says of Bushnell's more than two years in the historical village.

In the three years following the decision to sell the Detroit church, a growing animosity developed between the new congregation and the Detroit members.

Then, in January, 1983, the Detroit congregation reversed its 1979 decision by voting 225-114 to retain the Detroit church.

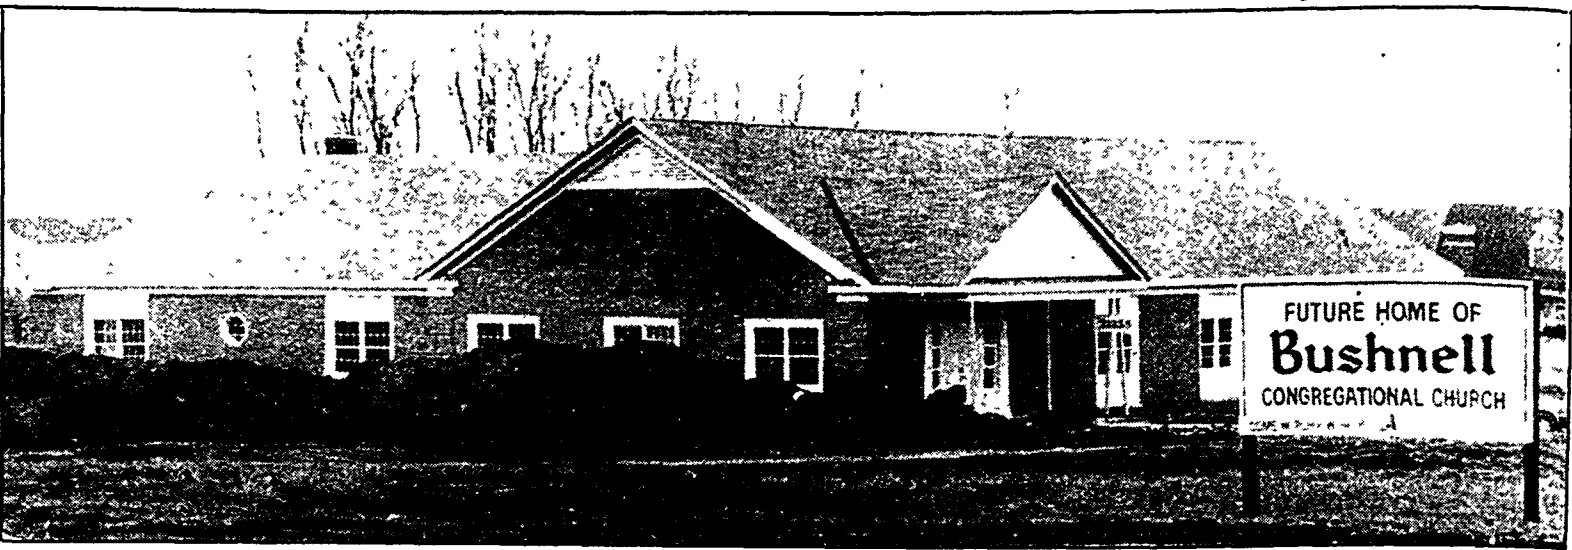

Without the sale of the Detroit structure, prospects for building a new church looked grim.

However, the congregation's decision to retain the mother church has eased tensions between the two congregations and unified Bushnell's efforts to build the sister church.

"I take credit for keeping the church in Detroit open," Meyers said. "But a relatively small group of people built the church here."

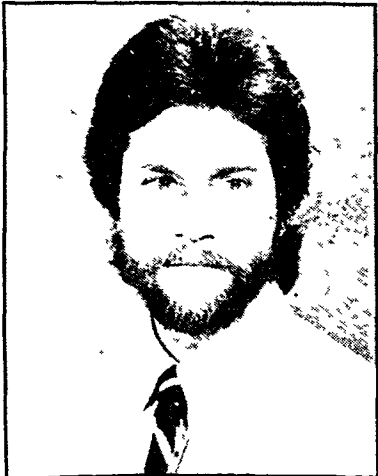

"The credit really goes to that group of people who made sure it happened — and nothing had to be sacrificed."

Salem Township snafu forces new meeting date

Salem Township residents will have a second chance on April 28 to attend the township's annual meeting and budget hearing after it was confirmed that the first annual meeting, held March 31, was improperly advertised.

Township Clerk Nancy Geiger said Monday that after the legality of publication of that first meeting was challenged by a number of residents, she sought legal advice from the township's counsel and the Michigan Township Association (MTA). She explained that both Margaret Austin, attorney for the township, and Herbert Norton, MTA attorney, agreed that because the meeting was also a hearing on the township's proposed budget for 1984-85, the legal notice should have been published in a "paper of general circulation" within the township at least six days prior to the meeting.

Although the meeting was posted on the township's outdoor bulletin board at 9 a.m. March 26, the legal notice of the budget hearing was not published in The Herald, the township's official newspaper, until March 28, just three days before the meeting.

Geiger said as soon as she received the attorneys' opinions, she began work on rescheduling the meeting. In accordance with law, she added, a special meeting for the "inhabitants" of the township must be requested in a petition from the electors.

The clerk circulated such a petition and obtained 15 signatures of township electors asking for the special annual meeting, a federal revenue hearing and a new budget hearing. The board then, in accordance with law according to Geiger, had to hold a meeting to officially accept the petition and set the new date. That meeting took place Monday night at the township hall for the sole purpose of rescheduling the annual meeting and budget and revenue hearings.

The 'new' annual meeting is slated to begin at 1 p.m. Saturday, April 28 at the township hall, Geiger said, adding that the official notice will be published in the April 18 issue of The Herald. She added that all of the agenda items covered in the March 31 meeting will be repeated, including the citizens' vote on the township clerk's raise, approval of the budget, the designation of the official newspaper and depositories for township funds and the setting of the time, day and place of the regular board meetings for the coming year. Discussion of the use of federal revenue sharing funds is also slated.

Geiger said confusion over the legal time allowed to publish the annual meeting notice arose from the fact that the March 31 meeting also served as the budget hearing. "If it had been just an annual meeting then 18 hours posting of the meeting would have made it legal in accordance with the Open Meetings Act and the Budget Hearing Act as I understand them," Geiger said. "Since it also served as a budget hearing, it had to be published at least six days prior to the meeting."

Geiger added that, according to the MTA attorney, the township had not more than 20 days or less than 15 days to hold the repeat session after receiving the petition of the residents. That petition was officially received by the board on April 9 at the special meeting called for that purpose, Geiger explained.

James Fulkerson and other residents of the township had questioned the legality of publication of the budget hearing at the outset of the March 31 meeting.

'Realist' art exhibit featured at Arts Commission outing

The Northville Arts Commission will sponsor a tour to the Toledo Museum of Art on Saturday, April 28, to view a special exhibit of work by New Realist artist Philip Pearlstein.

With the guidance of Artours' Evelyn Wheat, the tour will view more than 100 paintings and works on paper which comprise the first comprehensive exhibition devoted to one of America's New Realist artists in more than a decade.

Through these paintings, drawings, watercolors and prints, Pearlstein's evolution will be traced, beginning with his early student work and leading to his distinctive realist vision which he continues to the present day.

The tour also will include lunch at the historic Columbia House in Waterville, Ohio, and a lecture/demonstration on the art of glass-blowing in the private studio of Brian Lonsway, also in Waterville.

Cost for the complete tour, including lunch and transportation to and from Waterville and the Toledo Museum of Art (known as an excellent museum overall), is $35. Reservations may be made by calling the Northville Arts Info Line at 349-5099.

Free preschool available at Northville High School

Registrations still are being accepted for the Northville High School Preschool for three and four year olds.

The preschool will be held from 9:45-11:15 a.m. Tuesdays and Thursdays May 8-24.

Program emphasis will center on self-concept and socialization. A variety of large and small group activities have been planned for the preschool child and preparation of a nutritious snack will be among the daily activities.

The program is free. Interested parents can pick up applications at the high school. For additional information, call Carla Tibble, program director, at the high school during the school day at 349-3400, extension 327, or after 4:30 p.m. at 349-4896.

Lansing Report

Tax appeals subject of bill

State Representative Willis Bullard last Thursday introduced legislation that he said would clarify the rights of individuals who appeal state-imposed property tax assessments.

HB 5461, House Republicans reported, is Bullard's response to a controversy in Highland Township, one of the communities Bullard serves in addition to northern Northville. In Highland Township, a Michigan Tax Tribunal referee recently dismissed six appeals cases because taxpayers had authorized a township assessor to represent them at Board of Review meetings.

Under Bullard's proposed bill, any taxpayer whose property is assessed at more than 50 percent of its cash value because of a state or county equalization would be allowed to appeal that assessment to the Tribunal without a protest before the Board of Review.

Bullard pointed out that while the Tax Tribunal meets in March, state increases in local assessments are not finalized until May.

"How can taxpayers predict two months ahead of time what's going to happen to their property taxes?" Bullard asked. "Without the provision my bill includes, the appeal process is next to meaningless."

The controversy began when 125 Highland Township residents filed individual appeals protesting the Tax Equalization Factor of six percent imposed on all township properties by the state in 1982.

There has been "tremendous inconsistency" in handling the appeals, Bullard added.

"At least one township resident has been granted relief while equally deserving individuals have been turned down," he said. "Although township officials are doing their best to represent local residents, the Tax Tribunal is planning to dismiss more cases later this month because they are being represented by a township assessor."

"The whole situation is chaotic," he concluded. "And enacting this legislation would help guarantee the rights of taxpayers in an often confusing appeals process."

County executive Lucas wants five charter changes

By TIM RICHARD

Wayne County voters may face one to five county charter amendments on the November election ballot.

County executive William Lucas said he will spearhead a drive to get enough signatures to put the amendments on the November 6 presidential election ballot.

There could be agreement between Lucas and the Wayne County Commission on some of the proposed amendments, making it unnecessary to collect voter signatures to put them on the ballot, a spokesman said.

Lucas has proposed the amendments to solidify his authority over county operations. The first Wayne County charter took effect in January, 1983, when Lucas began his term as the first county executive.

Since that time, he and the commission have argued over the extent of his powers.

"A power grab" say some commissioners about Lucas' proposed amendments.

Briefly, the amendments would:

- 1) Prohibit commissioners from rejecting the executive's appointments except for "good cause shown."
- 2) Remove commissioner's authority to approve contracts.
- 3) Shift control of circuit court clerks from the county clerk to the circuit court judges.
- 4) Eliminate the drain commissioner as an elective office and bring the drain department under control of the executive.
- 5) Eliminate the three-member road commission and bring the department under control of the executive.

Interviews with western suburban commissioners indicated the first three proposals are unlikely to win commission support, meaning Lucas will have to collect 90,000 petition signatures for each to have them placed on the ballot.

The last two proposed amendments stand a good chance of getting commission support, though perhaps not in the form Lucas wants.

The charter provides two basic methods for amendments to be put before voters: by commission resolution and by initiative petition.

Relations between Lucas and the 15 commissioners broke down after he vetoed a hospital governance ordinance. Commissioners said Lucas reneged on an agreement to live with the ordinance.

Lucas denounced the commission with such phrases as "another glaring example of irresponsibility and an embarrassment..."

In an interview in Observer newspaper offices with Observer editors, Lucas said of the commissioners, "Most of them aren't worth a thing. Most should not be there."

In return, commissioners who previously supported Lucas on issues call him a "double crosser."

'When we have a department of public services, we'll have one shop, one fleet and we'll buy in bulk.'

— William Lucas
Wayne County Executive

Lucas asked the commission in his February 16 state of the county address to place the five charter amendments on the August 7 primary ballot. That would have allowed them to become issues in the Democratic primaries, where most county-wide races are decided.

Lucas' chief of staff, Dennis Nystrom, indicated the commission should act by mid-March to place the issues on the ballot.

By March 15, however, commissioners chafed because Lucas hadn't given them copies of the charter language he wanted. Commissioners obtained copies from the Observer papers and began work on two of them.

Lucas vowed to start his petition drive for the first proposed amendment March 15 when the commission rejected all but one of his road commission appointments.

The executive said commissioners failed to show just cause for rejecting the appointments and the appointments of Donald Bishop as assistant CEO for public services, Frank Wilkerson to the joint city-county building authority, Carl Stoutermire as head of human relations and Vernice Anthony-Davis as assistant CEO for health and human services.

Commissioners reply that they have grounds for rejecting his appointments. In the road commission case, for example, they said there is no charter provision for the "interim" panel Lucas sought. Two permanent appointments were rejected for conflict of interest reasons, commissioners said.

Commissioners also balk at limiting their political authority to reject appointments to "just cause." Lucas' language, they claim, could pave the way for court suits over almost any rejection. And, for example, there is no such limit on the U.S. Senate's authority to reject presidential appointments or the Michigan Senate's ability to reject gubernatorial appointments, commissioners say.

Lucas' second amendment would take from the commission and give to the executive the power to approve contracts within budget appropriations. Lucas contends that because he is the most visible county official, he should be the one responsible for contracts.

"Their job is to establish basic rules," said Nystrom of the commission. "They can exercise legislative oversight at the auditor general level." (The auditor is a commission appointee).

Nystrom also complained that commissioners take "two to three months" to approve contracts. He noted some contracts must leap four hurdles — a specific committee, the ways and means committee, the committee of the whole and the full commission — and meetings are often postponed because of lack of a quorum.

Nystrom said neither the U.S. Congress nor the Michigan Legislature approves contracts.

Commissioners, however, liken themselves to members of city councils, village councils, township boards, school board and college boards, all of which have authority to approve contracts negotiated by the executive branches.

Nystrom himself is an issue. As attorney for then-Sheriff Lucas before 1982, he ran up a bill of more than $250,000 in a suit against the commission. The County Commission so far has refused to pay and doesn't want to give Lucas charter authority to approve the Nystrom bill himself.

Lucas' fourth and fifth proposals — to bring the drain and road departments into the CEO's department of public works — are similar to frequently voiced reform proposals in Oakland and other counties.

The effect would be to bring three separate public works functions under a single, elected executive and his office of public services. There was some charter commission sentiment for such a reform, but state law at the time prohibited it.

"You don't need backhoes for three different departments. You don't need three fleets of trucks," Nystrom said.

"When we have a department of public services, we'll have one shop, one fleet and we'll buy in bulk," Lucas added.

Since county road commissions were created during the Depression, they have been run by three-member boards appointed by the elected county commission. Using state gasoline and weight tax revenues, they had their own separate budgets, buildings, staffs and operating rules — and near autonomy.

The new county charter and court victories gave Lucas authority to name the road commissioners. Now he seeks to abolish their functions entirely.

"The county commission would have their same legislative authority over the budget," said Nystrom, "but individual road projects would not be approved by the commission. We would present a budget and show a backup. They would have the right to add or delete money — but not to say which roads."

In Wayne County, the road commission has acted as trustee of the county parks system. Nystrom sees the possibility of an advisory board assisting the CEO's parks staff, but not in a policymaking capacity.

They see possible legal complications because these two offices receive "restricted" funds — drain assessments, enterprise funds, and state-returned taxes.

Commissioner Mary Dumas (R-10th District) said commissioners would work soon on the road commission proposal, possibly putting it on the ballot in a form different from Lucas'. In that event, voters could face a sixth charter proposal.

Bird-watching trek offered at Kensington Metropark

The Nature Center at Kensington Metropark will host two family Easter holiday programs Sunday, April 22.

"Easter Bird Walk," an early-morning outing, will begin at 8 a.m. Participants are encouraged to bring binoculars, as Park Naturalist Brian Creek will lead a search for spring birds.

"Nature's Search Parade," a 1 1/2-hour walk, will be held at 2 p.m. A park naturalist will discuss the "parade" of sights and sounds of spring and the "rebirth" of woodland flowers and baby animals.

Both programs are free; however, advance registration and a vehicle entry permit (daily —, annual — $7) are required.

For additional information, or to register, call the Nature Center at Kensington metropark at 1-800-552-6772 (toll-free).

Morning blaze does $100,000 damage, residents safe

An early morning fire last Friday caused an estimated $100,000 structural damage to a home on Fermanagh Drive and led to the hospitalization of one man, township fire officials said.

Chief Robert Toms said the fire reported at 5:41 a.m. April 6 started in the family room at 45766 Fermanagh. Homeowner Jack Stasiuk told investigators he awoke to the smell of smoke and went downstairs where he saw a glow coming from the back of the house.

Stasiuk awoke the four other persons in the home and all escaped safely, though he and his wife were unable to descend the stairs and left off a dust porch near the bedroom.

Hospitalized was Robert Freed, Stasiuk's brother-in-law who was freed from Canada, Toms reported. Freed had a history of heart problems and was found to have extraordinarily high blood pressure at the scene. He was transported to Providence Hospital by Community EMS ambulance and held for observation.

Toms said preliminary investigation indicates the fire may have been ignited by either a spark from the family room fireplace or by a cigarette ash in completely extinguished the previous evening.

The damage estimate includes only the structural damage to the home — Toms suggested the estimate could double or triple after damage to property within the home is tallied.

Firefighters arrived within 8 minutes of receiving the call, Toms said, and found "fire just raging out the back." It took 30 minutes to bring the fire under control, he said, and firefighters were on the scene approximately three hours.

Toms said the fire was reported by a neighbor, which caused concern among firefighters who assumed the residents were still inside. "We were happy to see they'd gotten out of there," he said. "Usually when we get an early morning call like that and it's a neighbor, we worry that the people are still trapped in there."

Police Blotters

Owners report three automobile thefts to township

In the Township...

Northville Township Police are investigating three auto thefts which occurred in the township between March 28 and 30.

According to police, the three vehicles were stolen within a 48-hour period from relatively the same location. During their investigation of the incidents, police found that entry gained into each of the vehicles was identical.

All three cars were recovered by Detroit police with extensive damage.

The first incident occurred sometime between 10:45 p.m. March 27 and 6:30 a.m. March 28 when unknown suspects stole a 1983 Camaro from a carport on Silver Springs Drive.

The complainant told police the vehicle was locked at the time the incident occurred and was equipped with an audible alarm.

The complainant noted she did not hear the car alarm go off and did not see anyone in the area when she parked.

No evidence or tools were found around the area where the vehicle was parked.

At approximately 11:30 a.m. March 28, township police were notified that the stolen vehicle had been recovered by Detroit police in the area of Avon and Curtis.

The vehicle has been partially stripped. Stolen were four tires and wheels, all interior seats, two T-tops, a radio and battery. Damage was estimated at $1,200.

The second incident occurred sometime between 8 p.m. March 28 and 8:15 a.m. March 29, when unknown suspects stole a 1984 GMC truck from a parking lot at Swan Lake Drive.

The complainants told police the vehicle was locked at the time the incident occurred and that both sets of car keys were with the owners.

At approximately 11 a.m. March 29, Detroit police recovered the vehicle.

According to the police report, pry marks were found on the exterior door of the passenger side.

The truck was found partially stripped. Missing were four tires and wheels, a battery, stereo speakers and component and the dashboard covering. Damage was estimated at $4,000.

The third incident occurred sometime between 8:30 p.m. March 28 and 5:50 a.m. March 29, when a new 1984 Pontiac TransAm was stolen from a parking lot directly in front of a Lagoon Court condominium.

The complainant said the vehicle was locked at the time the incident occurred and told police the car only had been purchased March 23 and had less than 1,000 miles on it.

The complainant further stated the family had been at the residence all night and no one heard anything.

At 2:30 a.m. March 30, township police received a call from Detroit police notifying them of the vehicle's recovery.

Damage to the vehicle was estimated at $5,000. Stolen from the car were four tires and wheels, two T-tops, two bucket seats, one bench seat, a stereo-radio, two stereo speakers, top of the dash board, temporary spare tire and the battery.

...From State Police

Fourteen videotape movies valued at a total of $659.56 were reported stolen March 31 from a Seven Mile Road business.

State police reports indicate the VHS format tapes were reported missing from the shelves at Northville Video, 43197 Seven Mile Road. The owner told police the movies, which he rents to consumers, were stored on shelves behind the counter and when he opened the store he discovered 10 were missing from one shelf and four from another.

The owner's daughter was the last employee to see the tapes, he told police. Of the 14 tapes, 10 were adult movies. Each was contained in a case valued at $1 and the estimated value of the individual movie tapes ranged from $45 to $58.50.

The owner said 21 people had rented tapes the previous business day and another 10 to 20 had been "browsers" in the store. Police had no suspects as of Monday.

State police are seeking a warrant for the arrest of a man alleged to have assaulted a Northville Regional Psychiatric Hospital patient.

Police reports indicate the suspect was visiting his mother, a patient in the hospital, when the alleged assault occurred. Information gathered from security officers and direct care workers at the scene suggests the man was upset to discover his mother had a black eye and a bruised ear.

While nurses attempted to ascertain how the injury occurred, a patient on the floor said that a third patient had assaulted the suspect's mother. The man then allegedly reached between two staff persons and hit the patient indicated as the cause of his mother's injury. The blow pushed the patient back against the wall and knocked a radio out of her hand.

Hospital doctors noted only a scratch on the patient's eyelid as visible injury resulting from the alleged attack.

State police are investigating the possibility that marijuana is being sold within Northville Regional Psychiatric Hospital.

A patient there told police he had witnessed sale of marijuana cigarettes between patients.

...in the City

City police believe juveniles were responsible for tearing the convertible top of a 1974 Triumph Spitfire parked in the lower level parking deck, Cady at Wing streets, last weekend. According to a police report, damage to the car, owned by a Northville resident, is believed to have occurred between 8 p.m. Friday and 11 p.m. Saturday. Damage to the car was estimated at $200.

Millage passage — vote of confidence

The Northville school system and its administration received a vote of confidence in Monday's election as the combined 7-mill renewal and 2.5-mill increase passed — although the 200 votes that ensured victory cannot be construed to be a landslide.

This is a cautious endorsement of the changes effected in the district during the past three years and certainly is a tribute to Dr. George Bell, superintendent, who has worked untiringly to explain the need for the millage to any groups or individuals who asked. It also is an acknowledgement that the changes with which the superintendent was charged to make when he was hired have been put in place.

Bell himself stated he would not have come to the voters for the increase had the situation at the high school not been improved, among others. Through the efforts of Bell, the community has seen a transformation in the physical condition of the building at the top of the hill as well as in attitudes. The "open campus" has been tightened, the school day lengthened and graduation requirements increased. David Bolitho, the young new principal, is reported to inspire confidence and create a respect for the high school that was certainly lacking. We believe the voters recognized this.

Undoubtedly a factor in the passage of the millage was the increased parental involvement in school operation — from curriculum to high school renovation. We hope this will continue as it creates an awareness of the district's needs and goals.

We are certain that the next hurdle for the superintendent and school board will be contract negotiations. We will be watching these critically as we are sure the voters will. As Bell has observed, he was not a part of the previous contract negotiations but has been subject to many questions about them. Residents have told us they feel the district has been generous and must look at the next round realistically.

The two-year duration of the newly-approved 9.5 mill package certainly will be among the most crucial for this district. We are encouraged by the administration's recent formation of a task force to study cost savings measures. Such actions will be essential in order to offset the district's $1 million deficit.

Within the next few years, the district's long range plan will come to fruition. It is anticipated that by September, 1985, the high school renovation will be completed and the middle school structure will be implemented.

As many have noted, these are "exciting" times for this district. School board president Chris Johnson summed up the prevailing attitude among voters Monday night by noting that passage of the 9.5 mills "shows the whole district has moved a long way." We agree that the change in Northville schools is for the better.

However, Monday's voting indicates that not all residents are convinced by the changes made — or those to come. It will be the administration's charge to assure these residents — most of whom do not have children in the school system — that their tax dollars are well spent.

Green sprouts, litter arrive with spring

Spring definitely has been a bit late in arriving this year, seemingly ignoring her March 20 arrival date. Not completely true. As the last snow melted, green sprouts were revealed in beds of bulbs throughout the downtown. During the past few days those sprouts have been inching upward and should produce the colorful blooms we have come to anticipate in May.

The Record has had many reports that robins now are everywhere, and goldfinches that still come to feeders are noticeably more yellow.

As the snow disappeared, however, a surprising amount of litter has been uncovered in some plant beds around town. Cigarette butts, candy wrappers, bottles and other bits of paper cry for a clean up. In view of the pride displayed in the results of Mainstreet beautification, it is disappointing to find that trash containers placed in the downtown are not used instead of plant beds.

The plantings of Girl Scout and garden club volunteers under the direction of city and township beautification commissions are a bonus that the entire community can anticipate enjoying by Michigan Week May 19-26.

It's too bad the work of many caring volunteers is spoiled with litter. Beautification should be the concern of everyone. We all need the lift that bright beds of flowers bring around town. The message is simple: we all are responsible for beautification. We all can put trash where it belongs — in the containers provided.

Off the record

By Kevin Wilson

Here's the beefs, so stop asking

KEVIN DOES ANDY ROONEY, or, THINGS I'M SICK OF HEARING ABOUT:

• Top of the list has to be rumors that this newspaper is certain to endorse or oppose particular candidates this election year. Four or five have reached my ear — all bewildering. Nobody likes to think they're that predictable, and besides, I haven't an inkling whom we'll endorse.

It's too early, for one thing. All the players aren't yet on the field. And the ones that are haven't done or said much on which to base decisions. Despite scuttlebutt to the contrary, a favorable expression in one story or a reporter's scowl when a name is mentioned doesn't count for a hill of beans come election week.

If what The Record editorial board is seeking in candidates were so easily predictable, there wouldn't be any sense in interviewing them all — they'd all just tell us what we expected to hear. Hard as it is for some to believe, campaign platforms, public statements, stances on particular issues and our staff interviews really can sway our decision right up to the day we discuss and determine our choices. Even if we start out detesting someone, or admiring someone else. And the voters can and do note our selections then make different picks based on what they read in the news columns, or hear around town.

So stop it already with telling me how so-and-so is a shoo-in because the paper likes her or such-and-such doesn't stand a snowball's chance because he stepped on someone's toes. Everyone should make their best run, free of that kind of burdensome luggage. And no one should be sitting back, thinking they've got it won. That's a certain method to alienate me, at least, if not the electorate.

• Next complaint. "Where's the beef" is dead already. Somebody put it out of my misery. I think Wendy's will soon be sorry they signed that enormous contract with the cute lady who delivers the line. The rush to capitalize on a phrase that caught the public fancy has killed the goose. Surefire way to abolish a popular expression — let Walter Mondale use it.

• You want beef? I'll give you a beef — I've had enough of the Michigan Panthers — championship, winning streak and all. In fact, enough of the entire Useless Spring Football League. Why? Because this is spring, the Tigers are on a roll (or were when I wrote this) and even devoted football fans can get too much of a good thing.

Besides, I'm also an auto racing fan, and guess what sport is suffering inadequate media coverage thanks to the newspaper space and broadcast time devoted to the USFL? This is serious folks. The Formula One Grand Prix season is two races old already, my favorite team, McLaren, has dominated the early going and I've got to buy three newspapers just to piece together some idea what's going down. By the time it gets to Detroit, the Panthers will be in the playoffs or something and no one will know what's happening 'til it's done.

Too obscure? How about this? Mario Andretti won the Indy-car season opener at Long Beach 10 days ago — the first time Indy cars have run on city streets in more than 50 years. The Detroit Free Press all but ignored it (they gave a list of the top 12 finishers), the News picked up a wire story sans photo and even USA Today, the only daily to devote regular space to auto racing, gave it maybe five inches, again no photo. All three had full pages or more of USFL news. Who cares, already?

• Winding down now. But does it annoy anyone else that dozens of people write letters to the editor groaning and moaning about this, that or the other thing, but never show their faces at the public meetings where the matters are debated and decisions made?

Or that some of those letters provide every indication that the writer may turn a nice phrase but hasn't the foggiest notion about the facts. It's as if some can write, but can't read the front page stories that provide all the details they seem to have missed.

Not to discourage anyone, mind you. That letters page is supposed to be loaded with other people's opinions. We enjoy it most when their opinions don't happen to coincide exactly with ours — it makes us think and provides a healthy atmosphere of discussion. I just sometimes wish for a more informed debate.

About Town

By Steve Fecht

After the fact

By PHILIP JEROME

I've been around long enough to know it's the little things — the details — that make the difference.

And so, when it came time to buy a pair of sunglasses last week, I didn't mess around. I went right to Scott the Haberdasher, who keeps up with the latest on these sorts of things. Scott even reads Gentleman's Quarterly.

"Scott, I need a pair of sunglasses that makes me look studly," I announced as I strolled through the door in a forceful yet sophisticated manner.

"Got just the thing," he said, leading me to a back room. "These are the latest from New York. Not even available in the Detroit market yet. They make you look like you drive a Maserati."

And with that he held up a pair of sunglasses for me to examine.

Now I don't want to appear unsophisticated, but I must confess I was less than impressed. They were like every other pair of sunglasses I had ever seen with only two slight differences — there were little leather flaps on either side, apparently to keep the sun from filtering in from the east or west when you're facing north or south, and there was a plastic string attached to both ends.

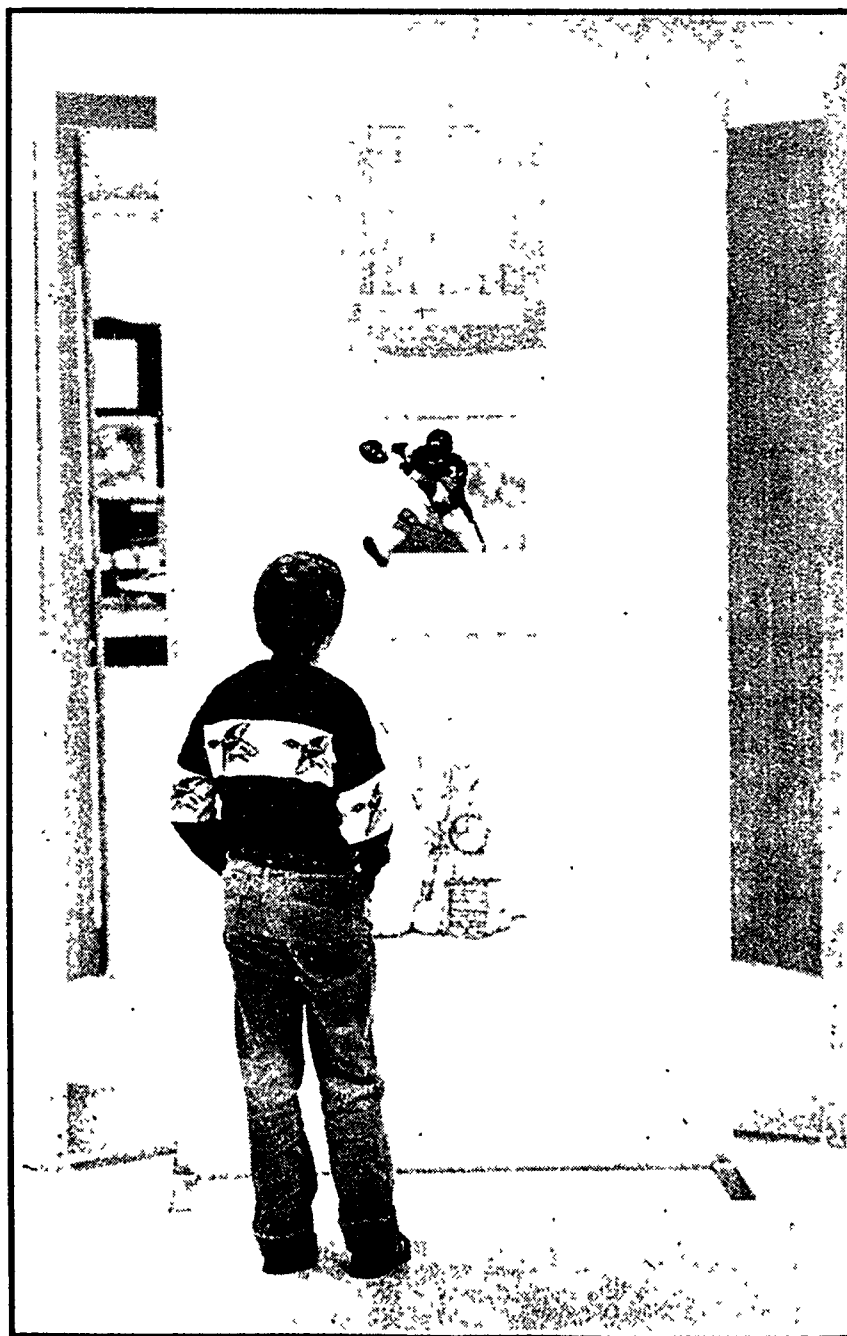

"It's that little string that makes the difference," said Scott. "You can take it off if you want, but you won't be cool if you do. It makes a lot of sense," he added. "You don't have to worry about putting your glasses in your pocket when you're not wearing them. You can just let them dangle around your neck."

I didn't buy those glasses. They cost $50 and, besides, Scott said they were his and he wasn't selling them. But I did end up getting a pair of shades for substantially less money that appear to be just as adequate.

Terri, the young lady who cuts my hair, didn't recognize me when I stopped in later that afternoon. "I wondered who that stranger was out there," she said.

But the best came when I wore them home for my wife to see.

"Oh, it's you," she said, as I walked in the front door. "For a minute I thought Clint Eastwood had come to visit."

Resident opposes hospital fencing

To The Editor:
I was appointed by our mayor, Paul Vernon, to represent Northville to the advisory committee at Northville Regional Psychiatric Hospital.

The director, Mr. John Reynolds, works very hard to give the patients decent care. He explained to us that he visited a similar hospital in Indiana which had a high fence around the hospital. The fence there acted as a challenge to the patients and the runaway problem was worse than ever.

There are sick people at Northville — and the hospital employs many Northville residents.

The hospital has been there many years. The people who bought homes behind the hospital must have known the hospital has been there for many, many years.

I think the fence is an unnecessary waste of money. What do you think?

Sincerely,
Shirley Matthews

City Fire Department appreciates 'Jaws' aid

To The Editor:

The Northville City Fire Department would like to thank the citizens of Northville for their support of our Jaws of Life program.

Your attendance at our car washes and support of the raffle along with the many donations has made our goal of $9,000 be reached in less than three months.

The support given by this community for this very worthwhile project has been wonderful.

This equipment will be ordered shortly. Again we would like to thank you for your support and donations.

Sincerely,

Green thanked for his honesty

To The Editor:

Several days ago, my daughter lost two checks amounting to $400. She was unaware that the checks slipped from her purse while banking at Novi and Ten Mile roads.

A young man found her endorsed checks outside the bank, notified her place of employment of the loss and forwarded the checks.

I am certain that my daughter will send a special note of thanks. However, my husband and I felt that we should share this happy ending with the Northville community, not only to publicly thank Robert Green, but to let everyone know what nice people we have living in our community.

Thank you, Robert Green of Northville!

Bullard proposes state act amendments

By CINDY HOOGLASIAN

Two amendments to the Michigan Open Meetings Act have been introduced by State Representative Willis Bullard Jr., a first-term legislator whose district includes the cities of South Lyon, Novi, a portion of Northville, and the townships of Highland, Milford, Lyon and Novi.

One of the proposed modifications, House Bill 4850, requires that newspapers publish notice of public meetings to be held in private homes.

HB 4850 states that the notice must be published at least two days before the meeting date and it must specify the date, time and place of the meeting. The bill also states that the advertisement must bear the message "This meeting is open to all members of the public under Michigan's Open Meetings Act."

HB 4850 was approved by the House on March 15 by a vote of 94-2. Representatives Tom Power of Traverse City and Virgil Smith of Detroit cast the dissenting votes.

The proposal is now lodged in the State Senate Committee on Local Government, chaired by State Senator Harmon Cropsey.

While critics of the bill view it as weakening the OMA by encouraging governmental bodies to meet in private residences, Bullard believes it strengthens the law.

"Under the Open Meetings Act now, you can have an open meeting in a private home," Bullard said. "All the act requires is that meetings be held in a place available to the public... I think by doing this, we will discourage meetings in private residences. I see this as a tightening up of the act to make the law more restrictive than it is now."

Bullard's other proposal, House Bill 4849, would expand the reasons that governing bodies may adjourn to closed-door sessions. Bullard said HB 4849 would loosen the OMA in two respects.

HB 4849 would allow a public body to call closed-door sessions when discussing pending or threatened litigation. It would modify the existing law to allow the public's exclusion when discussing legal matters whether or not they deal with financial matters.

Currently, the OMA allows private sessions to discuss trial or settlement strategy relating to pending litigation only when an open meeting would have a "detrimental financial effect" on the position of the public body.

"Based on my experience, most litigation in which municipalities are involved doesn't involve money," Bullard said. "In most instances, litigation involves ordinance enforcement, planning or zoning conflicts. The municipalities cannot say they will suffer financial detriment when discussing a zoning case in public... under this bill, they must still show that there is a detrimental effect by discussing the case in an open meeting."

It is the portion of HB 4849 which permits closed meetings to be called to discuss "threatened" litigation which is the most controversial, Bullard noted.

"As a practical matter," Bullard said, "it is sometimes possible to settle disputes, and save attorney fees, by settling a matter before a case is filed."

"There is what I call a window of opportunity between the time when a dispute begins and when it goes to court where there is an opportunity to settle the suit."

Bullard said governing units could ask for an executive session to find out what their legal position is, what the strengths and weaknesses of the case may be and whether they should allow the matter to go to court.

Bullard said he believes local governments would not abuse this allowance by broadly classifying any controversial issue as potentially litigious.

"They (local governments) would not do it on every dispute," Bullard said.

"But, I am considering offering an amendment to the bill to address that concern. It would define threatened litigation to mean when an attorney writes a letter to a municipality and says his client will sue unless they vote yes or no on whatever business is before the board or council. This would eliminate the fear people have that a closed session would be called if someone from the audience stood up and said 'Unless you vote this way, I'll sue you'."

HB 4849 is currently in the House Committee on Towns and Counties, where it underwent a brief hearing on March 20.

Committee Clerk Judy Cosgrove said testimony from Mike Korwoski representing the State Bar Association was heard that day. Korwoski testified that the state bar supports the bill because it would help settle disputes before law suits are filed, Cosgrove reported. The bill is seen as a money-saving measure, she said.

Further discussion of the bill has not yet been scheduled, Cosgrove noted. Bullard said he would suggest the clarifying amendment to the "threatened litigation" exemption when the committee again takes up the issue.

Newspapers are perhaps the greatest critics of the two proposals, but the Michigan Press Association (MPA) is not too concerned about the bills.

Energy theft fine sought

By GERALD H. LAW
State Representative

Legislation designed to reduce energy theft and increase the penalty for meter tampering was one of four energy assurance bills recently signed into law by Governor Blanchard. I co-sponsored HB 4974, which addresses the growing problem that has caused major revenue losses to utility companies in recent years.

Nearly 45,000 suspected or confirmed cases of energy theft resulted in billings of approximately $6.6 million in 1982. Residential customers are responsible for the majority of uncollectable accounts and energy thefts. It's important that we strengthen punishments for the few dishonest customers that are stealing from the majority of honest, hard-working ratepayers.

The new law should provide a strong deterrent to people who intentionally damage or alter utility meters so they no longer record energy consumption accurately. The measure allows for a presumption of intent to steal energy if a tampered meter is discovered at a residence or place of business.

This will strengthen the prosecution in energy cases by shifting the burden of proof to the accused, who will have to show that he or she did not intend to avoid paying for the energy.

The new law also raises the dividing line between misdemeanor and felony energy theft to encourage prosecution of serious cases.

Thefts involving less than $500 would be misdemeanors and could be handled in district court, where they should receive more serious consideration for prosecution. Energy theft in excess of $500 would be considered a felony, thereby increasing the possibility that serious cases would be pursued by prosecutors.

News from Lansing

By R. ROBERT GEAKE
State Senator

No one likes to think about garbage. In the best of all possible worlds, we'd simply set it out on the curb and, magically, it would disappear from our lives forever.

Such is not the case in Michigan. Our landfills are saturated, outdated and unsafe. At this time, adequate funding is not available to implement a modern resource recovery program that handles solid waste in a safe manner and does not pollute our precious groundwater, soil and air.

A bipartisan coalition of legislators from both the Senate and the House, along with the Department of Natural Resources and many other interest groups, is now urging support for a $350 million bonding proposal to help implement an important, unique and safe resource recovery system in Michigan.

The proposal — which must first be passed by the legislature and then placed on the ballot in November — seeks to sell $350 million in general obligation bonds to implement a new solid waste program to move Michigan away from dependence on landfills.

Voters will be given the opportunity to decide if they are committed to a cleaner means of resource recovery — such as incineration and recycling, composting and turning waste into energy — by considering whether to allow the state to sell the bonds.

Supporters of the proposal believe the voters are indeed ready. A recently-released public opinion poll showed that a strong majority of Michigan voters agree with the concept of recycling and resource recovery, and would be willing to implement such a plan in Michigan.

With the passage of the solid waste management act in 1978, which requires landfills and other sites to come up to state standards or close down, the question of who pays for the costly improvements became a major issue. That controversy has become moot, because the funding simply is not available at any level.

As the DNR attempts to enforce our solid waste law, each landfill closure ends in litigation, adding to the cost, delaying environmental protection, and still not solving the problem. This proposal seeks to solve the problem.

The concept has the support of the League of Women Voters, the Michigan Townships Association, SEMCOG, the Solid Waste Management Association, the Michigan Municipal League, the Michigan Association of Counties, the Farm Bureau, PIRGIM, and the Michigan State Chamber of Commerce.

The next challenge will be to sell the need and desirability of this plan to the voters. Proponents of the proposal hope to persuade the public to heed the words of New Jersey Governor William Cahill, who said, when signing a coastal dumping law: "We can no longer afford to just throw our wastes away, because there is no 'away.'"

Tax rollback approved

Legislation that would save Michigan taxpayers more than $800 million over the next three years passed the Senate March 27 by a 22-15 vote.

Senator Robert Geake (R-Northville), who voted for the tax rollback measure, said this bill would reduce the current 6.1 percent income tax rate to 5.35 percent on July 1 of this year and to 4.6 percent on July 1, 1985. The measure also calls for the state income tax rate to drop to 3.9 percent if the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate falls to seven percent or less.

"I supported this rollback measure because it returns to the taxpayers the most dollars possible without sacrificing the important goal of restoring Michigan's fiscal responsibility," Geake said.

Geake said taxpayers will save $130 million this year, $220 million next year and some $400 million in 1986 if the House passes the measure and Governor Blanchard signs the bill into law.

Geake stressed that the dollars come only from the budget surpluses and will not result in reductions of state programs to the needy.

Blood bank held May 3 at Presbyterian church

Donors are being sought for a community blood bank to be held May 3 at First Presbyterian Church in Northville under sponsorship of the Northville Jaycee Women.

Joyce Bousquet, chairperson, reports that the Red Cross currently has a goal of collecting 1,000 pints of blood each day and says the Northville blood bank is being held to help in this effort.

"Every 17 seconds, someone needs a life-giving transfusion of blood — a gift that can come only from you and me," she says, encouraging donations from employee and other groups.

The bank will be held from noon to 6 p.m. Reservations may be made by calling 348-7027.

Barkley fills Salem treasurer post; seek trustee replacement

The Salem Township board acted quickly at its April 3 meeting to appoint board member and deputy treasurer Harvey Barkley to the part-time $10,300 position of township treasurer.

The treasurer's post became vacant just one week earlier with the death of former township treasurer Russell Knight on March 27. Barkley had served as deputy treasurer for the past year.

A board member for almost 10 years, Barkley first ran for office and was elected in November 1974.

Township Clerk Nancy Geiger administered the oath of office to Barkley immediately following the appointment and Barkley's announcement that he was resigning from the trustee post. All three actions took place during the first five minutes of the April 3 meeting. Barkley said he would submit his written resignation from the trustee post at once.

Barkley reported that in his position as deputy treasurer he had worked during the final weekend of March to close the books for the fiscal year. Salem Township's fiscal year runs from April 1 to March 31.

The board, which recently acted to appoint Richard Sackett to the position of supervisor after the February 3 death of former supervisor, Floyd Taylor, is now faced with the task of filling Barkley's vacated trustee position.

Following the precedent it set in the Sackett appointment, the board agreed to advertise for applicants to fill the Barkley's unexpired term as trustee. Sackett was one of five applicants for the supervisor position. That post and all of the township board seats will be up for election in November.

Applications for trustee can be picked up by Salem Township residents at the township offices, 9600 Six Mile, between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. weekdays. Deadline for completing and returning the applications is 4 p.m. Tuesday, April 24, according to Geiger.

The board indicated that it would review the applications at a public work session and would be prepared to make the trustee appointment at its May 1 meeting. The date of the work session is yet to be announced, but Geiger said it will be posted on the township's outdoor bulletin board at least 18 hours prior to the meeting as required by law.

Trustees receive $50 for each official township meeting they attend.

In other action April 3, the board opened bids from two firms for the purchase and installation of a public address system for the township hall. The low bid of $2,144 was from General Audio Company of Ann Arbor.

State Police nab burglars entering Napier home

Two suspected burglars who were subjects of surveillance by a state police special investigative unit were arrested April 3 and accused of breaking and entering at a Napier Road residence.

Detroit residents Scotty Stephen Poling, 30, and Jack Randall McIntyre, 18, both were charged with breaking and entering of an occupied dwelling and arraigned before 52nd District Court Judge Michael Batchik. Both entered not guilty pleas. Examination is scheduled Thursday.

Police reports indicate the special investigative unit, composed of six Michigan State Police Troopers and one Bloomfield Township police officer, had the two under surveillance at the time of the Napier Road burglary.

Stolen from the Lyon Township home were jewelry and cash totaling more than $650 in value, the police report indicates.

According to the report, the arrest came about this way:

Police followed Poling's 1974 Pontiac from the Detroit area to Lyon Township, where it pulled into the driveway of a Napier Road home. McIntyre got out of the car, approached the front door and was seen to pick up a rock and break a window, the report states. Entry to this house was not gained, however, and McIntyre got back into the car.

Poling is then alleged to have driven to another nearby residence and pulled into the driveway there at approximately 1 p.m. Police stated they observed McIntyre getting out of the car and entering the attached garage while Poling drove the car a few doors away.

McIntyre was seen leaving the house through a door in the garage approximately 10 minutes later and walked to the street, where he got back into the car which was waiting there for him, police said.

One state trooper entered the house through the same door McIntyre had left while the rest of the investigative squad tailed the car. When the trooper found two upstairs bedrooms had been ransacked, he radioed the other police officers who made the arrest at Beck Road and Grand River, the report states. The pair was housed in the City of Northville lockup until arraignment.

When arrested, the pair had in their possession some 17 items police suspected were stolen.

When contacted, the owner of the home told police she had departed at some time between 12:30 and 12:45 p.m., leaving the garage door and house entry open for her son, who does not have a key. She supplied a list of missing items which matched closely the list of articles found in the car at the time of the arrest. Viewing the items later, she identified all but two as her belongings and noted that a white gold engagement ring with a 1/2-carat diamond and a one carat diamond pendant were still missing.

Under questioning, Poling told police he had been having trouble with the muffler of his car falling off and that he asked McIntyre to borrow a wrench from the house. He said he did not know what McIntyre was doing in the house.

Advised of his right to silence, McIntyre declined to talk with police about the incident.

Monday, police linked McIntyre's fingerprints with those found on a jewelry box in one of the ransacked bedrooms.

Both suspects were found to have prior criminal records. Batchik set bond for each suspect at $2,000 with a 10 percent cash requirement. Both were sent to Oakland County Jail in lieu of bond.

Parson to Person...

PALMS OF PRAISE

Dr. James Luther

The King of Glory entered Jerusalem riding on a lowly donkey. Along the way the crowd laid garments in the road; and, waving palm branches, they welcomed Him with shouts of Hosannas. His enemies, the religious leaders, said: "See ye how ye prevail nothing? Behold, the world is gone after Him" (John 12:19).

He drew people by the wisdom of His words. He drew them by the force of His divine personality. He drew the needy by His touch, which sent health flowing through broken bodies. No one who came to Him in faith went away with their need unmet.

But Christ, who drew the crowd, lost the crowd. He spoke of a cross, of suffering and death. People follow for food but not for affliction. Men will come for a cure but not for a cross.

It has always been so! The missionary calls them "rice Christians." They come when something can be gained, but quickly fall away when persecutions arise.

But some come in true sincerity! These are those who are sick of sin, hungry hearted. They are willing to walk a narrow way and bear the shame of His cross. True disciples, these. And God is calling them today from every "Kindred, tongue... and nation." One day the earth will be filled with His praises and the words of His ancient enemies will ring true:

"Behold the world is gone after Him."

New techniques add to bottom line

By KAAREN PETERS

Many American corporations are moving away from the token suggestion box and taking another look at the value of worker participation in management.

Participation comes in various forms — quality circles (small problem-solving groups of workers), quality of worklife (QWL) efforts, task forces (problem-solving groups that cut across hierarchical levels) and numerous variations on these themes.

The underlying premise is a management style that assumes employees at all levels can contribute creatively to solving problems.

The concept is not new. But its acceptance in this country is.

"The United States lags behind many other countries in accepting the value of worker participation," observed Charles Leibel, president of Leibel & Associates, Inc., a management consulting firm. Leibel's clients include Suburban Communications Corporation, TRW and Macauley's.

"For 75 years we've been treating symptoms — high absenteeism, poor worker motivation or low productivity — instead of treating the disease," added Leibel. "It's only been in the last five years that top leadership has begun to question the fundamental ways in which decisions are made and problems are solved."

"Survival is a very effective shared motivation," explains Ronald Kregoski, president of Consulting Associations International, Inc., a Novi-based firm specializing since 1973 in applying the concepts of behavioral sciences to management systems.

Kregoski has been a consultant on Quality Circles for Japanese companies operating in the United States as well as numerous U.S. corporations, including the Ford Motor Company.

Both Leibel and Kregoski agree that the Japanese concept of Quality Circles must be amended before they can be applied to the hierarchical, pyramid-style organizational structure prevalent in most U.S. corporations.

"Quality Circles are sometimes seen as a quick fix," observed Kregoski. "When tacked onto existing structures as a pre-packaged program, they are destined to fail."

Kregoski said his company approaches firms interested in establishing a form of participatory management with a careful analysis of needs.

"The single most important factor in determining the success of participatory management is the depth of understanding and commitment at the top," he said.

Kregoski said he frequently finds companies that have a "knee jerk" response to decision-making. He cites the example of one company which decided it needed an employee training center and — through force of habit — assigned the task to a personnel manager.

Because the task was low on the manager's list of priorities, it didn't get done. In spite of the company's commitment to the training center, Kregoski had to suggest that employees design the center. They did — with innovative and efficient results.

Leibel and Kregoski both report that more and more people in top-level management are becoming convinced of the value of participatory management. Kregoski tells of a company whose employees put out their own employee newsletter. "It's professional quality and management has no censure," he said. "That takes courage, but innovation and courage are needed today."

Strong support from the top, however, does not insure success for employee involvement programs automatically.

Cores of resistance to participatory management programs often are found at the middle-management level. They scare supervisors who want to maintain control over people.

"Giving orders feels like power to some people — and nobody likes to give up power," said Kregoski.

"Knowledge is power," adds Leibel. "Sharing knowledge is perceived by

Employee involvement aids productivity

By KEVIN WILSON

Innovative management methods using employee involvement techniques extensively are a major factor in the recovery of Ford Motor Company's Northville Plant, manager Bill Sherrick asserts.

The plant, formerly a producer of engine valves, was closed in late 1981. It was subsequently reopened following the 1982 UAW-Ford contract negotiations and, Sherrick explains, uses a "minimal management" philosophy to manufacture fuel tanks and repair parts racks.

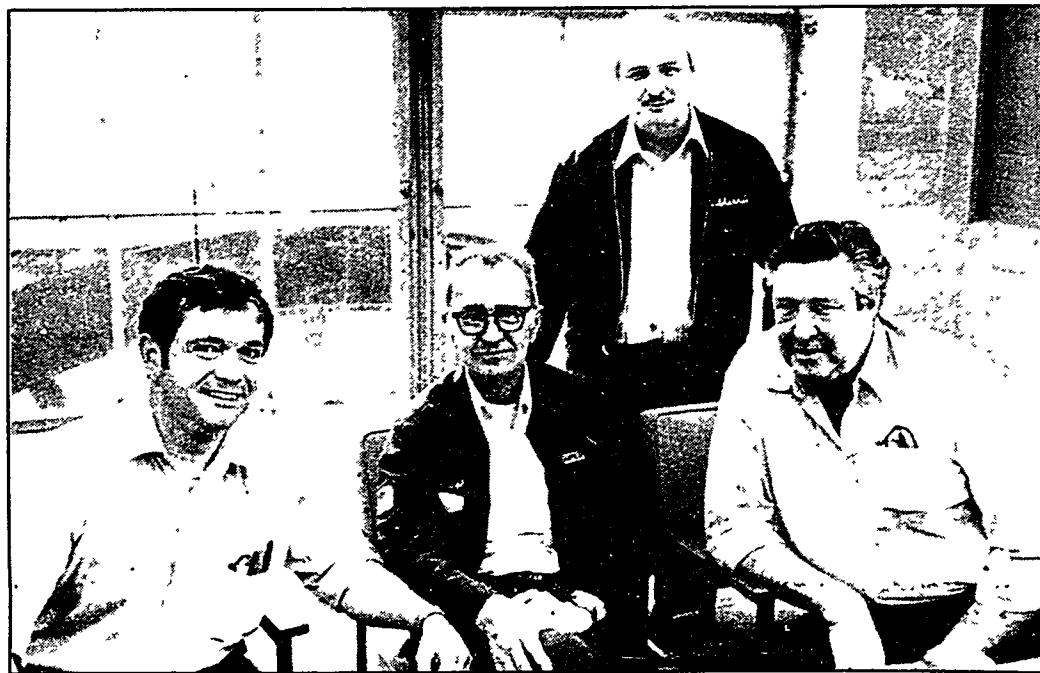

With 60 hourly and four salaried employees, the plant operates with a ratio of supervisors to workers far lower than is common in the auto industry and Sherrick says it's paying off.

He points to rapid productivity gains, very low absenteeism, high employee morale and commitment to the job, better communication between management and labor, and high quality ratings as major benefits of involving employees directly in virtually all management decisions.

Yet, Sherrick notes, "we haven't gone as far with (employee involvement) as we would like to" and some phases of the program, notably in training that goes beyond job functions, actually lag behind Ford's corporate average.

But the plant does involve the production workers in much of the decision-making process. Sherrick meets with all plant employees on a regular basis and "I go over where we stand financially, what the future looks like, I let them know what our production costs are, plus what the plant costs are, and then open it up to discussion."

UAW local chairman Norm Fultz says employee interest in the data is intense, since the plant is not yet operating in the black and doing so is a major goal. "You don't have to do much to motivate people who have been out of work," Fultz explains. "They see the incentive."

Sherrick says the plant is nearing the break-even point, but cannot do so without more work — only 50 percent of the floor space is occupied. With the recent productivity gains, he asserts, production costs are covered and then some, but overhead costs will be remain out of reach even after all production goals are reached unless more work is assigned the facility.

On the plant floor, employees are encouraged to make suggestions to production supervisor Ron McLaughlin, who says worker input has been a key element in getting the fuel tank production rate up to speed in the past seven months. "We've made a lot of changes in the handling of parts in between operations — the people themselves are telling us the problems so we can make changes," McLaughlin says. "What they're doing really, is refining it," Sherrick elaborates. "You have to understand nobody at this plant ever made fuel tanks before. Now we're comfortable with them, we feel we know what we're doing. We started making current model tanks only seven months ago and we've made great gains in that time."

Ford plant sees benefit from involved workers

Late last year, the plant was turning out 1,000 tanks per 10 hour day and working Saturdays to keep up with demand. Without adding any personnel, daily production totals now regularly top the 2,000 mark on five-day, eight-hour shifts, Sherrick says.

And quality is high, McLaughlin adds. "Everybody is watching for visual defects — we've had a very low reject rate. They're told any time they have a question to get ahead of an inspector or myself right away, and it works."

Carl Kerr, maintenance and equipment supervisor, says the "important part is that people's input into the process has been great, they're suggesting things that save money, increase productivity and quality and their attitudes are super. In my experience, a lot of times employees don't have a choice about how a new line operates, and sometimes the supervisors don't have much choice — they just come in a set up the line and you work with whatever you're given. But this way, we learn every day."

Fultz notes that he recently attended a meeting of the UAW Ford subcommittee and spoke with union leaders from other Ford facilities where employee involvement programs are being tried — some successfully, some less so.

"The plants it works best at are the ones where the management is really committed to it," Fultz suggests. "Most of your other problems — your absenteeism, your poor quality rankings and that stuff — just disappears with a good EI program."

The magic of it, in Fultz's eyes, is that "you make the people feel important — you let them know how they're performing and that their ideas count for something."

Sherrick says he stresses immediate feedback to the workers, particularly when they've done well. "We had a day last week when we hit 2,508 in one day. We were all out there at the end of the day while the guys were getting ready to leave telling them how good they'd done."

As auto industry facilities go, Northville has tried some radical measures. Since the plant was reopened, for instance, there have been no time clocks for hourly workers.

The plant was also among the first to implement an "ability rate progression" system that rewards employees monetarily for learning additional job skills.

The Northville facility has only a single classification for hourly employees, with all expected to be able to perform every job in the plant. As they acquire the skills to do so at established productivity rates, workers climb a ladder of five pay levels (from $9.64 to $9.98 per hour).

With four major work areas in the plant, the 60 workers are divided into four teams, each of which elects its own crew leader. Each week, employees rotate tasks within the work area and the four groups change work areas once a month.

Fifteen months after the program was launched, better than 80 percent of the hourly staff has reached the fifth level on the scale.

Given the performance, Fultz is pushing to see additional work assigned at the plant. "I think this (past two years) has been a test, and we've passed. I don't think the company thought we could do it, but we have and it's up to them now to bring in the work they promised us."

Sherrick says he thinks the plant's "fantastic performance" will be enough to ensure its survival. "We've attained the productivity, now we need the volume."

Management programs reflected in bottom line

some as relinquishing prerogatives."

Leibel sees task forces as a means of countering this resistance. Task forces comprised of employees from all levels gather information and recommend solutions to organizational problems — but top management retains the right to approve recommendations before they are implemented.

"It is important that they (task forces) not make decisions," said Leibel. "Otherwise, management senses a loss of power and may try to sabotage their efforts."

Quality Circles in contrast "are empowered to make decisions, not just suggestions, in operational problem areas," states Kregoski.

He sees managers willing to change when they become aware that "Quality Circles, when properly installed, have demonstrated success in improving bottom-line performance in real and measurable ways."

The Quality Circle approach, said Kregoski, holds "the almost magical promise of rekindling the work ethic, increasing employee motivation, reducing absenteeism, improving organizational communication and instilling company commitment."

Kregoski emphasized, however, that changes cannot be forced. "To be real, they must be voluntary," he said.

Through a three-day "Commitment for Excellence" program that utilizes simulation computer games and other techniques, Kregoski said most managers are willing to change their styles. "Managers want to do what works," he said.

Another factor in determining the effectiveness of participatory decision-making is the composition of the groups.

When problem-solving groups are initiated without training, they often degenerate into gripe sessions with unstructured discussions.

One of the biggest changes in training, according to both Kregoski and Leibel, is that employees are being taught some of the tools of management, including models to identify, analyze and solve problems.

Additionally, they learn presentation, or "selling," techniques which increase the probability that their ideas will be carried out. The end result is that employee groups have increased willingness and motivation to develop solutions to problems.

"The expert in any particular job is most often the person who does the job," said Leibel. "Employees have a higher interest in solutions because they have been part of the process."

Kregoski said the use of Quality Circles is the fastest growing organizational tool of the decade. "It makes more sense to have the organization's problems the responsibility of 100 percent of the organization," he explained.

Some, like futurist John Naisbitt in "Megatrends," see employee involvement as the promise of the information age. Critics, on the other hand, say it is just another trend that will pass with the current economic crisis.

A general consensus might be that participatory management is a promising but fragile innovation in the corporate world.

Home show aids do-it-yourself crowd

Homeowners with an eye on do-it-yourself spring improvements can gather ideas, materials and inspiration this weekend at the second annual Plymouth Lumber & Hardware Home Show April 13-15.

Sponsored by Howard Oldford, owner also of Northville Lumber and Hartland Lumber & Hardware, the show boasts factory displays and demonstrations in a festive atmosphere. Major attractions this year include a hot tub displayed in the center of the store and an auction of building supplies and materials Saturday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Oldford started the show last year, citing a need to bring the same sort of displays and demonstrations featured at the annual Home and Garden Show at Cobo Hall to an area more accessible to the outer tier of suburbs.

Plymouth Lumber is the largest of his four stores and has the largest parking area, so was chosen as the location. "What I'd really like to do is rotate the location between the stores," Oldford explained, "but we really need the large parking lot and the only place we have it is in Plymouth."

The show features more than 40 displays and several clinics offering creative advice and how-to hints. Participating manufacturers include Armstrong Ceilings, Abitibi, Georgia-Pacific, Owens Corning, Behr Stain, Andersen Windows, Star Pak Solar Systems, Weyerhaeuser and many others.

Oldford offers a "bargain area" of discontinued merchandise for sale at up to 60 percent off. Refreshments are available and family activities include free ballroom for children and door prizes.

There will also be a drawing for a trip for two to Toronto. Plymouth Lumber & Hardware is at 1050 Ann Arbor Road, between Sheldon and Harvey (next to Holly's by Golly restaurant) in Plymouth.

Siegel named to Blue Cross/Blue Shield council

Northville resident Nathan Siegel, a retired risk management consultant, has been named to a new Senior Advisory Council to Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Michigan (BCBSM).

The state's largest health insurer announced formation of the council April 4. It is made up of "leading spokespersons for the state's older adult community" and aims to address health care and other related concerns of senior citizens.

"The purpose of the Senior Advisory Council is to strengthen two-way communication in a spirit of cooperation between Michigan's community of older adults and BCBSM," said William Stevenson, the company's executive vice president for external affairs.

Chairperson of the new group is Sister Augusta Stratz of Traverse City, a member of the executive board for the regional Area Agency on Aging organization in northwest Michigan. In addition to Stratz and Siegel there are 11 other members of the council.

Sister Augusta said the council has held a series of organizational meetings and is already providing a forum for the exchange of ideas.

"We'll identify issues and problems in the health care delivery system which affect older adults and work with BCBSM to seek solutions," she said. "We'll also address the unique needs of women and minorities."

"Blue Cross and Blue Shield of Michigan is committed to establishing a more effective way to discuss a variety of issues including regulatory and financial problems with leaders of the older adult community," Stevenson said.

The corporation will also inform the council of policies and legislative efforts that relate to older adults.

Other charter members of the council include: Kay Beard of Inkster, a member of the Wayne County Board of Commissioners; Richard Davis of Port Huron, member of the Michigan Senior Advocates Council; Agnes Dobronski of Dearborn, executive director of the Retirement Coordinating Council; Janet Good of Farmington Hills, national board member of the Older Women's League and Affirmative Action Officer for the Michigan Employment Security Commission.

Teachers honor Mary Freydl as Woman of Distinction

By MICHELE McELMURRY

When the time comes for Mary Freydl to look back upon her teaching career in Northville, the 1983-84 school year surely will stand out as among her most memorable.

While most of her time is spent in the classroom teaching English, video production and forensics, this year the Cooke Junior High School teacher also has been involved in a host of activities outside the regular school day.

As a member of the district's middle school planning council, Freydl has been working with other staff on designing curriculum for the district's middle school implementation in 1985. In addition to her in-district involvement, she also serves on the executive board of the Michigan Association of Speech Communication — representing all junior high and middle schools in the state.

Her involvement in — as well as out of — the classroom has not gone unnoticed. This year, Delta Kappa Gamma named Freydl as its "Woman of Distinction."

While the honor by her peers certainly is a highlight in her more than 10-year teaching career, Freydl notes that the "final reward is the assessment by your students."

"If I didn't have the respect of my students," she says, "none of this would mean much."

However, Freydl hardly has to worry about making the grade with her seventh, eighth and ninth graders. In the last few years she has coached her forensics teams to local and district-wide championships, has sprouted more than a fair crop of award-winning writers and this year has undertaken three sections of video production.

While she admits she's always been partial to teaching English — particularly Concepts English (an advanced class for ninth graders) — this year's video production class has offered new challenges to its teacher as well as her students.

With video equipment donated by the Northville Mothers' Club, Freydl notes the class has become among the most popular offerings for junior high students.

When she isn't coaching forensics or conducting the annual school spelling bee, Freydl most likely can be found trailing behind her video students, untangling the equipment cords during a class taping.

With a master's degree in public address and a minor in radio and television, Freydl says she jumped at the opportunity to teach video production.

Citing the course as an example, she says teaching at the junior high level has provided her with "more of a chance to innovate courses."

Noting that she "started out to teach rhetoric at the college level," Freydl says she has found her niche with her junior high students — particularly the ninth graders.

"You really have to like this age of student," she says. "You have to be able to deal with them where they are."

"These students are at a tremendous transition stage in their lives," she points out. "You have to be willing to repeat and you have to learn what language level they're at."

Freydl notes that eight years of junior high teaching have helped her gain an understanding of her students.

While the classroom experience has been invaluable, Freydl says her involvement with planning the middle school curriculum has given her new insight into teaching at the junior-high level.

"We are seeing a few trends such as more team planning and teachers working together to coordinate materials," she notes.

As an example of team planning, she says that a student assigned to do a science report might be able to incorporate that project as part of his or her English work as well. Other examples of staff coordination might be arranging tests and due dates on different days to alleviate overburdening students.

In addition to her in-district curriculum planning, Freydl also is working on a literacy consortium with other members of three state teacher organizations to improve literacy instruction for Michigan students.

An executive board member of the Michigan Association of Speech Communication, Freydl is working with board members from the Michigan Council of Teachers of English and the Michigan Reading Association to jointly address literacy issues in the state.

She notes that the consortium, which held its first meeting in January, has developed a position statement on literacy and developed preliminary position statements related to five current topics of literacy including high school graduation requirements, K-12 and college literacy curricula, literacy testing and assessment, certification requirements for teachers and professional growth and development.

Though teaching has been a way of life for Mary Freydl for more than a decade, she notes that in many ways it almost is a second career.

She says that after she and her husband Charles were married, she was a "full-time mother" while their three sons were young.

She notes that when their youngest son Scott was two, she began attending evening classes at Schoolcraft.

"When Scott was in kindergarten, I was a full-time student at U-M," she says, adding that Charles took over the childcare duties after Scott got home from school.

After two-and-half years, Freydl received her bachelor's degree in speech and English with a minor in social studies from University of Michigan's Department of Education.

A year and half later she earned a master's in public address with a minor in radio and television. She also was inducted into Phi Beta Kappa.

Freydl credits a supportive family for helping her achieve her teaching success.

Noting that her career always has been a "family affair," she recalls that Charles and the three boys were on hand when she set-up her first classroom at Howell High School in 1971.

Though she admits that raising three small boys and being a full-time college student had its moments, Freydl says she feels it was a positive experience for the whole family.

"One thing they learned is that nothing is a gift," she notes. "You have to work hard."

Garden branches assist in beautification

By JEAN DAY

While Northville's two branches of the Woman's National Farm and Garden Association do hold programs on such topics as the fine points of flower arranging and design, as might be expected of garden clubs, both the Northville Branch and the Country Girls Branch can take pride in the reputation they have earned for their civic projects in our community.

Members of both groups have been on their knees in seasons past planting many of the bulbs in city and township garden beds — and then later have watered and weeded those beds.

In addition, the women have become expert fundraisers with projects like the Northville Branch annual greens mart and the Country Girls fashion show.

In addition to funding scholarships, the Northville Branch — which has been active in the community since 1936 — has made a major donation of $2,000 to the upcoming projection of beautifying the boulevard on South Main.

Divorce help series slated

A series of group sessions designed to help people cope with divorce is being offered by the Third Judicial Circuit of Michigan, Friend of the Court, Family Counseling and Mediation Division.

The sessions are for those exploring divorce, in the divorce process or who have already divorced.

Jack Bradford, a staff member of the Family Counseling and Mediation Division, is leading a current series of educational group meetings at Newburgh United Methodist Church, 36500 Ann Arbor Trail, Livonia, between Wayne and Newburgh roads.

The meetings are being held from 7:30-9 p.m. Wednesday evenings. They began April 4.

Upcoming discussions will focus on the following: April 11, "Dealing with Attorneys and the Court System (an attorney will be present); April 18, "Helping Your Children Cope"; and April 25, "Developing New Social and Interpersonal Relationships."

Another series will be held beginning May 2 at First United Methodist Church, corner of Oak and Biddle in Wyandotte.

The meetings under the direction of George Schrauder, a staff member of the Family Counseling and Mediation Division, will be held from 7:30-9 p.m. Wednesdays. First meeting on May 2 will deal with "Coping with Personal and Emotional Turmoil." The following programs will cover the same topics as the April series.

Cost is $3 a night or $10 for the series. Anyone is welcome even if unable to pay. For additional information call 224-5266.

Beautification plans approved at the April 2 meeting of Northville City Council include plantings, a sprinkler system and a flagpole on the island opposite the V.F.W. The V.F.W. and its auxiliary also are contributing to the beautification program by providing the flagpole and landscaping for that island.

Last month, at the invitation of the Northville Branch, the local garden branches held a joint meeting at First Presbyterian Church. It was a "first" of its kind, reports Northville Branch president Molly Manley, explaining that each branch decorated five tables to be critiqued by Vera Stiller, national chairman of the flower show schools of the WNFGA.

The program arranged by Olga James included demonstrations of arrangements and an explanation of judging standards.

Smocking advocates learn new stitches

Noting that new members are most welcome, Nancy Smith reports that more than 50 attended the last meeting of the newly formed Southeastern Michigan Smocking Chapter, which now has some 30 members. Next meeting from 10 a.m. to noon this Thursday in the Novi Library, on Ten Mile near Taft, will feature an Easter Egg class conducted by Donna Gardella.

Next month, on May 17, Sharon Campbell will demonstrate bishop smocking on a dress (round yoke style), from start to finish.

'Victorian Lady' benefit tickets still available

This Thursday's fashion show, "A Day in the Life of a Victorian Lady," is a first-time fundraising venture of the Friends of Northville Library. Beginning at 2 p.m. at the Marquis Theater, it will feature local women modeling Victorian fashions by antique clothing dealer Sue Neller of Okemos.

Sponsors have arranged tea and sweets, catered by Helen Hopping, to follow the show. It's a full afternoon for $6.50. Unlike dinners, dances and similar fundraisers where advance reservations are made, the Friends will be selling tickets the day of the show and have no way of knowing whether they will be filling the theater — and aiding the library. Chairperson Val Cook, therefore, is anxious to have anyone in the community with the time free Thursday know that "last minute ticket purchases will be appreciated."

Joint venture

Weaver plans health camp

"A vacation that can open the door to a whole new lifestyle" is the way Dr. Arthur Weaver, professor of surgery at Wayne State University and director of Better Living seminars, a non-profit, health-related organization, describes the seminar's annual health camp to be held May 20-27 at Ranch AuSable in Grayling, Michigan.

The longtime Northville Township resident explains that all instructors for the spring health camp have volunteered their services to keep costs at a minimum for the week.

Lodging, meals, use of recreational facilities and all health educational programs are included in the $275 a week per person cost, or the $470 husband and wife rate. There also are special group and senior citizen rates.

"This camp with private lake and 900 acres of woodland is my favorite spot in the U.S. I always enjoy seeing the beaver dam, horses, deer and many pet animals," Dr. Weaver says.

Recreational activities include canoeing, horseback riding, exercise classes, bird watching, ceramics.

She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Stephens of 46778 Grasmere Road. The bridegroom is the grandson of Harold Fankell of Mason City, Iowa.

Father John Buddy of St. John's Seminary officiated at the 6 p.m. service December 30.

The bridal gown was satin with a net overlay. Its floral embroidered bodice over a hooped skirt was adorned with pearls and sequins. The bride carried a cascade arrangement of fuji mums, holiday greens and silver balls.

Patricia Johnson was her sister's matron of honor. She wore a gown of gray lace over silver satin and carried a smaller version of the bridal bouquet.

Museum expert tells ways to identify antique jewelry

How can you learn more about the age of a hair locket inherited from a great-aunt or the Celtic cloak pin picked up at an antique shop?

Mary MacDonald of the Dearborn Historical Museum staff suggests that one good way is to study paintings from the period in which you think the jewelry was made.

She adds that such Victorian jewelry is a collectable item.

"Victorian jewelry is a good investment — a lot of the early pieces were not marked but jewelers usually worked in gold or silver and there are still a lot of fine Victorian pieces around," the guest speaker informed members of the Northville Base Line Questers antiques study group meeting recently at the home of Lynn Paquette.

Among the Victorian collectables to look for are elongated pins, Scottish agate jewelry, portrait pins, shell cameos, serpent jewelry.

"The serpent was a popular design for Victorian wedding rings," she explained, "because the serpent is the symbol of eternity.

"If you find a pair of gold bracelets," she advised the antiques collectors, "do buy both because they originally usually came by the set and are more valuable that way today."

While many gold pieces were not marked, she said, jewelers who created the intricate pieces of Victorian jewelry worked mainly with gold. "If you are buying from an antique dealer," she advised, "get him to put the contents in writing."

A most sought-after ring from this period is the "Regard" ring, she said, explaining it is a gold band with six stones — ruby, emerald, garnet, amethyst, ruby and diamond — whose first letters spell out regard. It was the Victorian equivalent of the engagement ring.

The Scottish jewelry, in addition to Celtic pins, includes round pins using the green, brown and earth colored agates. Often, the speaker noted, this jewelry used the design of the thistle and was worked in silver.

Hair was finely braided and woven to create hair jewelry in the early Victorian period. Sometimes such pieces were "memorial" jewelry with hair of a loved one. If trying to date a hair pin, locket or ring, look at pictures about 1830, the Questers were advised.

This also is the period of the gold bracelets and gold cameo brooches. Carved ivory was popular in the 1860s, along with jet jewelry.

Victorians, the speaker said, also liked turquoise jewelry with sky-blue stones coming from Persia as opposed to the green of American western jewelry. She warned that this stone is "very soft and easy to crack."

"Kicking off the 20th century," the speaker illustrated with slide pictures of the period, "women were wearing tiaras, earrings, as many as three necklaces."

A very special early jewelry was pinchbeck, composed of four parts copper to one part zinc in a secret formula devised by the maker, Christopher Pinchbeck, originally a clockmaker. His secret died with him in 1732.

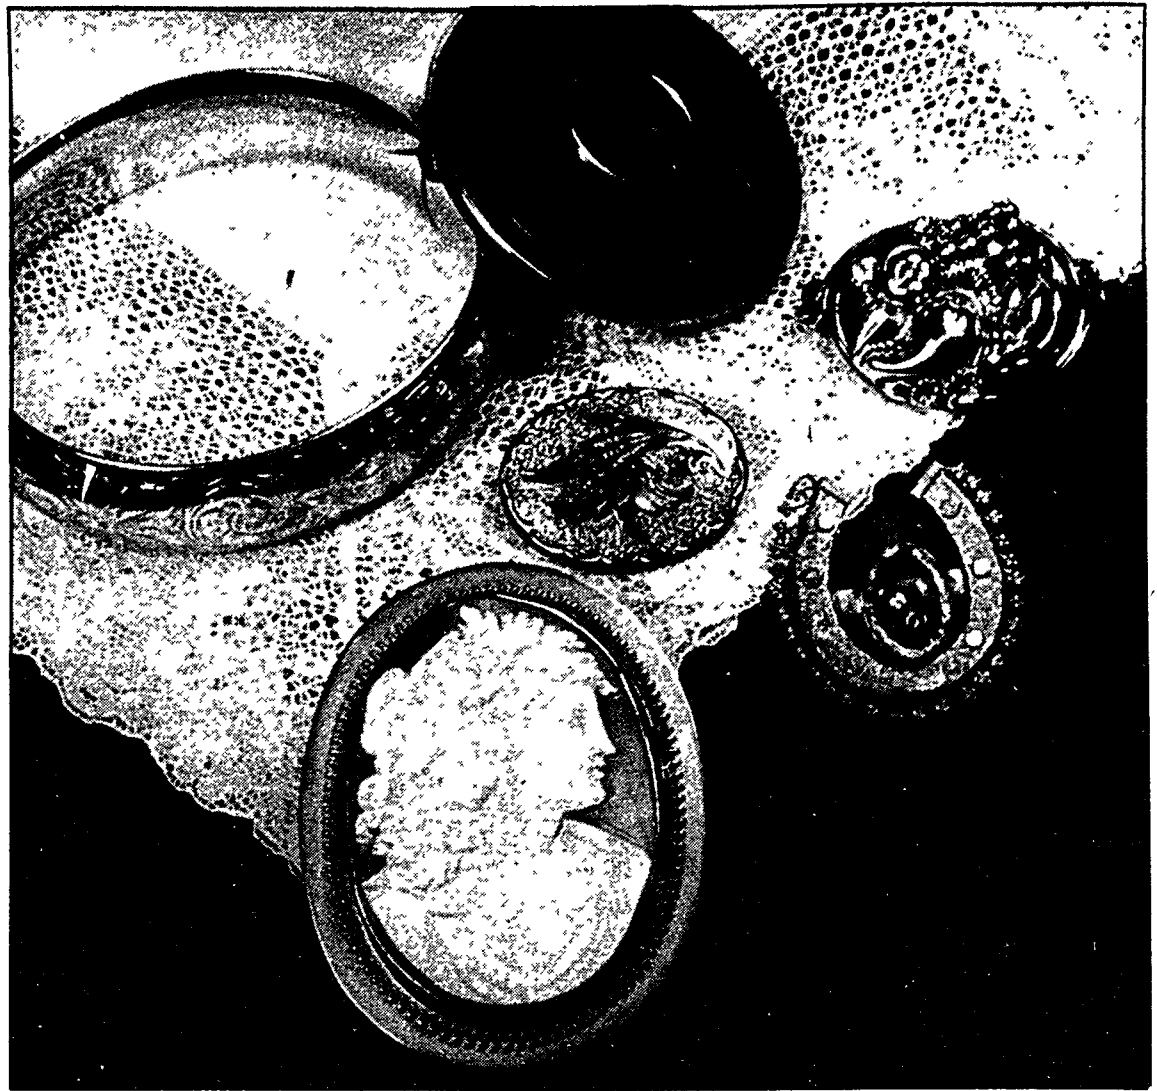

To find a piece today is a rarity, the speaker said.

A more reasonable collectable is marquisite — cut steel stones set in silver.

Victorians, according to the speaker, also favored opals. However, the opals carried with them a superstition. They were unlucky for the wearer unless they were a birthstone (October.)

Ms. MacDonald warned that opals are extremely delicate, expanding and contracting with the weather. That's why, she explained, so many fall out of their settings.

She also told the Questers not to keep their fine jewelry in cotton. Store it separately, if possible, in original tissue paper, she advised.

Breakfast planners

The Women's Association of First Presbyterian Church will host its annual White Breakfast Wednesday, April 18, in the church fellowship hall. Guest speaker, Dr. Norman Clothier, will bring the Easter message alive through his chalk artistry. A minister and graduate of University of Michigan, Dr. Clothier also is an author and frequent speaker at youth camps and retreats. The annual event will begin with a communion service at 9 a.m. in the sanctuary followed by breakfast in the fellowship hall. Reservations are required for the breakfast and should be made no later than April 13 with the church office, 349-0911. Among those planning the event are from left Diane Williamson, Dr. Lawrence Chamberlain, Dr. Jo Taliaferro and Lois Housman.

Carol Spear plans May ceremony

Former Northville residents Raymond and Freida Spear of Coventry, Rhode Island, announce the engagement of their daughter Carol Lynn of Omaha, Nebraska, to Kim Jay Crawford.

He is the son of Gladys Crawford and J.W. Crawford, both of Cheyenne, Wyoming.

The bride received a bachelor's degree in home economics and psychology from Albion College and attended Johns Hopkins Hospital Child Life and Training Program in Baltimore, Maryland. She currently is Child Life Coordinator at St. Joseph Hospital in Omaha.

Her fiancé received a bachelor's degree in psychology from the University of Wyoming in 1980 and is expected to receive his medical degree from Creighton Medical School in Omaha in May.

A May 19 wedding is planned at Suckau Memorial Chapel in Omaha.

Palm Sunday 'Celebration'

At both the 10 and 11:30 a.m. services this Sunday at First United Methodist Church of Northville 61 members of the youth choir will perform "Celebrate the Life," a contemporary musical employing the works of a variety of composers and dealing with the life of Christ and both past and present Christians. Pictured are members of the choir from seventh to 12th grades, including the narrators and soloists. Music director Stacey

Becker explains music will include ballads, pop, hymns and rock selections using piano, organ, synthesizers, a bass guitar, trumpets, flutes and percussion. Theme of "Celebrate the Life" focuses on the trials and triumphs of being a Christian in today's world as well as long ago. It celebrates Christ's life, other Christians' lives and "our own as followers of Christ," Becker explains. Record photo by John Galloway.

Healing lecture listed by Christian Scientists

Christian Scientist Charles W. Ferris reports he notes "the widespread yearning for a deeper, more spiritual view of things often comes when the material conditions offer no hope."

Ferris, a member of his church's Board of Lectureship, will explain at a public lecture in Plymouth his own deepening conviction that "the things of the spirit are more substantial and real to us than we may generally realize."

"This Christian view," he states in his lecture to be given at 8 p.m. April 26 at First Church of Christ, Scientist, 1100 West Ann Arbor Trail, Plymouth, "is far more than a philosophical theory — it helps us practically in solving everyday challenges, bringing healing and regeneration."

The lecturer looks to Christian healing — as recorded in Biblical gospels and as practiced by many today — as unmistakable evidence of divine power prevailing over material conditions. Christian healing, says the speaker, shows God's love for man in "a way that is natural and understandable to human thought. That's a beautiful part of Christian healing." He adds, "When it takes place, we feel, 'why, of course, that's the way it should be.'"

Commenting briefly on physicists' shifting theories of matter, Ferris takes note of the interesting current view of matter in terms of vacillating energy fields, and borrowing the Biblical name of "mind" for God, the speaker poses the question, "Reality: Matter or Mind?" as his lecture title.

After graduating from the University of Chicago and serving as a chaplain's assistant for the Armed Services, the lecturer has devoted his life to the public healing practice of Christian Science. Between lecture tours, he makes his home in Minneapolis.

The hour-long Thursday lecture is free. The speaker will be introduced by Mrs. Maxine Reisdorf.

(New offerings at the Library)

"It was a bright, cold day in April . . ." So begins the year's most frequently mentioned novel, "Nineteen Eighty-four" by George Orwell. Well, now it really is April 1984, and National Library Week as well. And, if the real 1984 is not so bad as that projected by George Orwell back in 1949, it has been suggested that perhaps the public library system in the country deserves some of the credit.

"Knowledge is real power" is the slogan of this year's National Library Week — and the public library is an important resource in providing the knowledge that gives people of all ages the power to lead more productive lives.

Last year the Northville Public Library's circulation reached an all-time high. But to continue growing, the library will need the active support of the entire community, as it strives for better funding.

The Northville Public Library is jointly supported by the city and township of Northville. It is one of 60 members of the Wayne Oakland Library Federation. As such, it offers not only its own collection of 32,000 books, but also serves as access point to the holding of other WOLF libraries, which total over three million.

In addition, the library circulates magazines, cassettes, records, books in large print, pamphlets and puppets.

A new feature of reference service at the library is the Community Referral and Information Service or CRIS, which provides up-to-date information on organizations and agencies serving the Northville community.

The Northville Public Library is preparing for an automated circulation system in the near future, which will greatly improve efficiency of service. As part of the transition to this new system, patrons will be required to show a library card in order to check out books, beginning May 1. Northville residents may apply for a card at the library by providing current identification. For anyone under 18, a parent's signature is required.

For more information about library services, call 349-3020. To paraphrase a slogan from "Nineteen eighty-four," "Ignorance is NOT bliss!"

Joanne Gearns, husband Bill receive ovation as he is named outstanding city fire fighter

Inaugural event held Sunday

V.F.W. honors fire fighters, police

Six local police officers and fire fighters were honored Sunday by Northville Post No. 4012 Veterans of Foreign Wars as it inaugurated a new community service program "to make the community aware of the protection we have."

More than 100 post and auxiliary members and guests attended the Sunday afternoon dinner dance program at which plaques were presented to the honorees nominated by their superior officers.

Recipient of the first award, William Gearns, received a standing ovation from those attending as James M. Allen, Northville City Fire Department chief, announced he was the city fire fighters' "unanimous choice" and noted his 15 years of service.

"You are missed," he told Gearns who had been hospitalized with cancer until last week Wednesday and who attended the presentation on a stretcher after arriving by ambulance. He was accompanied by his family. His wife Joanne was presented with a corsage. James S. Labron was named honoree for the Northville Post of the Michigan State Police and was introduced by Lieutenant William Tomczyk, post commander, who cited his service at the post since 1977.

Lieutenant Louis Westfall received the honor of being the city's law officer of the year. Noting his 21 years of service, Chief Rodney A. Cannon said, "We are proud of him."

Sergeant Gary Batzloff received the township police award from Chief Kenneth D. Hardesty who noted his work "behind the lines as administrator of the road patrol."

A dual award was presented to Captain Vernon Belloli and Gerhart Obrikat of the Northville Township Fire Department. Chief Robert H. Toms explained he had asked the VFW if the dual nomination could be made as both men had expended special effort and were responsible for taking 400 children to the Shrine circus.

Post Commander James Hornshaw presented the plaques to the honorees and also cited a post member, Bob Schmidt, for his work as community services officer.

It was noted that the Cross of Malta emblem on the plaques is an insignia of courage that dates back to the Crusades.

Attending the program and offering congratulations were State VFW Commander Irving Spencer and Fourth District Commander LeRoy Conroy.

Other honor guests were Mayor and Mrs. Paul Vernon representing the City of Northville, Northville Township Supervisor John MacDonald, State Senator R. Robert Geake and State Representative and Mrs. Gerald H. Law.

Vernon said he was happy to "publicly declare how happy we are with truly dedicated professionals." MacDonald said he "echoed" Vernon's statement and noted the "great working relationship of the city and township departments and the state police post."

Presiding at the program was Lawrence McArthur, chaplain of the post.

TAX TIPS

LEE E. HOLLAND, C.P.A.

FAST WRITE-OFFS

If you're looking for a quick and attractive way to defer taxes in your business, the current tax law gives you that opportunity under the Accelerated Cost Recovery System (ACRS). This relates to depreciation of plant and equipment.

For example, under the ACRS system now in effect, you can deduct the cost of business cars over three years: 25 percent the first year, 38 percent the second year, and 37 percent the third year. In depreciating equipment, you can deduct your costs over a five-year period. For buildings the period is three times as long: you can deduct your costs over a 15-year span. In each case you have the option to use even longer periods in which to spread your write-offs, but this may not be to your advantage. You'll be paying more taxes than need be in the early years. In other words, you'll be deferring the write-offs rather than the taxes.

For a review of how you can use the ACRS system in your business and take advantage of other tax-saving opportunities under the new tax law, why not call us for an appointment?

The Northville Record

Vogt, Knoth pace team

Strong early-season showings by hurdler Mark Knoth and sprinter Joel Vogt weren't enough to offset South Lyon's sheer force of numbers in a tri-meet in the Lions' den last Thursday.

South Lyon tallied 100½ points to Northville's 61½ and Livonia Clarenceville's 13. While South Lyon didn't sport a good number of really outstanding athletes, the Lions were able to find an able body for events where Northville is painfully thin.

Still, Knoth turned in a double win with solid times of 41.7 in the 330 lows and 15.8 in the 120 highs. Knoth managed Northville's only point in high jump with a 5'6" leap — not a bad jump, considering the ugly weather conditions.

Vogt's first-place 23.7 clocking in the 220 held up as Northville's best performance of the meet — and the junior sprinter was held up by strong winds in the event.

But Northville could only take one more first in individual events — that was John Klokenga's 55.3 in the quarter-mile. Klokenga anchored a winning mile relay team with Jim Riney, Irven Meadows and Tom Broderick taking the first three legs. The foursome clocked a 3:52.7 in the event.

Northville also took home a first in the new two-mile relay, with Meadows, Brett Netke, Klokenga and Riney running the event in 8:57.7. But Mustang Coach Brian Murphy thinks Northville's school record of 8:21.1 is within reach of this year's squad.

"I'll be disappointed if we don't break that mark," Murphy said.

Northville took seconds in the 440 and 800 relays with unexceptional times.

In field event competition, Vogt managed a second-place leap of 17'4½", well below his personal best. "I don't understand it," Murphy said.

"They have their sprints and their long jump runways running right into the wind." That might explain why Vogt's 11.2 in the 100 yard dash managed to place second (it should be pointed out Vogt's starting blocks slipped).

Vogt, Northville's top sprinter, should be able to trim his sprint times considerably this season, as Murphy will be working with the junior on his starting technique and Vogt, he notes, is a good learner.

Rich Smith, no bulky sort, turned in a 92'10" discus toss, giving the Mustangs an unexpected second. Northville's only other second was provided by Rich Naszradi in the two-mile. Naszradi clocked a 10:55.8.

Notably absent from the mile and two-mile was Jim Riney, whom Murphy needed to boost Northville's chances of winning the longer relay events. Riney ran the 880, an unfamiliar event for the senior distance specialist, and failed to place.

"Jim's a real skinny kid, and when he runs into a hard wind like we had, it just stops him." As a result, Northville's only points in the 880 on up were Naszradi's second in the two mile and his 5:04.0 third place in the mile.

Also scoring for Northville were Broderick, third in the pole vault; Jeff Knurek, tied for fourth in the pole vault; John Briningstool, fourth in the 330 lows; Tim Millen, fourth in the 120 highs; and sophomore Matt Winquist, fourth in the two-mile.

Choosing All-Area teams can be hazardous to health

By B.J. MARTIN

One duty I wasn't told about when I took the job here is that I would have to help select All-Area teams in football, basketball, volleyball, baseball and softball. When I was working for another newspaper, this was easy. I picked 'em all, because I covered sports news from about 10 schools.

But here at The Record, there's a new process. At the end of every season I have to bring pencil, paper, stats and boxing gloves to converse with my brother sportswriters from the Sliger-Livingston chain.

You see, there are four newspapers represented at these meetings: The Northville Record, the Novi-Walled Lake News, the Milford Times and the South Lyon Herald. And there are eight schools: Northville, Novi, Walled Lake Central, Walled Lake Western, South Lyon, Whitmore Lake, Milford and Lakeland.

The selection duties are split among Bob Smith, sports editor of the Herald, Dic Doumanian, sports editor of the Times, and myself. I write for the Novi-Walled Lake News as well as the Record.

In our discussions of All-Area picks, Mr. Smith and Mr. Doumanian wield considerable influence because of their stature as sports buffs and writers, but mostly because of their size. Bob goes about 6'2" and Dic about 6'6". I go 5'10" on a good day.

Sports In Perspective

You see, Bob and Dic like to place as many of their boys and girls on All-Area teams as they can so that they are well-loved in their respective communities. Needless to say, this works at odds with my similar desire.

One of the things I have going for me is that both Bob and Dic really do want to pick the best athletes each time around. The problem is that it's hard to evaluate the squads because they don't always meet head-to-head. And there's where the boxing gloves come in. Here's a transcript from one of our meetings, held at Getzie's Pub due to its improved lighting (I had coffee).

DIC: Well guys, this should be a pretty fast meeting. I figure there's only a couple spots open for your players — honorable mention, of course.

ME: Funny — I was about to say the same thing.

BOB: Here we go again.

DIC: You're not going to pull that "Western Lakes is a better conference stuff again," are you?

ME: Are you kidding? You, Bob and I could suit up against anybody in the KVC and whip their butts. Except Novi. BOB (reviewing reams of statistics printouts): Let's see, South Lyon had Novi by 10 last time they met, didn't they?

ME: Oh sure, with Novi's entire starting lineup down with the flu the night after the school prom.

BOB: So we're supposed to be penalized for being healthy?

DIC: Boys, boys, there's no reason to argue like this — honorable mention picks aren't worth it.

ME: Yeah? What have you got?

DIC: Well, there's a couple of guys from Milford who had a big night against Saline who beat Clarkston who beat Fowlerville who beat Petoskey who beat Benton Harbor who beat Inkster who beat Northville. I think that speaks for itself.

BOB: And we beat Milford.

ME: Are you two nuts? Novi's the only school in the KVC that has the nerve to even schedule WLAA teams!

WAITRESS: I'm sorry boys, but if you don't quiet down, we're going to throw you jocks right out of here pronto. Care for another (unintelligible)?

Dogs, Dozen win spike titles

Two Northville Recreation volleyball championships were settled last Wednesday, and two teams who've been on the scene a long time took home first place awards.

In "A" League competition, the Dirty Dozen claimed the championship for the sixth time since joining the circuit in 1977. The Dozen (actually there were nine this year, but who ever heard of the Dirty Nine?) devastated runner-up O'Sheehan's in three straight games of a best-of-five series in the Wednesday night final.

Here are the Dirty Dozen: Manager Mark Finley, Dave Wert, Tom Williams, Bill Nelson, Sally Conklin, Sue Booth, Molly Thornton, Cindy Scovell and Susan Roelofs.

In the "B" League, the Dogs topped the Lucky Spikes and needed all five games to do it. The Dogs won the first and third games and the Spikes the second and fourth. After battling to a 15-all tie in the fifth game, the two squads tied for a two-point advantage in a tie-breaker, with the Dogs at last prevailing 11-9.

It was the Dogs' first title ever. Managed by Liz Embree, the Dogs include: Jamie Flora, Laura Kaminski, Cayte and Charlie Stillec, Bruce and Connie Mendenhall and Jackie and Jeff Parko.

Rains cancel Friday's games

Last Friday's damp, cold weather canceled Northville's opening baseball, softball and tennis contests. The tennis and baseball squads were to host Brighton from the Kensington Valley Conference, and the softball team was to have opened its season against Ypsilanti.

The softball and baseball games have been rescheduled for next Tuesday at 4 p.m., and the tennis team will make up its match on May 10.

The Northville varsity baseball team will travel to Farmington at 4 p.m. today for the Mustangs' Western Lakes Activities Association opener, then to Canton at 4 p.m. Friday. Northville will host Livonia Stevenson Monday at 4 p.m.

The Mustang softball team plays host to Farmington today and Canton Friday, both games at 4 p.m., then the squad goes to Livonia Stevenson on Monday.

CONTAINER GARDENING BASICS

Container gardening is at an all-time high in popularity, and for good reason. The tremendous versatility of containers has made them a permanent part of most people's gardens. Years ago, the only plants one saw regularly in containers were houseplants, and a geranium here and there. Today, all kinds of plants—annuals, perennials, vines, vegetables, herbs, fruit trees, and exotic specimen plants—are being grown successfully in containers. The following basic information will help you get started in the right direction. For the complete story on growing all types of plants, consult the ORTHO book Gardening in Containers.

CONTAINER SOIL

Plants growing in containers demand closer attention than the same plants growing in a flower border or a vegetable patch. When you constrict the root zone in a container, you must compensate for the smaller root area by watering and feeding the plant more frequently. Here are some simple tips that can help make the difference between a healthy and a sick plant, and between an aggravated and a satisfied gardener.

Keep it simple. Some gardeners believe that every type of plant requires a special soil mix and like to work out complicated mixes of five or six ingredients. They just won't accept the fact that a simple combination of peat moss and vermiculite, or perlite, or fine sand, can be used with almost every type of plant, from cacti to tropicals, with only some modification of watering routines according to the needs of the individual plant.

This doesn't mean that you shouldn't tamper with the mix you buy. If the mix is so lightweight that the container will tip over in a slight wind, by all means add sand. Some gardeners add garden topsoil to the mix when planting in containers. But when you add soil you lose all the advantages of a sterilized mix. For example, if you are growing container tomatoes in a soilless mix to avoid soil-borne tomato diseases, it would hardly pay to add garden soil—that would invite the same diseases you are trying to stave off.

Use a good soil mix. Good garden soil does not necessarily make good container soil. Soil for containers must have these characteristics: fast drainage of water; a reservoir of water in the soil after drainage; and plenty of air in the soil after drainage. For more information about soil mixes, and a recipe for mixing your own, see the box on "Container Soil."

Don't overfill the container. An 8-inch pot should have about 2 inches of space at the top to hold water. It's much more difficult to do a good job of watering if you fill the pot so full with soil that there's no room for water to sit before soaking through and thoroughly wetting the container soil.

A beautiful and unusual combination of scarlet nicotiana, pink fibrous begonias, and gray Helichrysum petiolatum is the focal point of this lawnside terrace.

FERTILIZING

Don't overlook the need for regular applications of a complete fertilizer, such as ORTHO-GRO Liquid Plant Food 12-6-6 or ORTHO Fish Emulsion Fertilizer 5-1-1, during the growing season, from early spring through early fall. Nutrients are leached from the soil with every watering, so it's easy for container-grown plants to become underfed much faster than similar plants in the garden.

Although most fertilizer labels recommend monthly feedings, some container gardeners prefer to apply a weak nutrient solution with every other irrigation. When watering plants with a nutrient solution in this manner, a safe concentration would be $\frac{1}{5}$ the amount called for on the label for a monthly application. If the label calls for 1 tablespoon to a gallon of water, make the dilution 1 tablespoon to 5 gallons of water.

WATERING

Watering a large number of container plants can be a bit of a chore—especially at the height of a dry summer—but it is a chore most container gardeners accept willingly. Plants in containers must be watered regularly. Each watering must be thorough, so that the excess runs out the drain hole, not just a quick sprinkling that wets only the top couple of inches. One of the greatest values of the synthetic soil mixes is that they can't be waterlogged if the container drains properly.

Don't water by the calendar. A plant that needs daily water during a stretch of warm sunny days can go on an every-other-day schedule in cloudy weather.

Many plants advertise their need for water with a dramatic wilting that is startling the first time you see it. With many plants—impatiens, coleus, strawberries, tomatoes—the speedy recovery after watering is equally dramatic.

When you make your own container soil, it's important to mix the ingredients completely.

CONTAINER SOIL

One of the questions most frequently asked by people new to container gardening is, Do I need a special soil mix to fill the containers? If you take the word of most commercial growers of container plants, the answer is yes. If you take the word of the hundreds of thousands of home gardeners who have bought and used a container mix, again the answer is yes. Garden stores everywhere sell special container mixes under a variety of trade names—Redi-Earth, Jiffy Mix, Metro Mix, Super Soil, Pro-Mix, and many others.

The mixes are referred to as "soiless mixes" or "synthetic soils." The word synthetic should not be understood to mean artificial. The ingredients are as natural as Mother Nature could make them.

The organic fraction of the mix may be peat moss, redwood sawdust, shavings, hardwood bark, fir bark, pine bark, or a combination of any two.

The mineral fraction may be vermiculite, perlite, pumice, builders sand or granite sand, or a combination of two or three of them. The most commonly used minerals are vermiculite, perlite, and sand.

IF YOU WANT TO MAKE YOUR OWN CONTAINER MIX

If you need only a few cubic feet of container soil, a commercial mix is your best bet. If you need more soil than that, however, you can blend these components to make 1 cubic yard of mix.

14 cubic feet of peat moss, nitrogen-stabilized fir bark, or pine bark 14 cubic feet of vermiculite or perlite or

9 cubic feet of sand
18 cubic feet of ground bark

or

14 cubic feet of peat moss
7 cubic feet of vermiculite
7 cubic feet of perlite

Dump the 2 or 3 ingredients in a pile and mix them roughly. Dampen the mix as you go. It's much easier to wet dry peat moss with warm water than with cold.

Spread these fertilizer elements over the rough mix:

5 pounds of ground limestone
5 pounds of 5-10-10 fertilizer

Using a scoop shovel, mix the ingredients into a cone-shaped pile, letting each shovelful dribble down the cone. To make sure that the soil is thoroughly mixed, rebuild the cone 3 to 5 times.

If the soil is not to be used soon after mixing, store it in plastic bags or plastic garbage cans.

If you need only a small quantity of soil mix, but still want to mix it yourself, a good approximation would be to substitute half-gallons for cubic feet and ounces for pounds in the formulas given above.

Impatiens, succulents, ageratum, and a rhododendron in full bloom transform this small patio into a lush garden. All plants are in containers.

FLOWERS IN CONTAINERS

There need never be a dull season when you have a few pots of colorful flowers clustered around the front door or patio, or lining a walkway. Most flowering plants grow so well in containers that they almost seem made for each other.

Annuals in particular are popular with container gardeners; their fast and easy growth, glamorous display of color, and low cost make them an obvious choice. Although it's true that annuals are usually spring- and summer-flowering plants, it's easy to extend color into other seasons by planting them along with bulbs, perennials, and other flowering plants available at the nursery. Spring pots of primroses and pansies can give way to summer-flowering marigolds and impatiens, and to golden chrysanthemums in the fall.

The first thing to do is to purchase your containers: wooden boxes, classic red clay pots, half-barrels, or an assortment of plastic containers.

To minimize visual confusion, it's best to limit the number of different types of containers you buy, and to keep the containers more or less the same size.

Experienced gardeners favor larger containers. The bigger they are, the more soil they will hold, which means more root space for the plants, less frequent watering for the gardener, and more chance to experiment with different combinations of flowering plants.

If you decide on clay pots, be sure to hose them down a couple of times to let some water soak in. Clay is very porous and will rob newly planted annuals of their first watering if not first allowed to absorb some water of their own. Cover the drainage holes, but don't completely block them, with broken pieces of pottery or irregularly shaped stones, or with a small piece of fine mesh screen.

CHOOSING ANNUALS

Here are some important points to keep in mind when picking out plants for your containers.

To get the most from your effort, choose annuals with the longest blooming periods.

Choose plants with a compact habit, those that do not need staking. Of course you can stake tall-growing annuals in a container, but most gardeners find it a nuisance and look for lower-growing varieties of those plants.

Crowd the plants closer together than you would in the garden. Crowding gives a nice, full effect. Remember to compensate for crowding by watering and feeding more often.

Decide whether you want only one kind of flower in the container, or several different kinds to create a living bouquet. The best bouquet plantings combine several different colors and plant forms. Plant an upright form, a bushy form, and a couple of trailing ones together, and in a few weeks you'll have the diversity of an old-fashioned garden in miniature. An upright zinnia, a bushy marigold, and trailing lobelia make a pleasing combination.

VEGETABLES IN CONTAINERS

Many gardeners, particularly those with limited space, have experimented with growing vegetables in containers. In some cases, the results have been so successful that even those gardeners with plenty of garden space prefer to grow certain crops in containers.

The first question for most gardeners is, How small a container is big enough for various vegetables? Container size has little if any bearing on growth, except for the root crops, such as carrots and beets, which need a slightly deeper container.

The biggest problem with small containers is keeping the plant supplied with water and nutrients. The growth and fruit set of a full-size tomato in a 6-inch pot is amazing, but it will probably need watering at least twice a day. Eventually the small container gets filled up with roots, leaving little or no room for a moisture reservoir. Therefore, the smallest container in which a plant can be grown is not always the most practical.

The advantage of a large container is that the larger volume of soil holds more water and nutrients, making watering and feeding easier than when plants are confined to smaller containers. On the other hand, though, it makes no sense to provide a larger container than is necessary. This is especially true on a balcony or roof where safety makes it important to keep weight to a minimum.

When you grow vegetables in containers, you take advantage of the various microclimates around the house and garden. The heat-loving eggplant and tomato can be placed where they receive not only full sunlight but also reflected light from a south wall.

Many vegetables, including peppers, grow vigorously and produce bumper crops in containers.

ORTHO Sponsors National 4-H Gardening and Horticulture Award Program

Winning a college scholarship is enough incentive for thousands of young gardeners and horticulturists to start planning their crops long before the first sign of spring appears.

They will be participating in the 4-H National Gardening and Horticulture Awards Program, sponsored by the ORTHO Consumer Products Division. ORTHO has sponsored the Gardening Awards program since its inception eight years ago, with horticulture being added in 1983.

Winners of the awards are selected on the basis of outstanding accomplishments in 4-H gardening and horticulture projects and activities, leadership development, personal growth, and community and civic responsibilities.

Eight national winners receive $1,000 scholarships. They and ten sectional winners are awarded free trips to the week-long National 4-H Congress held in Chicago each year. State winners receive a $75 savings bond. The top four winners at the county level receive medals of honor.

All gardening and horticulture winners attending the Congress are honored at a special banquet hosted by Vice President and General Manager Dan Hogan and National Marketing Manager Ted McKillop at Chicago's Conrad Hilton Hotel.

The 4-H gardening and horticulture program has a nationwide enrollment of 450,000 young people between the ages of 9 and 19. To enroll your child, contact your county or state cooperative extension service office or state 4-H office.

The fruits of the ornamental calamondin (Citrofortunella mitis) make excellent marmalade.

FRUIT IN CONTAINERS

Many gardeners, even those with a fair amount of space, are discovering the rewards of growing fruit trees in containers. One of the best reasons for planting a "container orchard" is to expand your fruit-growing options. Even tender plants far from their natural climate will grow well, because you can move them to shelter when cold weather comes.

With containers, there's no reason not to try 'Meyer' lemons in Michigan or peaches in North Dakota. Your winter holding site should have plenty of light, but not too much heat, and you'll have to be careful not to overwater while the plants are dormant. Citrus is decorative enough to come into the house and fill a south window, but deciduous trees can probably survive a season in the garage if you get them into the sun on fine spring days.

Remember, though, that just because a plant can survive winter in the ground doesn't mean it can manage cold weather in a container. If your garden soil freezes, then container soil will also freeze, killing your plants.

Gardeners in the coldest northern zones should plan to protect even hardy deciduous plants in the coldest months of winter.

SIZE OF CONTAINER

Begin your orchard with containers that are just 2 or 3 inches wider than the roots of your plants. If you start with a bareroot apple or pear, or one of the genetic dwarf fruits, your first container will be about the size of a 5-gallon can. In fact, since it will be in use for only one growing season, you might use a 5-gallon can and cover it with a basket or box. Let the young tree grow for a season and fill the container with roots, then repot it the following spring.

The maximum for permanent containers should be about bushel-basket size. Anything bigger will be too bulky to handle or move. (In fact, you should consider a platform on wheels for any large container.) A half bar-el, or any box or pot that holds about that volume of soil, is about the right size. The minimum permanent size should be about 18 inches on a side and 18 inches deep. The smaller the container, the more work is involved in feeding, watering, and root pruning.

Move plants from the first (5-gallon size) container to the bushel size in a series of steps over two or three seasons. It's important to have the appropriate size container so the plant can find water and nutrients more easily. The right size also keeps soil from going sour around the roots, and slows top growth so that the plant needs transplanting to a larger container less often.

SOIL MIX

Some gardeners like to add a little rich loam to the mix of sand and organic material described on page 3. It holds water better and helps keep nutrients available. Add up to one-third loam if you like, but be careful not to include clay soil. It holds water too well for a container mix, and you may drown your plants.

FEEDING CONTAINER FRUIT

Use the growth of the plant and its general appearance as your main guides to feeding. It should leaf out and grow vigorously in the spring and early summer, and leaves should be a healthy medium green. Yellowed leaves suggest a lack of nitrogen.

One method of feeding is to give each plant about half the recommended quantity of complete fertilizer every two to three weeks. A liquid fertilizer such as ORTHO-GRO Liquid Plant Food 12-6-6 is easy to handle and not likely to burn roots. If the container says 1 tablespoon per gallon of water, use 1 tablespoon in 2 gallons of water instead.

Feed through the growing season if the plant is to receive winter protection. Stop feeding about mid-July if the plant is to stay outdoors, to give it a chance to harden up new growth.

CHOOSING FRUIT FOR CONTAINERS

Deciduous fruits grown in containers include those grafted onto dwarfing rootstocks. The most compact and satisfactory container growers, however, are the genetic (true) dwarf varieties developed especially for container culture. Most of these trees grow slowly to no more than 5 to 8 feet in height. For heavy fruit yield, feed containerized trees with ORTHO Evergreen, Tree & Shrub Food 12-6-6.

Here are just a few ideas to guide you: apples on Malling 7, 9, or 26 rootstocks; pears on quince roots; genetic dwarf peaches, nectarines, apricots, or cherries; any fig; the smaller crab apples; citrus on trifoliate orange roots where available; strawberries; spur-pruned grape varieties. When the new Malling 27 rootstock becomes widely available for apples, it should be ideal for container planting.

Dwarf fruit trees make good container specimens. This specially designed box has an attached trellis so the apple tree can be espaliered easily.

WEED CONTROL AROUND THE HOME

A weed has been defined as a "plant out of place." Weeds may also be defined as plants that:

- Destroy the value of turf, garden, or ornamental plantings.
- Reduce the yield and quality of edible crops.
- Make tillage of desirable plants difficult.

Correct identification of the weed, selection of the right weed killer, and its proper application are essential for successful weed control.

Weeds fall into three main groups: broadleaf weeds, grasses, and sedges, defined as follows:

As the name implies, broadleaf weeds are weeds with broad (not grassy or bladelike) leaves. Dandelion, spurge, and plantain are typical of this group.

Grassy weeds have thin, bladelike leaves. Members of this group include annual bluegrass (Poa annua), quackgrass, and Bermuda grass.

Sedges are not true grasses, although they look like a grass with bladelike leaves. Yellow nutsedge (nutgrass) is a typical example.

GLOSSARY OF WEED CONTROL TERMS

Several of the terms used in weed control may be unfamiliar to some gardeners. The following definitions will help you to match the right product with the problem.

Contact sprays kill any weed or grass they come in contact with.

Selective weed killers kill certain plant species without injury to the other species when applied to a mixed population. An example would be a spray that kills broadleaf weeds in a grass lawn without harming the grass.

Nonselective weed killers kill all plants without regard to type.

Pre-emergent weed killers kill weeds before they germinate and emerge from the soil; they do not kill existing, above-ground weeds.

Post-emergent weed killers kill weeds after they germinate and emerge from the soil.

Systemic sprays contain a chemical that is absorbed into and distributed throughout the entire plant, including the roots.

1 — WEEDS IN LAWNS

To control selected broadleaf weeds, such as clover, oxalis, dandelion, and chickweed, in grass lawns use one of the following products:

ORTHO WEED-B-GON Weed Killer

Available in a ready-to-use trigger bottle, this product gives you accurate spot control of weeds with no mixing and no mess.

ORTHO WEED-B-GON Lawn Weed Killer

The same effective formula is also available in a concentrated form for controlling large areas of weeds in your lawn. Easily applied with an ORTHO SPRAY-ETTE 4, Super Six SPRAYETTE, Lawn and Garden Sprayer (foliage setting), or ORTHO-MATIC Garden SPRAY-ETTE.

ORTHO Crab Grass Killer

Crab grass is a special lawn problem that can be controlled with ORTHO Crab Grass Killer. This product is specially formulated to kill seedlings and mature crab grass without harming desirable lawn grasses. A pre-emergent crab grass control should be applied in early spring to prevent many seeds from germinating later in the year.

ORTHO Crab Grass & Dandelion Killer

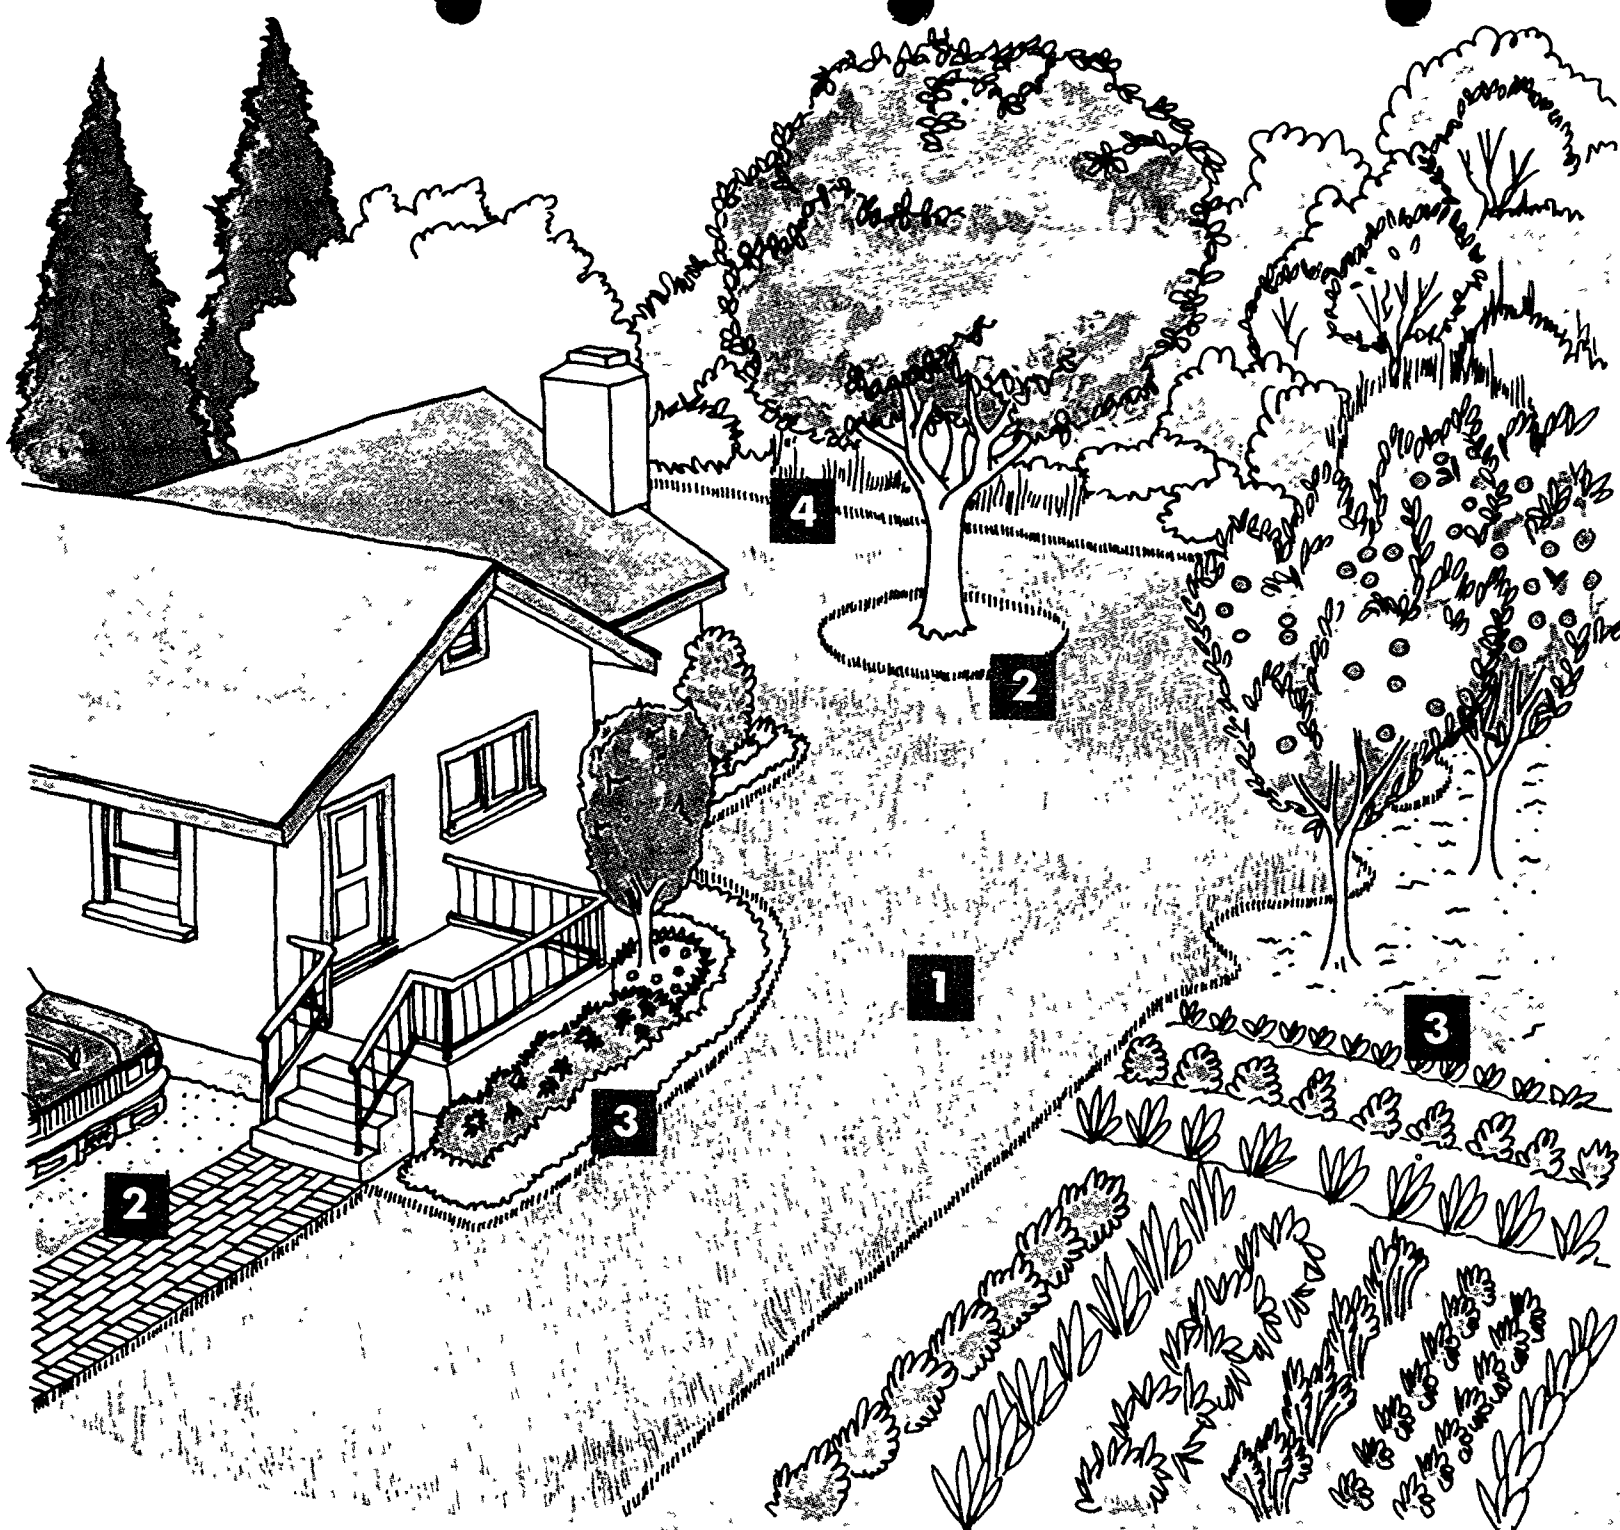

If dandelions and other broadleaf weeds are present in addition to crab grass, use this product, which is designed to control both grassy and broadleaf weeds as listed on the label.

2 — WEEDS AND GRASS THROUGHOUT THE YARD

To control all types of weeds — grassy, broadleaf, and sedges — along fences and sidewalks, in ornamental plantings, or around shrubs and trees, use one of the following products:

ORTHO KLEENUP Weed & Grass Killer or ORTHO KLEENUP Systemic Weed & Grass Killer

These highly effective, post-emergent weed killers are available in a ready-to-use form (KLEENUP Weed & Grass Killer) in a trigger bottle, or as a concentrated product for use in larger problem areas (KLEENUP Systemic Weed & Grass Killer). Both products are excellent for weeds growing in and along walkways, fences, and driveways, and can also be used for spot weeding in lawns; but because they are nonselective, they should be used with care.

ORTHO TRIOX Vegetation Killer

This useful product can be used on walkways and patios, along fences, and in open areas (where roots of desirable plants are not underlying the area to be treated) to kill all plant growth, and to prevent its regrowth for up to one year. This is a nonselective, post-emergent weed killer.

Weeds growing among vegetables and flowers present big problems to most gardeners. After the vegetable or flower garden has been planted, and before any weeds appear, use the following product:

ORTHO Garden Weed Preventer

This product prevents weed seeds from becoming established by stopping the germination of grasses and broadleaf weeds in any garden area. This is a pre-emergent, nonselective weed control.

4 — UNWANTED WOODY PLANTS

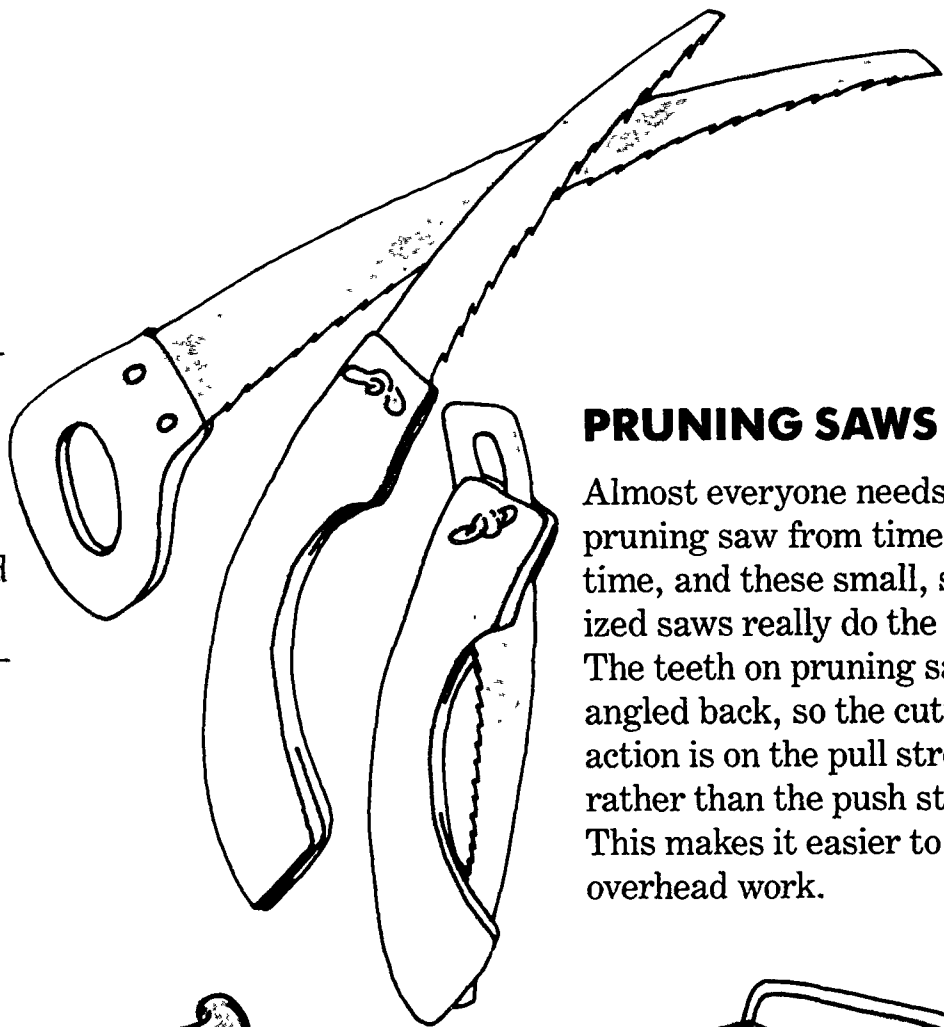

Poison oak, poison ivy, kudzu, wild blackberries, and other woody plants can pose big problems for home gardeners. Their tough constitutions make them resistant to most spray formulations. Either of the following products will give excellent control:

ORTHO BRUSH-B-GON Brush Killer (liquid concentrate)

ORTHO Poison Oak & Poison Ivy Killer (pressurized spray) Hard-to-control woody plants can be killed, roots and all, by the proper application of these ORTHO products. Read and follow all label directions. For spot application the pressurized spray is especially useful. For larger jobs the concentrate can be applied with an ORTHO SPRAY-ETTE hose-end sprayer.

TOOLS OF THE TRADE

Like any other organized activity, gardening has its own specialized tools of the trade. Some of the tools you see at nurseries and garden centers could be described as old standards, others as new-fangled gadgets. The items shown on these two pages are basically refinements of standard tools. The gardener interested in saving time or effort should take a good look at these products: They have proven themselves as reliable and efficient helpers in the garden.

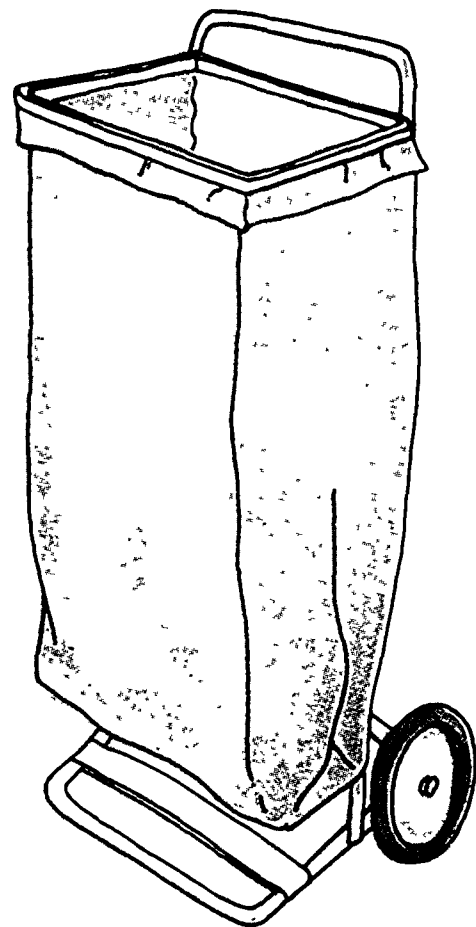

PRUNING SAWS

Almost everyone needs a pruning saw from time to time, and these small, specialized saws really do the trick. The teeth on pruning saws are angled back, so the cutting action is on the pull stroke rather than the push stroke. This makes it easier to do overhead work.

POWER HEDGE TRIMMERS

Both electric and gasoline-powered hedge trimmers operate on the same principle: A reciprocating cutting blade runs back and forth beneath a stationary blade. Most are designed to handle branches up to $\frac{1}{4}$ inch thick. Anyone with a long hedge will tell you they are worth their weight in gold. The cutting blades are generally from 12 to 30 inches long; an average user needs only 16 to 20 inches.

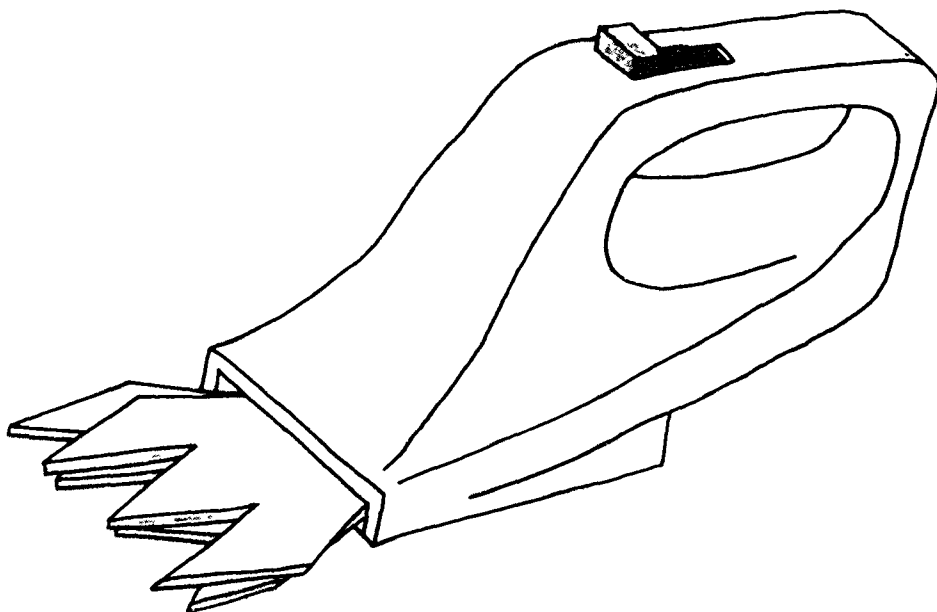

BAG HOLDERS

The large plastic garbage bag revolutionized home disposal methods, but until recently the problem remained of how to keep the bag open while filling it — a real concern when your helpers are off playing tennis or shopping. Some bag holders are stationary; others have wheels to make transporting full bags easier. Either way, they're a big help.

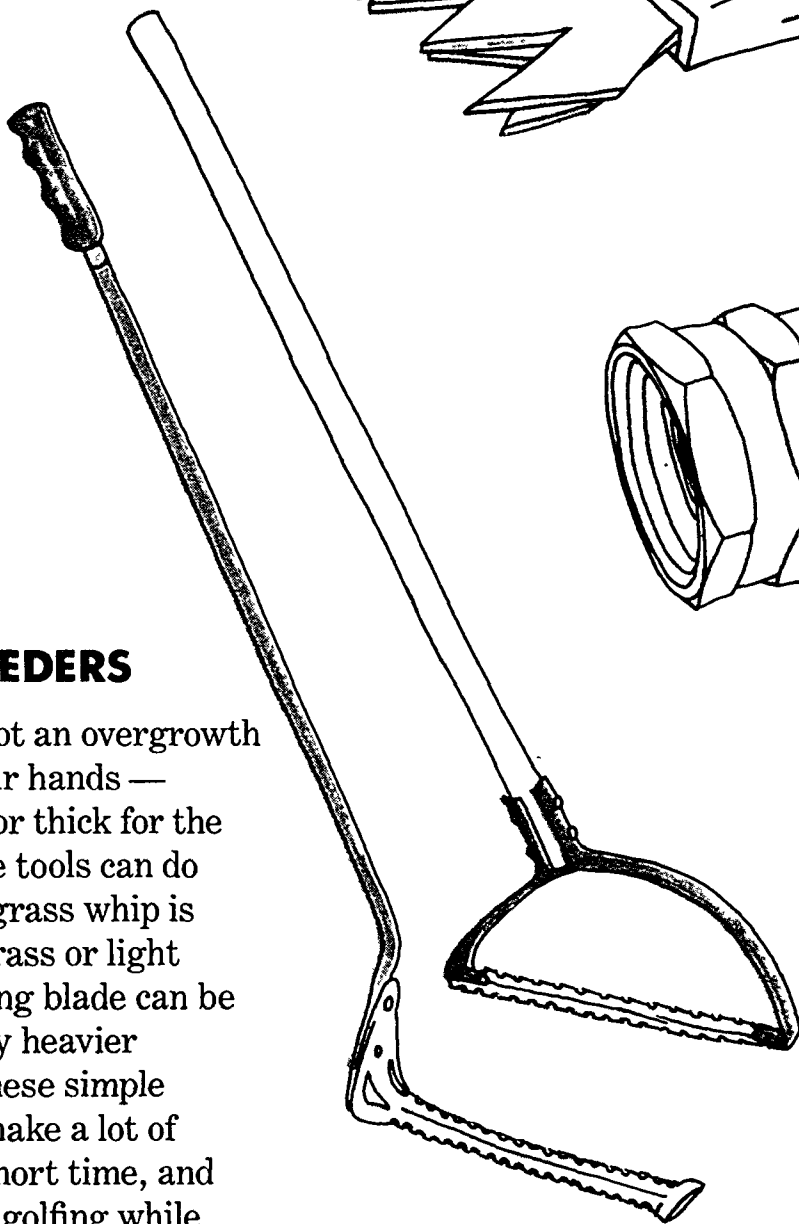

BATTERY-OPERATED SHEARS

Battery-operated shears are a boon for those who like to trim by hand but just don't have the strength. All you need to do is point these shears in the right direction and turn on the switch. They will cut for 30 to 40 minutes at a time, and recharge fully in 24 hours.

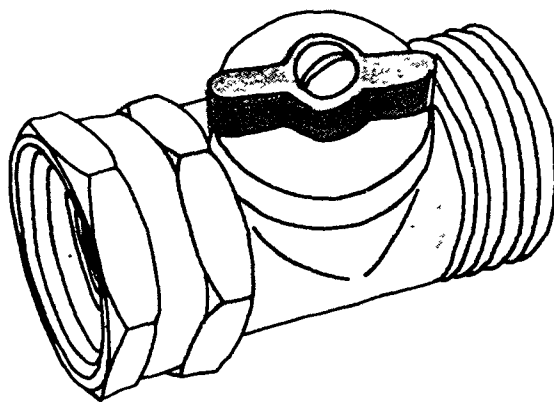

SWING WEEDERS

When you've got an overgrowth problem on your hands — weeds too tall or thick for the mower — these tools can do the trick. The grass whip is best used on grass or light weeds; the swing blade can be used on slightly heavier weeds. With these simple tools you can make a lot of progress in a short time, and pretend you're golfing while you're at it.

HOSE-END VALVES

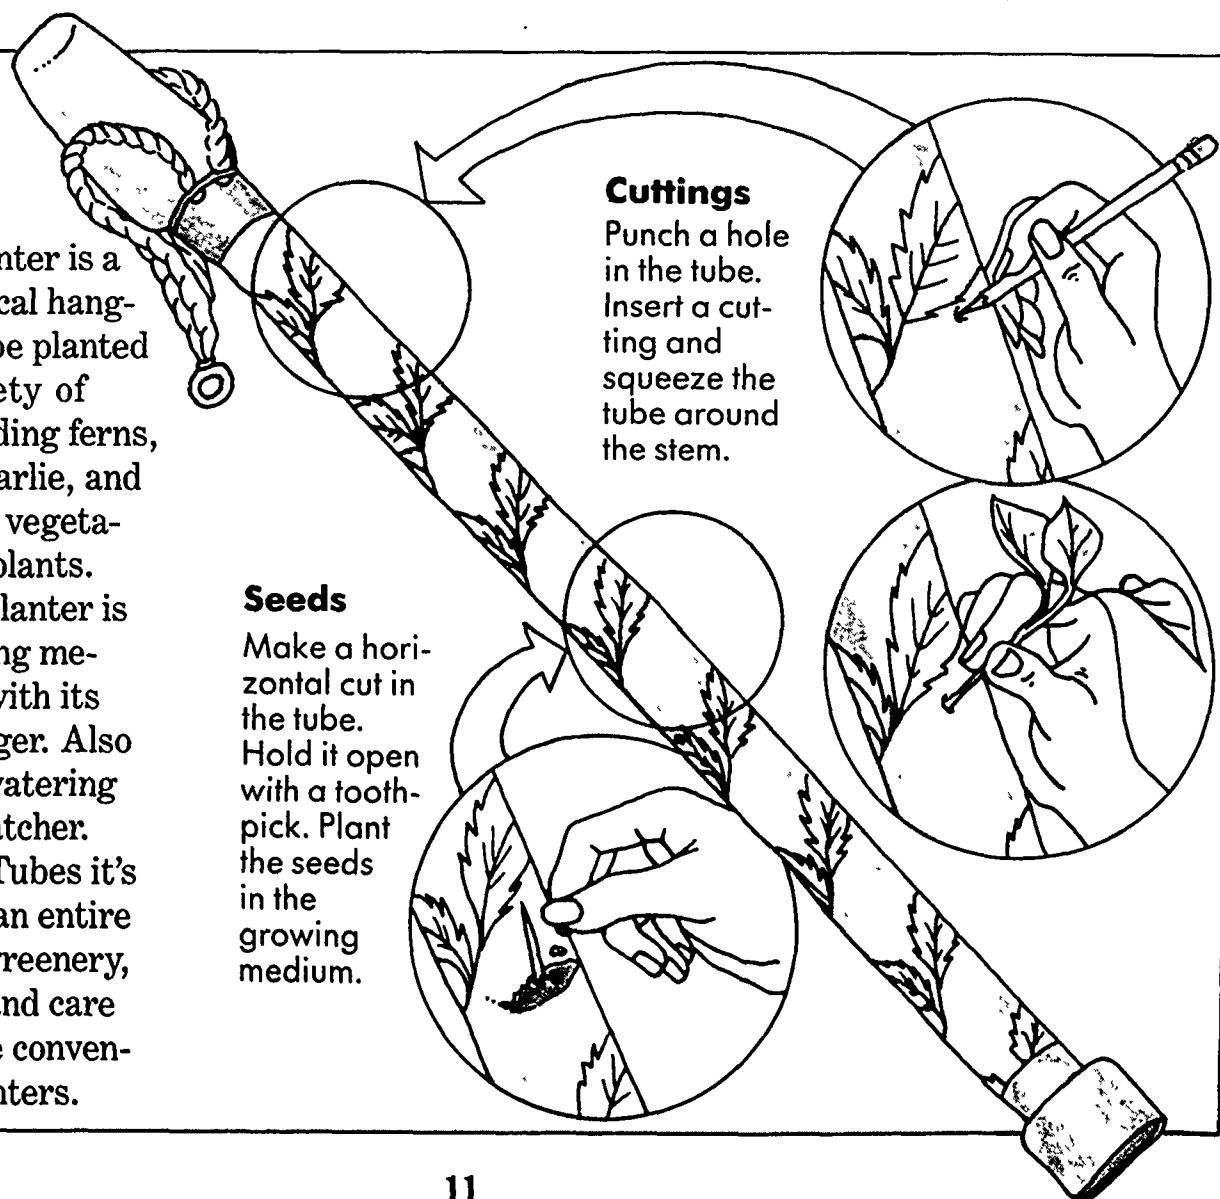

If your sprinkler or nozzle lacks a shut-off device, consider buying one of these — it will save you many trips to and from the spigot. Constructed of plastic, zinc, or brass, these valves have a female end for connecting to the hose and a male end for attaching to the accessory. A ball valve located inside is operated by a lever to control the flow of water.

GRO-TUBE HANGING PLANTER

The Gro-Tube Planter is a ready-to-use vertical hanging tube that can be planted with a wide variety of houseplants, including ferns, ivies, creeping Charlie, and many other fruits, vegetables, or flowering plants.

The Gro-Tube Planter is filled with a growing medium, and comes with its own macrame hanger. Also included is a self-watering system and drip catcher. With several Gro-Tubes it's possible to create an entire wall of cascading greenery, without the mess and care demanded by more conventional hanging planters.

Cuttings

Punch a hole in the tube. Insert a cutting and squeeze the tube around the stem.

Seeds

Make a horizontal cut in the tube. Hold it open with a toothpick. Plant the seeds in the growing medium.

ROSES IN THE LANDSCAPE

The rose is certainly the most popular flower in our gardens. Over 50 million Americans have at least one rose bush under cultivation. Most often, however, the rose is not a part of the total landscape design. It's unfortunate that roses aren't used more predominantly in landscapes; no other plant produces so many flowers over so long a period of time, or has such an astounding variety of plant growth habits and flower forms and colors.

Roses range from tiny miniatures to towering climbers, and come in all sizes and shapes in between. They can be formed into trees, trained into pillars, grown into huge shrubs, massed together as ground covers, or planted alone as colorful accents. The flowers offer a rainbow of color and an endless variety of sizes and fragrances. You don't have to wait years for results, because most roses bloom the first year they're planted. Few other plants grow under so many different climate and soil conditions. Best of all, roses are easy to grow; their care requires little time in comparison to the rewards they offer.

A ROSE FOR ALL REASONS

Whether you act as your own landscape designer or use the services of a professional, consider some of the ways roses can fit into your landscape.

- Foundation plantings in various heights around the house make the structure look as if it belongs there.
- Massed floribundas and miniatures in beds create a lush spot of color against a green lawn.
- Small rose bushes make beautiful accents in rock gardens.
- Mobile containers of roses are ideal for patios and terrace gardens, or to bring indoors when they're in bloom.
- A group of roses or just one large specimen can enhance an entryway or a walk.
- Rose-covered screens and fences give both privacy and beauty. They can camouflage unattractive structures or poorly designed architectural features; and unlike ivy and most other vines, roses won't inflict structural damage as they mature.

A plentitude of roses at the garden gate makes for an old-fashioned welcome.

A ROSE BY ANY OTHER NAME

Beginning rose gardeners, especially those who want to incorporate roses into the overall landscape, are sometimes bewildered by the names and classifications of roses.

POLYANTHAS

These roses were developed in France in the late 1800s. These low-growing, continuous-blooming plants produce large clusters of small flowers in all the typical rose colors.

HYBRID TEAS

The flowers of hybrid tea roses are borne singly or in small clusters on long stems. Colors include white and shades of lavender, pink, yellow, orange, and red, with mixtures and blends in between. Most are fragrant. Plants are grafted onto vigorous shrub rootstocks. They grow from 2 to 6 feet tall, and bloom continuously.

FLORIBUNDAS

Sometimes called hybrid polyanthas, these roses are the result of a cross between polyanthas and hybrid tea roses. As the name implies, they produce "flowers in abundance." The blossoms resemble hybrid teas in form and color range, and are borne in clusters. Most plants are disease resistant, hardy, and low growing.

- Plantings that frame a large window at the bottom and sides can bring the rose garden indoors visually.
- Raised beds or recessed beds built into a patio or terrace bring the roses right into entertainment areas.
- Terraced plantings on a steep slope can create a wall or bank of flowers.

If you choose to group roses in a classic rose garden, you can use a formal or a casual approach, either of which can be done on a large or a small scale. It's the design and selection of plants that determines the success of your rose garden.

Formal gardens are generally symmetrical; indeed, the planting patterns are often geometrical. The plants usually follow straight lines, the colors are blended carefully, and often one tall feature—a statue, a pergola, a fountain, or a tree rose—is surrounded by roses of descending heights.

Casual gardens, on the other hand, have irregularly spaced plants and flowing lines, resulting in a more natural look. More colors and varieties may be combined than in a formal garden, and many other flowers are often planted along with the roses. And why not? Roses blend beautifully with just about any other flower you can think of.

No matter which plants you use, good design requires an understanding of the needs and potentials of those particular plants. To determine where to place a given rose bush in your landscape, study its characteristics and how it is likely to perform. Consider its height, growth habits (bushy, spreading, or upright), and foliage type and color. Prune to fit the plant into the design. And remember to choose varieties with long-lasting flowers or a long season of bloom.

'DeMeaux', a dwarf shrub rose, is known for its profusion of many-petalled blossoms.

If you decide to do your own landscape design, make your plans on paper first. This preliminary step will help you anticipate and avoid many problems that might otherwise mean more money, time, and hard work than necessary.

For more information about roses, their selection and care, see the ORTHO book All About Roses.

GRANDIFLORAS

These roses have characteristics somewhere between hybrid teas and floribundas. The flowers resemble hybrid teas but are always borne in clusters. The growth habit is similar to floribundas, but the plants are taller.

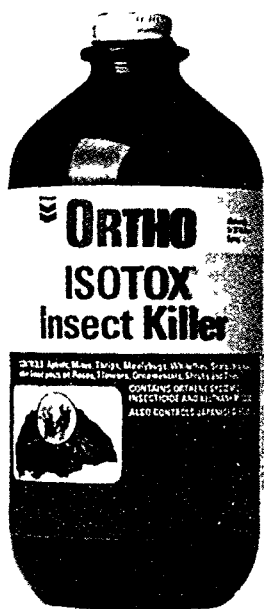

MINIATURES

These small, tiny-flowered plants are becoming increasingly popular. Most bloom continuously, with varieties in all the colors and forms of hybrid teas, with 5 to 70 petals. They have little or no fragrance.

CLIMBERS

Botanically, climbing roses and ramblers are tall-growing plants (6 to 20 feet) of any one of the other types of roses. Despite their designation, however, they are not true climbers—lacking tendrils or other means with which to attach themselves, they must be tied to a support. In the wild, their thorns act as tendrils. These roses may bloom continuously, or only once each year. They come in a wide range of color, size, and form.

ISOTOX PROTECTS PLANTS BY SYSTEMIC ACTION

ORTHO ISOTOX Insect Killer has what it takes to keep roses and other listed plants pest-free with fewer spray applications. With ISOTOX's systemic action you can increase the interval between sprayings and still get protection from insect damage. Aphids, which require frequent sprayings with other products, can usually be cleaned up easily with one application of ISOTOX. And that one application often protects the plant for three weeks or more.

Long trusted by rose and flower growers, ISOTOX is now better than ever. OR-

THENE, the systemic insecticide with both contact and residual action, has been added to the proven miticide KELTHANE. ISOTOX Insect Killer controls the tough-to-kill insects that attack roses. Within 24 hours of application, ISOTOX is virtually rain-fast and continues to provide systemic residual control of insects such as aphids for up to three weeks.

It's safe for plants, too. Extensive tests all over the country show that ISOTOX Insect Killer can be used safely on over a hundred listed plants, following label instructions.

Systemic action

A systemic insecticide, such as ISOTOX, is absorbed through the leaves, giving the plant protection against sucking insects for up to 3 weeks.

A granular product, such as ORTHO Systemic Rose & Flower Care 8-12-4, enters the plant through the root system, then moves internally through the sap stream into branches, leaves, and stems. Provides protection and feeding for up to 6 weeks.

WITH ROSE GROWERS IN MIND

ORTHO FUNGINEX Rose Disease Control is a product developed especially for gardeners who love disease-free roses. It effectively controls black spot, rust, and powdery mildew better than any other product—so well, in fact, that for the first time in its 84-year history the American Rose Society has endorsed a commercial product—ORTHO FUNGINEX Rose Disease Control.

FUNGINEX is a systemic liquid fungicide for use by enthusiasts who raise their flowers for show and by those who simply enjoy raising beautiful, disease-free roses. Roses can be sprayed with FUNGINEX up to the day you cut them, without any visible residue to mar the beauty of their foliage and blooms.

FUNGINEX also controls powdery mildew on crape myrtle, phlox, calendula, dahlia, eunonymus, Jerusalem thorn, lilac, photinia, snapdragon, and zinnia. In addition it controls rust on poplar, aster, and carnation.

For best results, read and follow all label directions. Spray all plant surfaces, including new growth. Be sure to cover both the upper and lower surfaces of leaves. FUNGINEX can also be mixed with insect sprays such as ISOTOX Insect Killer: Apply with an ORTHO SPRAY-ETTE, ORTHO Lawn & Garden Sprayer, or pump-type sprayer.

ONE-STEP ROSE CARE

When you use the combination product ORTHO Systemic Rose & Flower Care 8-12-4, you give your rose plant the power to protect itself from its worst insect enemies. Apply the product once in the spring when new leaves are about an inch long, and you can count on six weeks of protection from the most troublesome rose-damaging insects, plus a properly balanced supply of nutrients. Here's how it works:

The systemic insecticide provides internal, all-weather protection against aphids, whiteflies, thrips, spider mites, lace bugs, and leafhoppers. The product also includes the nutrients that roses require for luxuriant growth and spectacular flowers: nitrogen (8%), phosphorus (12%), and potash (4%), plus essential minor elements.

With this granular formulation there's no need to spray to control the above insects, because the plant has internal protection that can't be washed off by rain or water from sprinklers. Beneficial insects, such as ladybugs and bees, go unharmed. Use ORTHO Systemic Rose & Flower Care 8-12-4 every six weeks during the growing season to give complete protection against the insects listed on the label.

INSECT AND DISEASE CONTROL

To prevent or control insects and diseases, ORTHO has developed ORTHENEX Insect and Disease Control, a combination of ORTHENE, KELTHANE, and FUNGIX. It is an effective, broad-spectrum, multipurpose liquid concentrate that is easily diluted and applied through a hose-end sprayer, such as the ORTHO SPRAY-ETTE. For best results, use this product as a preventive spray. Apply it at intervals of 7 to 10 days, before or at the first sign of insect and disease attack. Controls such diseases as black spot, rust, and powdery mildew, and prevents aphids, mites, thrips, leafhoppers, and other insects from becoming a problem. When applying the spray be sure to cover all plant surfaces, including the undersides of leaves.

CONVENIENT SPOT TREATMENT

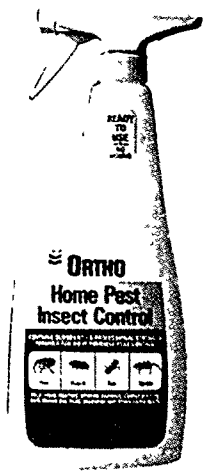

For spot treatment or for use on just a few roses, ready-to-use ORTHO Rose & Flower Insect Killer may be applied any time throughout the growing season. This product kills aphids, beetles, leafhoppers, stink bugs, caterpillars, and hard-to-control whiteflies. In addition to roses, it can also be used on African violet, gladiola, aster, azalea, begonia, camellia, carnation, chrysanthemum, dahlia, dogwood, and marigold. Contains the proven ingredients pyrethrins and piperonyl butoxide. Packaged in a squeeze-trigger, 24-ounce applicator bottle. To control adult whiteflies and nymphs as they hatch, apply at intervals of 5 to 7 days, using about 8 applications over a 2-month period, starting when insects are first noticed.

HOUSE AND GARDEN PEST CONTROL

ROACHES, SPIDERS, AND ANTS

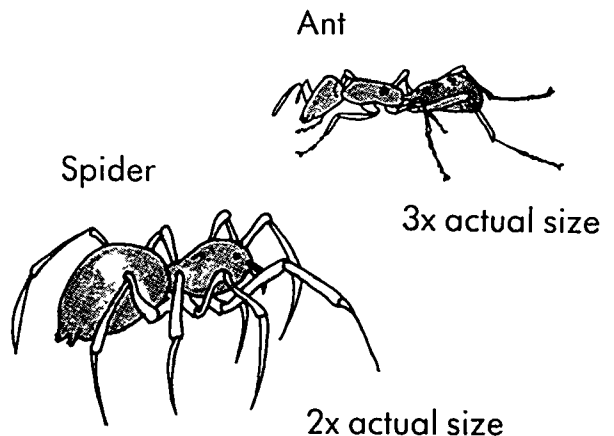

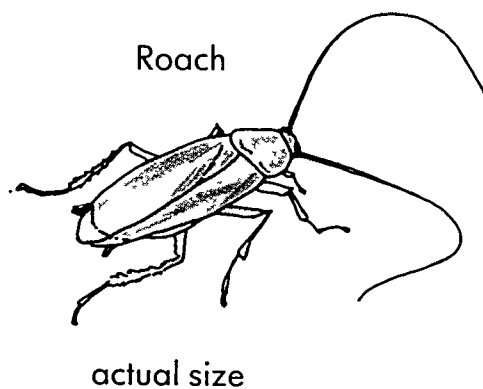

In their efforts to cut the cost of maintaining a residence, homeowners and renters alike are turning to do-it-yourself methods of pest control around the house. ORTHO has come to the aid of the do-it-yourselfer with a new product: ORTHO Home Pest Insect Control.

ORTHO Home Pest Insect Control gives complete control of a wide range of home-invading pests, both indoors and out. It is available in a ½-gallon or 1-gallon container or a 24-ounce bottle, each with an easy-to-use adjustable hand-squeeze applicator. Simply adjust the nozzle to deliver a pinpoint stream of spray for treating cracks and crevices, or to make a wider cone spray pattern to treat larger areas as desired. Shake well before using, and follow the directions on the label.

In addition to roaches, spiders, and ants, ORTHO Home Pest Insect Control also kills fleas, crickets, carpet beetles, brown dog ticks, clover mites, firebrats, silverfish, and earwigs. It can also be used outdoors to reduce flies and mosquitoes. Its exceptional control of listed pests, lack of objectional odor, and no-stain formula make it an excellent product for indoor use.

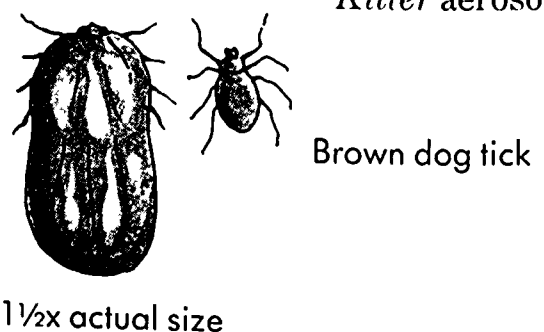

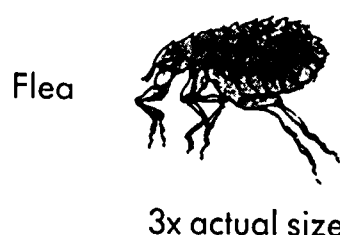

FLEAS AND TICKS

Fleas and ticks seem to go together with pets; and because pets share common residences with humans, they often share their pests as well. Fortunately, homeowners can do something to control the biting and painful itching caused by these pests; there's no need to move out of your home if fleas and ticks move in!

ORTHO FLEA-B-GON Flea & Tick Killer is packaged in a 1-gallon or a 24-ounce bottle, each with an easy-to-use adjustable hand-squeeze applicator. It's ready to use—no mixing or measuring. Simply adjust the nozzle to deliver a pinpoint stream of spray for treating cracks and crevices, or readjust it to make a wider cone spray pattern to treat larger areas such as pet beds and resting quarters; along and behind baseboards; window and door frames and localized areas of floor and floor coverings; and carpets where pests may hide. Pets' bedding should be replaced with clean, fresh bedding after treatment. Do not treat pets with this product. To treat pets directly, use ORTHO FLEA-B-GON Flea Killer aerosol.

SOD WEBWORMS

Sod webworms spend the winter as partially grown larvae, several inches deep under sod lawns. In spring they move to the surface and start chewing on the grass, cutting grass blades just above the thatch line. The close-clipped grass appears as a brown patch about the size of a softball. If the infestation is heavy, large areas of grass may be severely damaged or destroyed in only a few days.

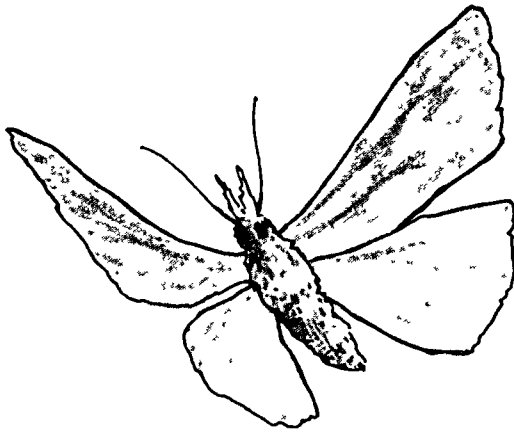

In late June and early July adult moths emerge and begin to scatter eggs at random in the grass. The second generation, appearing in late July and August, causes the most damage.

Control with either ORTHO Chinch Bug & Sod Webworm Killer or ORTHO DIAZINON Soil & Turf Insect Control.

Apply in the evening just before the worms start to feed. Since several generations may come out during the summer, repeat the treatment as directed on the label.

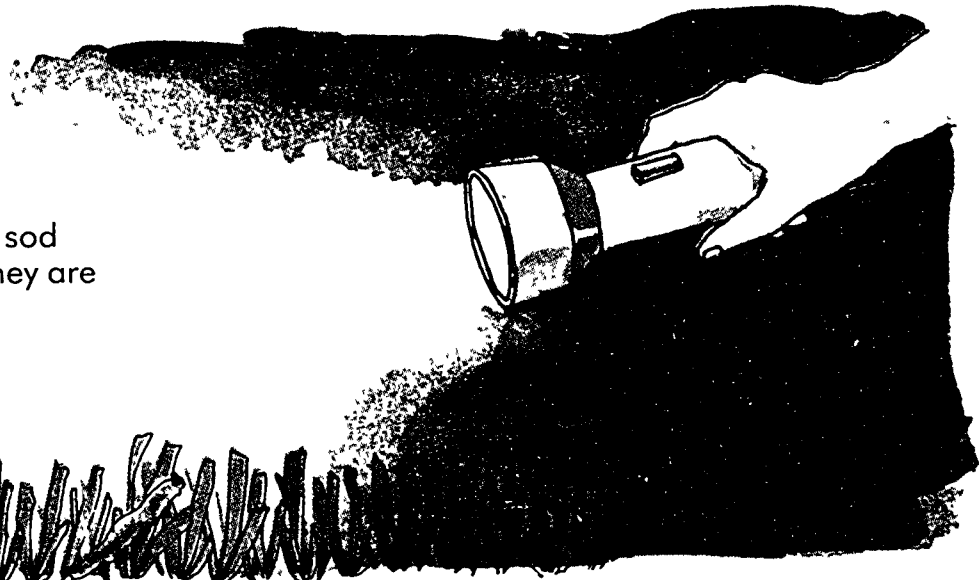

To determine if your lawn damage is caused by sod webworms, take a flashlight and look for them feeding at night. Or flood damaged spots with water; any black-spotted gray caterpillars that come up out of tunnels are probably sod webworms. An abundance of birds interested in the lawn usually means that webworms are present.

The adult moth lays her eggs in the evening. The moth flies erratically, scattering eggs over the lawn. This is the only moth that folds its wings just before it lights on the grass.

Adult webworm moth enlarged about 2X.

Using a flashlight, look for sod webworms at night when they are most actively feeding.

GRUBS

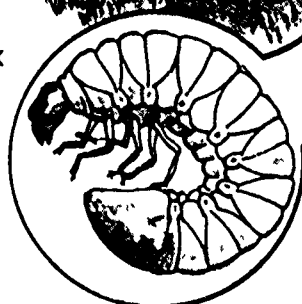

The work habits of grubs are quite different from those of the sod webworm. Instead of attacking the top growth, grubs feed on roots several inches deep. Part the grass and examine it closely for signs of chewing worms or grubs. Search deep around the runners and at the base of blades. Look for chewed, silvered, or transparent leaves, and for webbing. With a bit of luck you may actually expose one of the culprits, although you are more likely to see the damage than the damagers. Grubs can chew off grass roots so cleanly that patches of lawn can be lifted like a doormat. If all the evidence points to grubs, treat the entire lawn with ORTHO DIAZINON Soil & Turf Insect Control or ORTHO Lawn Insect Spray, according to the instructions on the labels.

Enlarged 2x

Grubs cause grass to die in clearly defined patches. Roots are chewed off so cleanly the dead turf can be lifted up like a doormat.

APHIDS AND WHITEFLIES

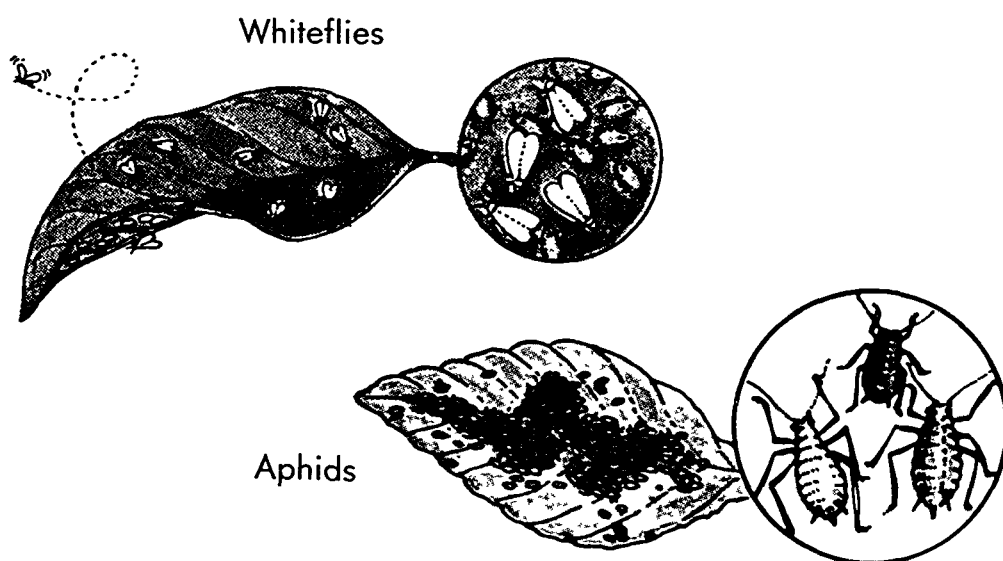

Controlling pests on indoor plants is now easier. ORTHO's new House Plant Insect Control solves several problems at once. Effective in controlling many common houseplant damagers, it is packaged in a convenient, ready-to-use aerosol can.

ORTHO House Plant Insect Control kills insects both on contact and systemically, giving the plant internal protection from reinfestation for up to two weeks after spraying. Aphids, mealybugs, two-spotted mites, scale crawlers, and the hard-to-control whitefly are killed with this one easy-to-use product. The label lists 37 houseplants that can be treated successfully, including Boston fern, coleus, weeping fig, and parlor palm.

For heavy infestations, spray 2 or 3 times at intervals of 7 to 10 days. For best results, spray at the first sign of infestation. Do not apply to wilted plants or to plants that are in direct sunlight. Be sure to hold the can approximately 18 inches from the plant. Apply as a light spray, in short bursts, covering both the upper and lower surfaces of the leaves. Plants may be sprayed indoors.

SPECIAL HELP FOR EVERGREENS AND OTHER PLANTS

RA-PID-GRO plant food is available in two water-soluble products: RA-PID-GRO Evergreen & Azalea Food 32-10-10 or RA-PID-GRO Plant Food 23-19-17. RA-PID-GRO can be used as a conventional fertilizer—diluted with water and applied directly to the soil—or as a foliar feed fertilizer. Its unique formulation allows it to be rapidly absorbed by every part of the plant—the leaves, stems, branches, and roots. Absorption begins within minutes after application. RA-PID-GRO Plant Food 23-19-17 can be used on flowers, vegetables, houseplants, shrubs, trees, and transplants. RA-PID-GRO Evergreen & Azalea Food 32-10-10 is specially formulated for camellias, dogwoods, ferns, hibiscus, rhododendrons, gardenias, orchids, evergreens, and other acid-loving plants.

Evergreens are more sensitive to a lack of micronutrients than are many other plants. When they start to turn yellow, the problem is likely to be a deficiency in micronutrients, particularly iron. RA-PID-GRO Evergreen & Azalea Food 32-10-10 contains the right ingredients to prevent or cure this condition. In addition, the acid characteristics of this product facilitate the intake of nutrients by the plant.

One of the best ways to supply evergreens with the nutrients they need, especially when the soil is still cold, is to use RA-PID-GRO Evergreen & Azalea Food 32-10-10 as a foliar feed. It can be sprayed directly on all parts of the plant, using a hose-end sprayer, sprinkling can, or other spray device. Be sure to read and follow all label directions.

COMMON SENSE ABOUT CHEMICALS

Used with care and common sense, chemical products can be the key to a beautiful and productive garden. But it is also true that chemicals can be harmful if misused. That's why we've developed a pamphlet called Garden Chemicals and Common Sense. It tells you how to understand the fine print on the labels of chemical products, and why it's important always to read the label first. The pamphlet unfolds into a colorful poster for your gardening shed, with important information on the safe use, storage, and disposal of home chemical products. You can get it free from your ORTHO dealer, or by writing to B. F. Grass, Manager of Consumer Affairs, Drawer GB, Chevron Chemical Company, 575 Market Street, San Francisco, CA 94105. Include a stamped, self-addressed, legal-size envelope.

SPRAYING TIPS

Read the label every time you spray or dust, and note especially all the cautions and warnings. Follow the directions carefully; measure accurately; and mix sprays on a solid, level surface to avoid spilling.

Don't spray when temperatures are high or when plants need water. The best times to spray are early morning and evening. To avoid drift, spray when there is no wind. However, if you suspect possible drift to desirable plants, wash off immediately with water.

Be careful not to get pesticides on your skin or clothing; but if you do, wash exposed skin thoroughly with soap and water. Do not eat, drink, or smoke while spraying. Wash your hands thoroughly with soap and water immediately after spraying.

Keep all chemicals out of the reach of children; store them in a locked cabinet or on a high shelf. Set aside a special set of mixing tools, measuring spoons, and a graduated measuring cup. Use them only for mixing and measuring chemicals. Keep all chemicals in their original labeled containers.

Don't store leftover spray. Mix only as much as you need at one time. If there is a little spray remaining in the sprayer, use it up on other plants as recommended on the label. Before disposing of empty pesticide containers, allow them to drain upside down for at least 30 seconds; then rinse thoroughly with water. Do not allow the rinse water to drain around plants or areas not listed on the label. Used containers that have been rinsed and drained in this manner are ready for disposal by wrapping in newspaper and placing in the trash collection. Do not burn empty containers.

With all pesticides, application is at least half the battle. You must be sure to cover the pests and their hiding places as the label directs. Never spray any plant that is suffering from lack of moisture. Water deeply and thoroughly a few days before spraying. Wait a day or two after a period of strong wind so moisture lost from leaves can be replaced. Never spray when leaves are wilted. And never spray when bark or leaves are wet from dew, rain, or watering—you'll lose much of the spray's effectiveness.

'SWEET SUCCESS' CUCUMBER

'Sweet Success' will reward home gardeners who try this new 1983 All-America Selections Bronze Award-winning cucumber. 'Sweet Success' has the quality of a greenhouse cucumber, provides bumper crop yields, and has a sweet-nutty flavor.

The texture of 'Sweet Success' sets it apart from other varieties. The "burpless" fruit are so tender and sweet you don't have to peel them before eating. Their crisp white interior makes them ideal for salads.

For best results, stake or trellis the vine. 'Sweet Success' cucumbers grow up to 12 inches long. The seeds germinate in 4 to 7 days, and will produce mature fruit in 54 days.

'Sweet Success' is widely adapted, with genetic resistance to the cucumber mosaic virus, watermelon mosaic virus, scab, and target leaf spot: it is tolerant to powdery mildew and downy mildew.

This winning cucumber is as close to perfection as you'll find in the home garden. Many gardeners who have tried it report that they plan to grow it again next year.

'CANDLELIGHT' PEPPER

'Candlelight' is a beautiful new ornamental pepper developed by a retired professor in Coventry, Connecticut.

John Scarchuk, who taught in the University of Connecticut Department of Plant Science until his retirement 3 years ago, spent 15 years developing 'Candlelight'.

A 1983 All-America Selections Bronze Medal winner, 'Candlelight' bears an average of over a hundred slender peppers per plant. Against the background of attractive dark green foliage the light green, thickly clustered fruits really show off; but the true excitement comes when they all turn red within a few days of each other.

The plants are low and spreading, averaging 10 to 12 inches in height. The edible peppers are the diameter of a pencil and grow up to 1½ inches in length.

'Candlelight' also makes a beautiful border around trees or edging for the driveway. It is attractive planted en masse or in a pot or window box.

Ornamental peppers are among the most durable and carefree plants for garden color, and 'Candlelight' is especially so. The vigorous plants have the strength to continue producing peppers right up until the first frost.

The seeds of 'Candlelight' germinate in 10 to 12 days when started indoors at 70° to 75°F. To have budded plants ready to set outside in late spring, start the seeds about 10 weeks before the first frost-free date. Ornamental peppers are very heat- and sun-resistant, and should be planted in full sun.

'SUGAR ANN' SNAP PEA

'Sugar Ann' is an improved variety similar to 'Sugar Snap'. Its pod quality, size, and shape are very similar to 'Sugar Snap', but it is ready two weeks earlier. It is the earliest of all snap peas. It has a short growth habit, with peas growing on a compact, 18-inch-high bush. It was developed by Gallatin Valley Seed Company.

'CELEBRITY' TOMATO

The 'Celebrity' hybrid tomato was developed by Petoseed Research. It is the first AAS-winning tomato with genetic resistance to tobacco mosaic virus. In addition, 'Celebrity' carries resistance to verticillium wilt, fusarium wilt races 1 and 2, and root knot nematodes. It is a mid-early variety that starts producing about 70 days after transplant. It is a strong, determinate plant, similar to Bigset or Floramerica but more productive under most conditions, with firm, flavorful fruit. In trials, it outperformed top competing varieties throughout North America and proved to be widely adaptable as a bush, cage, or short stake tomato.

HOW TO FIND SEEDS OF NEW VARIETIES

Everyone in the home garden seed trade wishes they could improve the availability of new varieties. Each year, dozens of new flowers and vegetables are introduced. You will find a few of them in seed displays in retail stores. Progressive growers who specialize in the newest and best will offer seedling plants. But by and large, seed catalogs are the most dependable source of new varieties.

Catalogs offer what seed growers call "proprietary varieties," sold exclusively by one company. In addition, almost all seed catalogs will offer the new All-America Selections, varieties of flowers and vegetables selected by experts as the best in each class.

It is quite an accomplishment for 58 strong-minded experts to agree on each year's crop of All-America Selections. This is not a commercial scam, but a sincere program to help you improve your garden.

ALL-TIME FAVORITES

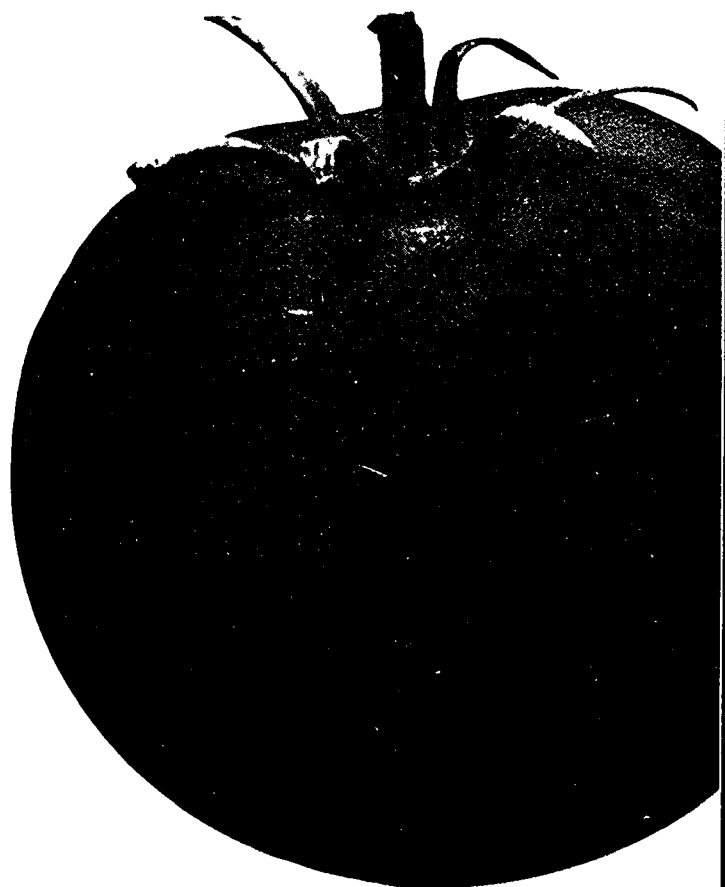

In addition to the 1984 AAS winners, the Golden Anniversary Award winners were chosen from a ballot of 24 past AAS winners submitted to the public through over 4,000 garden communicators in their newspapers, magazines, and radio programs.

First-place all-time vegetable winner was 'Sugar Snap' pea developed by Gallatin Valley Seed Co., a 1979 AAS winner. Runner-up in this category was 'Green Comet' broccoli hybrid developed by Takii & Co., a 1968 AAS winner.

FLOWER NEWS FLOWE

'RED PICOTEE' PETUNIA

America's favorite flower colors, red and white, have been captured in the picotee pattern for the first time with this new hybrid. The blossoms are strongly marked with red centers and pure white margins. The high contrast makes for a very bright, attractive flower.

The neat plants begin blooming when quite small, and grow to a maximum height of 1 foot. The blossoms average 3 inches in diameter.

Like other petunias, 'Red

Picotee' can be used as a bedding plant, in borders, and in planters and hanging baskets. This variety will bloom best when grown in full sun, with plenty of moisture and good drainage.

To keep the 'Red Picotee' producing blooms, remove spent flowers as soon as you notice them. 'Red Picotee' will bloom from early spring until the first frosts in the fall.

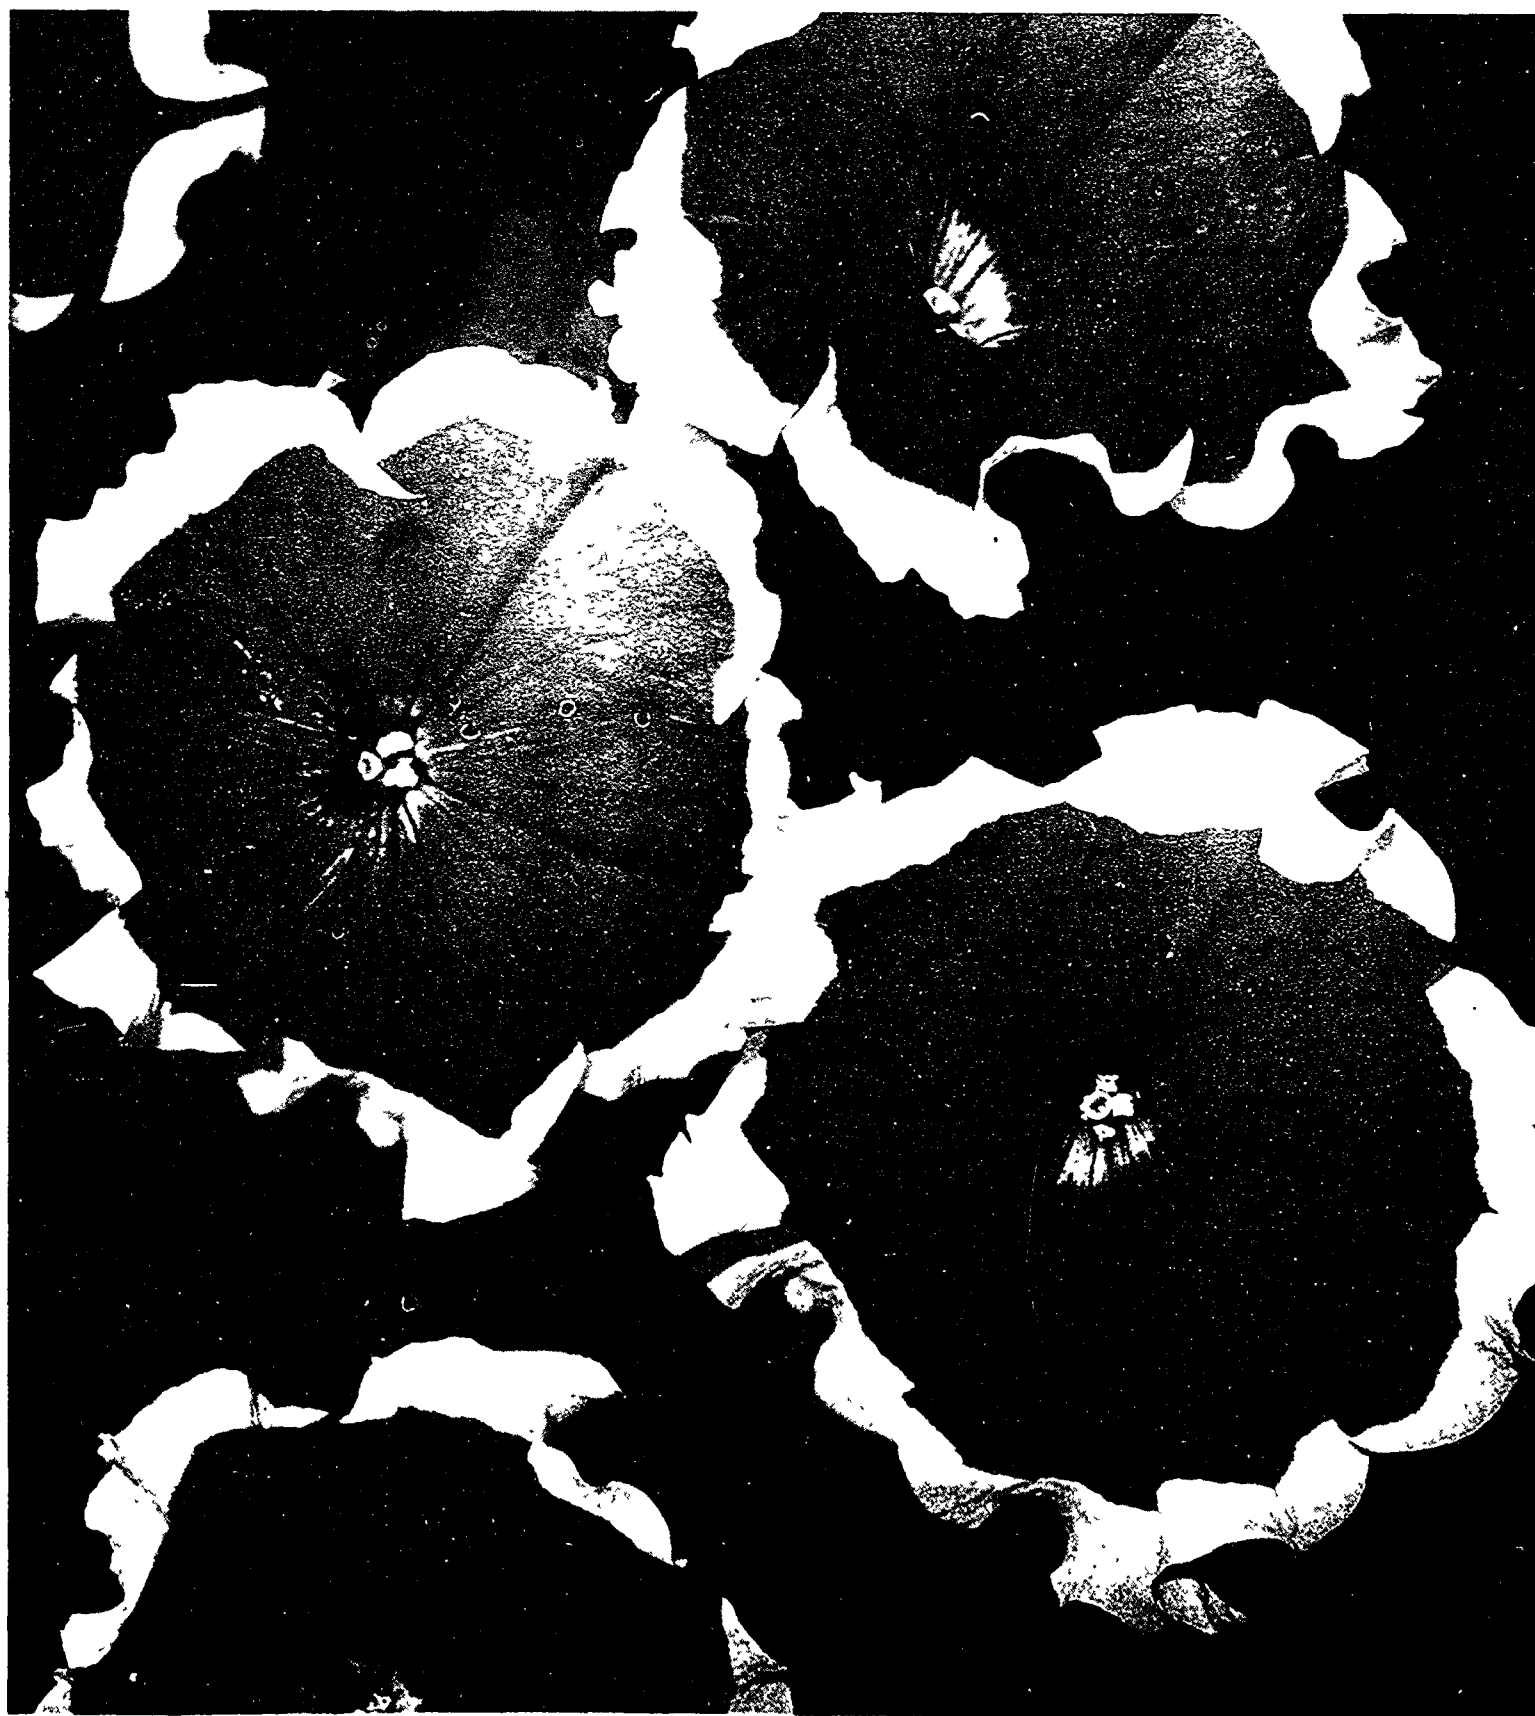

If you'd like to grow 'Red Picotee' in your garden you'll need to start the plants inside, 10 to 12 weeks before the last frost date, or buy them as bedding plants from your nursery.

'ACAPULCO SILVER' KOCHIA

Kochia is an annual whose tall, fernlike leaves look like soft green teddy bears and are set in motion by the lightest breeze. When fall arrives the foliage turns to shades of ruby and burgundy, giving it the common name of Mexican firebush.

The foliage of 'Acapulco Silver' is silver-tipped, as if the plant had been lightly brushed.

'Red Picotee' petunias are real attention-getters when mass planted in the garden.

R NEWS FLOWER NEWS

'Acapulco Silver' turns color considerably earlier than the standard kochia. The plants grow quickly to 3 to 4 feet and about half as wide. Kochia grows best from seed sown in the garden where the plants are to remain.

Kochia makes an ideal temporary screen.

'BORDER BEAUTY ROSE HYBRID' ZINNIA

'Border Beauty Rose Hybrid' zinnia is the 1984 All-America Selections winner in flowers. The dahlia-type, semidouble to fully double flowers are 3 to 3½ inches across, rose-pink in color, highlighted with touches of salmon. 'Border Beauty' produces a profusion of blooms from early summer through fall; the stand-out blossoms provide a lavish display in beds, borders, and mass plantings. The semi-dwarf, bushy, vigorous plants grow to about 20 inches. It was produced by W. Atlee Burpee Co.

ALL-TIME FAVORITES

In addition to the 1984 AAS winners, the Golden Anniversary Award winners were chosen from a ballot of 24 past AAS winners submitted to the public through over 4,000 garden communicators in their newspapers, magazines, and radio programs.

First-place all-time flower winner was 'First Lady' marigold hybrid, developed by W. Atlee Burpee, a 1968 AAS winner. Runners-up were 'Scarlet Ruffles' zinnia hybrid developed by Bodger Seeds, a 1974 winner, and 'Queen Sophia' marigold developed by Charles Gaboriau, a 1979 winner.

HOW TO ATTRACT BIRDS

Every year millions of Americans discover the pleasures of attracting birds. In fact, according to a recent survey by the United States Department of the Interior, the appreciation of birds ranks second only to gardening as America's favorite pastime.

Attracting birds can be remarkably easy; with a feeder or two stocked with their favorite foods, and a birdbath for drinking and bathing, you are virtually assured of persuading some to come close to the house. But bird attracting offers many different levels of enjoyment and challenge. Attracting the widest possible variety of birds, or selectively attracting your favorites, and persuading them to live and nest in your garden, can be a source of unending discovery and adventure.

SUPPLIES FOR ATTRACTING BIRDS

In response to the growing popularity of this hobby, a huge variety of equipment and supplies is available from bird clubs, at garden supply and home improvement centers, by mail order, and even at many supermarkets. Bird feeders come in all styles, from simple platforms and suet cages to elaborate glassed-in feeders that attach to the window.

High-quality foods, from seed mixtures to convenient, long-lasting suet-seed cakes, have been tested for their attractiveness to birds. Birdbaths can be purchased from a huge array, from hanging dishes for balcony or window to tiers of waterfalls and easy-to-install plastic garden pools.

Ready-made nesting boxes that really work are widely available for specific birds, from simple, rustic bluebird houses to complex "apartment houses" for Purple Martins. A host of related supplies can help to deal with any problems that might come up, from special squirrel guards to netting designed for protecting garden fruits and vegetables from overzealous customers.

As you become more involved in attracting and observing birds, you might find that you need some additional equipment. A pair of binoculars kept handy at your favorite viewing window will bring those shy visitors that hang around the fringes of your garden up close for better observation.

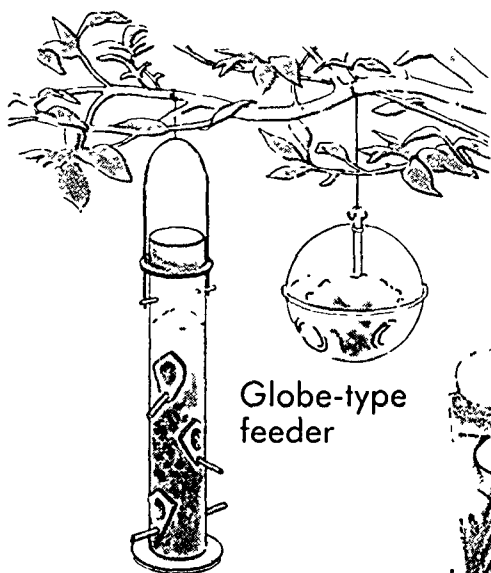

A field guide is essential to positive identification of a species, and many excellent ones are available. A good field guide should be pocket size and lightweight, strongly bound to withstand frequent use, with a stain- and water-resistant cover. Illustrations should be in full color and show distinguishing traits.

KEEPING TRACK OF YOUR VISITORS

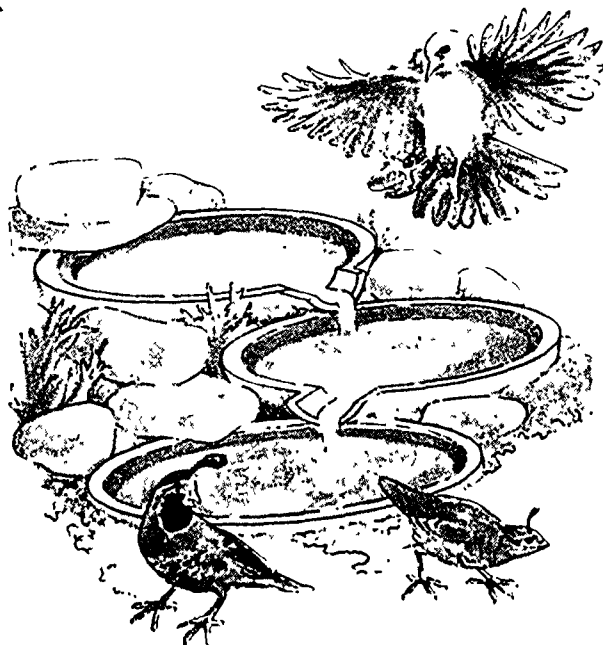

Well-kept records can greatly increase your enjoyment of your bird-attracting program. Records reveal what you are doing right and should continue, as well as unsuccessful approaches that are unnecessary or wasteful. Keeping notes also focuses your attention and gives your observations structure. If you want to get really involved, your notes can even provide valuable information welcomed by bird research organizations.

With a notebook, pen, binoculars, and field guide next to your favorite viewing window, you're all set. The gallery presented on the opposite pages shows a few of the many birds that may visit gardens in the Midwest. For more information, consult the new ORTHO book How to Attract Birds.
