Outside firm may analyze main reroute

By JAN JEFFRES
Staff Writer

The city is seeking quotes from outside engineering firms on the costs of investigating consultants JCK & Associates' reasons for rerouting a water main on Novi Road into Mystic Forest subdivision.

A Novi City Council majority of four Monday instructed City Manager Edward Kriewall to contact firms headquartered at least 100 miles from the city and which have had no prior professional contact with Novi.

"Let's not keep this gaping wound going. Some people have suggested it's time to move on. The way to do it is this way," Council Member Nancy Cassis said

An independent assessment was suggested by John Donohue, a lawyer retained by Cassis and Council Member Tim Pope.

"It's fair to ask and second guess a city consultant, but it's not fair to come to any conclusions regarding the wisdom of these conclusions without the expertise of an outside independent engineer," Donohue, the city attorney for Farmington, Farmington Hills and Walled Lake, said.

"A lot of the questions are not yet answered. A lot of the explanations that have been given raise more questions "

The issue was already the target of an investigation by City Attorney David Fried, who concluded that no impropriety had occured but called for a written policy for the consultants.

Voting against hiring an outsider were Mayor Matthew Quinn,

180-foot phone tower wins first approval

By RANDY COBLE
Staff Writer

Portable phone users in Novi, Wixom and on I-96 are one step closer to improved service. The Novi Planning Commission approved the preliminary site plan for a new 180-foot communications antenna submitted by telephone giant Cellular One.

Before the vote Oct. 21, however, commissioners debated whether the tower, which would be the sixth like it in the city, would be an eyesore and a safety hazard. Afterwards, the commission asked city staffers to look into the issue, particularly the question of whether the city can control the number and location of future towers

The commission gave the green light to the antenna's final site plan as well, subject to the Zoning Board of Appeal's (ZBA) approval of lot size variances the company has requested. If that happens, the matter will be passed onto the Novi City Council for final approval.

The antenna is needed, Cellular One representatives said, to ac commodate growing demand It is one of a network of towers the company has in the area to provide cellular phone service The proposed

Don't let goblins get ya, chief says

Novi Police Chief Doug Shaeffer has issued a list of tips for parents, children and people who will be driving their cars on Halloween night.

"Many youth and adults in our community will be enjoying the activities that go with (Halloween)," he said. "The Novi Police Department wants everyone to have fun, but to do so safely."

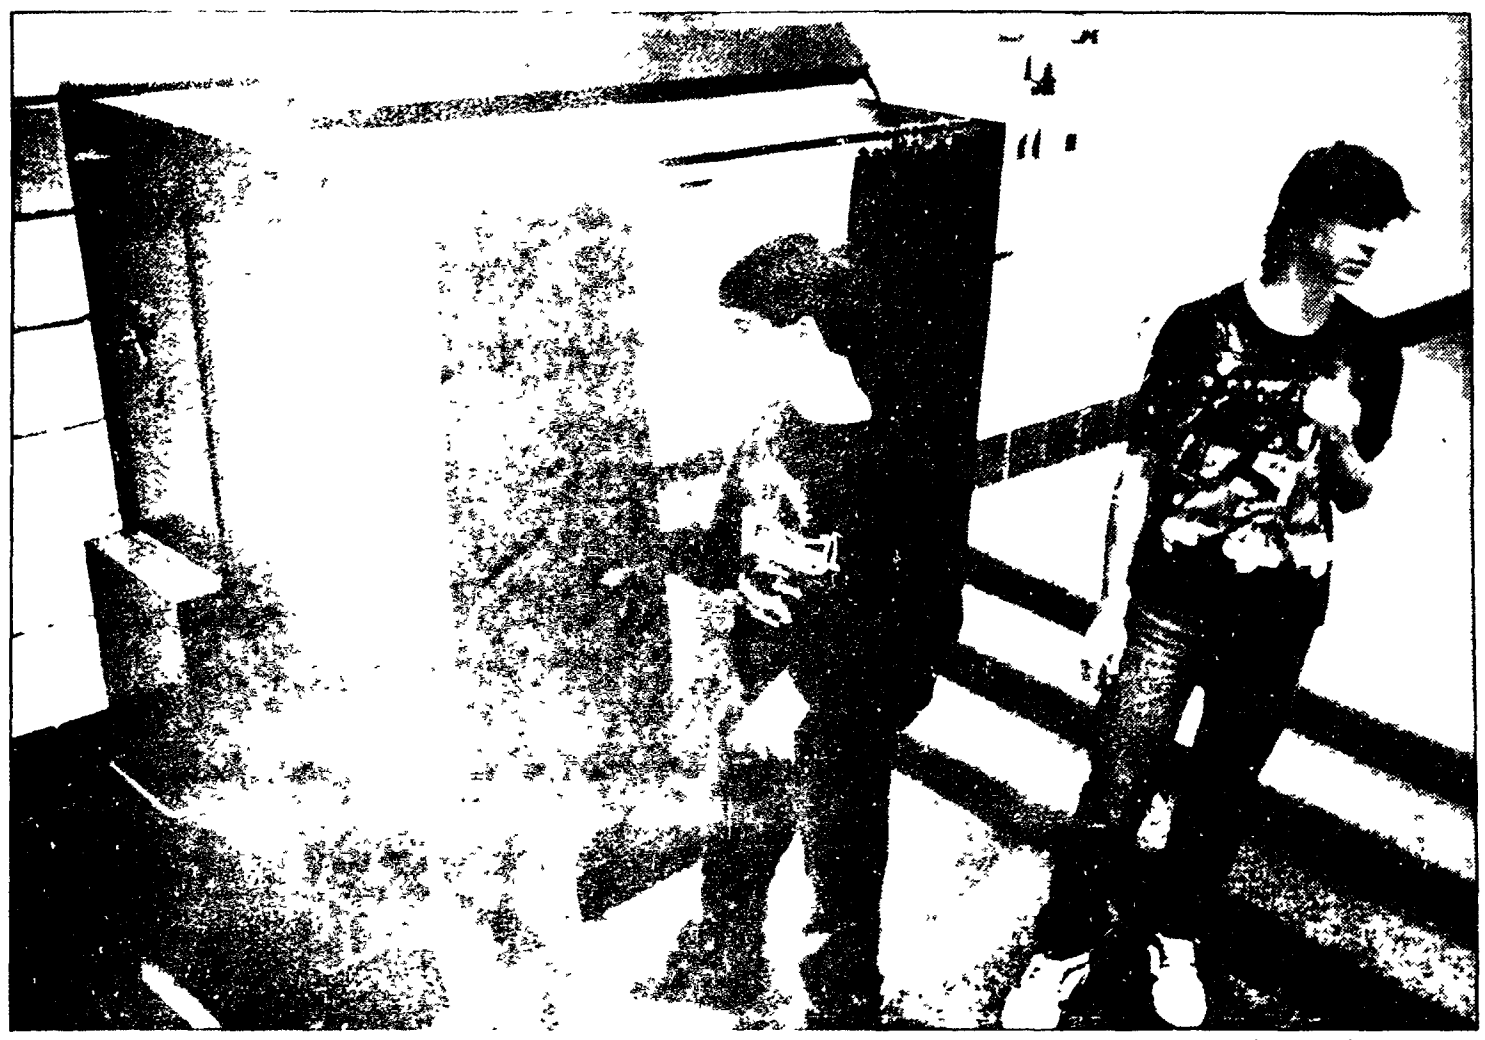

Recommended trick-or-treat hours this year are from 6 to 8 p.m.

Shaeffer noted that special care should be taken by anyone driving through Novi neighborhoods (or any neighborhoods) during and around the hours children will be trick-or-treating.

"There will be many children walking throughout the neighborhoods," he said. "They will be excited about the evening's activities. They may not look before crossing the streets.

"Costumes may be dark colored

Rock the vote

Students at Novi Middle School had the chance Tuesday to do what most folks don't — vote. The school held a mock Presidential election to instill the value and the power of the ballot in young people, with a borrowed voting booth. At left, eighth grader Sarah Schmidt casts her vote for Arkansas Gov. Bill Clinton. Above, eighth graders Keith Noblett (left) and Kyle Provo (right) show a seventh grader how to choose a candidate. Seventh and eighth graders had to register to vote (90 percent did so), and have made posters over the last four weeks for their choices, discussing issues and stands among the three candidates. Who won? School officials said that votes would be totaled Friday.

Trash proposal is carried to voters

By JAN JEFFRES
Staff Writer

Taking out the trash is one dirty job that will change forever, if a proposal for city wide waste collection meets with voter approval Nov 3

As Whispering Meadows resident Pam Flick sees it, the switch to mandatory curbside recycling will be fairly cheap — just under $150 per year — and more convenient if all single family homeowners in Novi are under contract to one waste hauling company.

"I think basically the new goal is to encourage people to do it (recycling) the easiest possible way. It's such an important thing to do. People agree, but people are basically lazy," Flick said

If voters go for it, a common sight on collection days along local streets will be standard trash bags accompanied by one large plastic bin to hold all recylables, plus clear bags for compost able materials such as lawn clippings and leaves.

This weekly pick-up would eliminate hoarding unsightly stuff like newspapers, plastics, glass and cans in a garage or basement until it's time for a trip to the recycling center behind city hall

> "I think basically the new goal is to encourage people to do it (recycling) the easiest possible way. It's such an important thing to do. People agree, but people are basically lazy."
> Pam Flick

"It's real, real easy People who are recycling now, they'll really appreciate it," Flick said. "That's why we chose the method of co-mingling. It doesn't take up much room You don't have three buckets sitting around."

Flick is one of the seven-member Novi Citizens Solid Waste Committee. The group was mandated by the City Council in February 1991 to find the best way to bring Novi single-family homeowners in line with fellow members of the Resource Recovery and Recycling Authority of Southwest Oakland County (RRRASOC.) Each community pays $50,000 membership dues to the consortium annually.

RRRASOC members such as Farmington, Farmington Hills and Southfield have already been engaged in mandatory recycling for well over a year.

RRRASOC has a 10-year landfill contract locked in. Haulers within member communities will be charged tipping fees which cannot jump upward rapidly during that time. If RRRASOC goes ahead with plans to build a materials recovery facility in Southfield, it will market the recyclables. Until then, each community's hauler is responsible for that job.

For this waste collection service, Novi homeowners would pay $138 per year, with an additional $2 sent to RRRASOC, which will be running the billing service, committee member Nancy Schubring says.

Included at no extra fee would be a twice-yearly hazardous waste collection day and the pick-up of large items such as couches, refriger-

Halloween? Not!

No, they're not a group of wanna-be trick-or-treaters — Liz Whittenburg, Steven Page, Tom Hanton and Ann Super are part of the Novi High School Choir's madrigal dinner to be held this December — a celebration of the holiday season. Diners will go back in time for a medieval banquet replete with a king and queen, courtiers, and minstrels. Accompanying the feast, prepared by the head chef of Schoolcraft College's Culinary Arts program, will be the golden voices of the choir, who will dress for the event in period costume. Westbrooke plans on hold for fourth year in a row

By RANDY COBLE
Staff Writer

As Yoga Bera once put it, "It's like deja vu all over again."

The Novi Planning Commission granted its fourth one-year extension for preliminary site plan approval to Westbrooke Place Oct. 21, a proposed hotel/office development that has been discussed for years. The facility is to be located on Grand River Avenue west of Beck Road, across from the Providence Hospital/office center.

The issue has been before the board for over four years, and it has granted one-year extensions for approval in 1989, '90, '91 and now in 1992. The facility, some say, will be well worth waiting for.

"Its scale mirrors that of Orchard Hill Place," said City Planning Consultant Brandon Rogers, referring to the glittering facility that lies near the Eight Mile/Haggerty Road intersection. Like that site, Westbrooke lies close to a major highway accesspoint — I-96.

Oakland County recommended the Westbrooke site for a potential district courthouse that would be located in Novi.

The delay has resulted from a number of concerns with the plan itself and the developers' need to secure financing in a depressed economic market. Some ideas for the facility have been scaled back or eliminated: its 1987 design had a 120,000 square-foot office complex and a hotel with a "quality restaurant" of 150 seats.

The current plan calls for a 135-room, five-story hotel that would employ 10 people, including a dining room, meeting room and lounge. The three-story office building would be 92,451 square feet. A parking lot of over 700 spaces would abutt the two facilities.

Westbrooke developers have submitted a master plan that calls for developing 67.5 acres on the site in five phases. On the drawing board after the hotel/office center (phase one), are further offices and service/commercial facilities.

For the moment, however, commissioners will watch and wait to see when the first phase of the project will come before them again.

Burglary suspect cases Novi while police forces case him

By CRISTINA FERRIER
Staff Writer

A week of undercover surveillance by four area police agencies led to the arrest of a "career burglar" Oct. 22.

Jay Coleman, 39, has been convicted three times on previous burglary charges. He was released from parole Oct. 1 after serving nine years on the most recent charge.

Last week officers from the Novi Police Department, Oakland County Auto Theft Unit and Narcotics Enforcement Team (NET), the Michigan State Police and Dearborn Police worked together to quietly observe Coleman as he cased out subdivisions in Novi, Brighton, Walled Lake, Wixom, Livonia and the Metro Airport area, said Novi Detective Ron Roy.

"We developed this guy as a suspect in the tri-county and Livingston County area, then we enlisted the effort of the other departments," he explained.

Roy said Coleman was definitely a "professional" burglar.

"We had to play him as loose as possible, following him, almost losing him but catching up to him again," he said. "This guy was very good, always looking over his shoulder and doubling back to make sure he wasn't being followed."

The burglaries, Roy said, may be drug-related.

"Officers observed him breaking into a home in Redford Township and followed him directly" to an alleged dope house in Brightmoor, Roy said.

Brightmoor is a neighborhood in northwest Detroit which, Roy said, is known for sale and use of drugs.

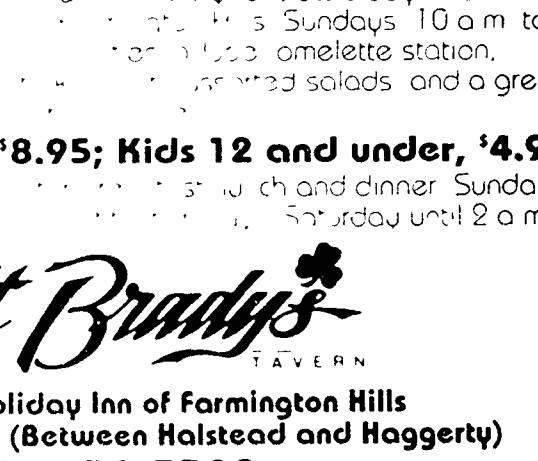

Coleman was arraigned in Redford 17th District Court Oct. 23. Roy said the case has been turned over to Redford Township police.

Novi Police are currently investigating Coleman's possible connection to at least one breaking-and-entering in Novi.

Quick-change artist 'out of work'

Novi police arrested a man suspected of a quick-change scheme Friday.

According to police reports, the man made three attempts to commit a larceny-by-trick at local restaurants, but was successful only at one.

Each time, police say, the man entered the restaurant and asked to fill out a job application, then purchased a soft drink with a $50 bill and tried to confuse the cashier by asking for different change.

A manager at Bob Evans called police after the suspect unsuccessfully made an attempt there. Police stopped the man as he was leaving the parking lot and arrested him based on several arrest warrants on file.

Upon further investigation police discovered that the man also attempted the same quick-change scheme at the Novi Road Big Boy and the Kentucky Fried Chicken in Pheasant Run Plaza, where he was allegedly successful.

Police say the suspect denied attempting a quick-change at Kentucky Fried Chicken.

Police News

VANDALISM: Novi police suspect three local juveniles in connection with two separate cases of severe vandalism to vehicles.

The first incident occurred Oct. 16. A 1978 four-door Chevrolet parked at Lakeshore Park was discovered severely damaged with broken windows, a stolen car stereo and damage to the dashboard and seats.

The following day, a Novi man reported that his vehicle, a 1987 GMC Jimmy, was severely damaged while parked in his driveway.

The rear right tire of the vehicle was punctured, both sides were "keyed" and sugar was in the gas tank.

Further, the man told police that he just chased away some male youths who were throwing tomatoes at the vehicle.

Police reported eventually locating the youths who, with their parents present, confessed to the vandalism.

EMBEZZLEMENT: A former Sears employee faces embezzlement charges in connection with the theft of over $1,500 merchandise and cash.

Police say the suspect, used a register believed to be under repair to ring up phony sales on three separate dates. He is also charged with returning a telephone stolen in that manner for a cash refund.

A security worker at the store noted unusual shortages on that particular register number, police said. A check revealed that the register was located in the repair room and not in use by the store.

LARCENY: A Streamwood, IL man reported Oct. 13 that four hubcaps were stolen from his Ford Aerostar van while parked at Chili's restaurant on Haggerty Road.

Police said the owner of the vehicle entered the restaurant with his family at 7:30 p.m. and returned about an hour later to discover the wheel covers stolen.

STOLEN CREDIT CARD: An employee at the Mobil station on Grand River reported a stolen credit card Oct. 19.

The employee told police that a suspect in a white Toyota with several passengers pumped $10 in gas into his car then attempted to pay with a Visa card.

As the employee was checking the validity of the card, the suspect got into his vehicle and drove away.

One of the employees at the station attempted to follow the vehicle, but stopped when the driver stopped at McDonald's and ran toward him.

Police checked the Visa card and confirmed that it was stolen.

Novi Briefs

Trial begins: Jury was selected and trial began Monday in Novi Police Detective Karen Koester's lawsuit against the City of Novi.

Koester charges that she was discriminated against and harassed during the two times she was pregnant while on the job as a road patrol officer.

The trial is taking place before Oakland County Circuit Court Judge Gene Schnelz.

A similar suit by Novi Officer Deanna Hall is expected to come to trial early next year. In a highly-publicized complaint a year ago by Hall to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), she charged that she, too, was harassed while pregnant on the job.

Correction: An article appearing in the Oct. 8 issue of the Novi News incorrectly stated that the curbside recycling proposal on the ballot next Tuesday would include the levying of a tax to pay for the program. In fact, the recycling program and city-wide trash collection service will be paid for through a flat per home fee. Although the figure is not final, it is estimated the cost will be less than $150 per year.

Forester certified: Novi Forester Chris Pargoff recently completed the Certified Arborist examinations administration through the International Society of Arboriculture (ISA). The purpose of the ISA certification program is to improve the level of knowledge among those in the tree care profession. It identifies those who developed, through education and examination, a thorough knowledge of tree care practice.

Safety tips listed for trick-or-treaters

When your kids don their costumes and pick up their candy pails this Halloween, make sure they stay safe. A recent Novi Woods Elementary newsletter offers these tips, passed along by the Red Cross Youth Services and the National Safety Council.

Tell your child to bring home all treats before eating any. Inspect them carefully.

Fruit can be a real hazard — sharp objects such as pins can be lodged in them. Check all fruit your child receives carefully. If necessary, cut it into sections, or throw out any you're unsure of.

Full-size candy bars such be cut into sections and checked for foreign objects as well.

Candy with loose or torn wrapping should be discarded.

Have your child carry a flashlight for safety, and only a flashlight — lanterns or candles are not a good idea.

Do not let your child ride a bicycle when trick-or-treating. Excited children may forget traffic safety rules, and costumes can make it difficult to operate the bike safely.

Keep costumes light, bright and well-fit. If your children will be outside during or after dusk, have them wear a reflective safety vest or put a few strips of reflective tape onto their costumes. You can let them design the pattern or shape of the strips themselves.

Look for flame-retardant materials when purchasing or making a costume.

Costumes that are too big or loose-fitting pose hazards such as tripping or tearing. Garments with long or wide capes, sleeves, skirts and pants can be a danger.

Masks can impede your child's vision from traffic. A painted face is a better alternative; be sure to apply a layer of coldcream before the face-paint goes on, to make cleanup easier.

Remind your kids to go up one side of street at a time. Zig-zagging across thoroughfares is very dangerous, especially at night.

It's a good idea to accompany your child when he or she is trick or treating, and try to go as part of a group. A group of children accompanied by a number of adults is best for safety.

Remind your children to obey all traffic rules and to be alert.

Meijer beefs parking lot security

By MIKE TYREE
Staff Writer

The Meijer store at Eight Mile and Haggerty in Northville Township prides itself on offering shoppers 24-hour convenience and variety.

But the store's location and selection have long attracted a less desirable customer, the type of shopper who prowls the sprawling, crowded Meijer parking lot in search of a quick buck.

Some of the crimes committed there are petty: stolen hubcaps or scratched car doors. Other incidents are more serious, ranging from automobile larcenies and purse snatchings to assaults, indecent exposures and car thefts.

Indeed, two people have met violent deaths on Meijer grounds within the past 18 months. In April 1991, undercover police shot to death an alleged cocaine dealer in the Meijer lot. And a Meijer loss prevention officer was murdered just inside the store in August, when a 16-year-old alleged shoplifter jammed a knife in the employee's heart.

Reeling from those and other acts of violence at some of its 70 Michigan and Ohio stores, Meijer officials now admit parking-lot crime is a problem.

As a result, the Northville store will be the fourth state site to receive an infusion of security measures meant to provide better protection — and peace of mind — for the Grand Rapids-based store's customers.

In the next few weeks, Meijer will install security cameras to scan the parking lot and alert employees and customers of crime and potential danger. It will equip its cart collectors and baggers — those who spend considerable time in the parking lot — with pager-like devices that can signal for help when the employee witnesses trouble.

And Meijer will install additional lighting to cut shadows from some of the hidden corners of the lot. The changes are popping up because Meijer wants its customers to feel safe, said Jack McCarthy, vice-president of loss prevention for Meijer.

"We're concerned about what's taking place in the parking lots," McCarthy said Thursday. "I think we're going to focus on parking lots more than in the past."

Northville is not the only site to suffer from serious crime, nor is it the first to witness beefed-up security. An abduction and rape from a Kalamazoo store prompted similar security moves at two Kalamazoo sites and one store in Battle Creek, said McCarthy. He said Northville ranked "slightly above average" in chain-wide crime statistics.

Township police are frequent visitors to the Meijer store. Complaints registered by Meijer shoppers or employees fill page after page of police reports. The vast majority of vehicles reported stolen in the township — 24 stolen and three unsuccessful attempts in 1992 — disappeared from the Meijer lot.

Police Chief Chip Snider welcomed word of an increased security commitment.

"I think through Jack McCarthy, Meijer is taking every effort they can to ensure their store is safe . . . for the Northville community," Snider said.

McCarthy said the store is owning up to problems in its parking lots in part because of adverse publicity in newspapers and other media. He said the new security measures are "consumer-motivated."

Three or four cameras will be mounted near the Northville Meijer entrances within the next three to five weeks, McCarthy said. The cameras will scan the parking lot and store staffers will constantly watch color monitors to detect problems. Customers can look at the monitors to check on their vehicles, and videotapes of crimes may even be available to police for criminal prosecution, McCarthy said.

Meijer is experimenting with additional safety steps, as well. Store-owned and operated security vehicles will soon cruise three Michigan store parking lots, McCarthy said.

Northville will not host a security vehicle for now, but could in the future, after Meijer determines the effectiveness of patrols.

McCarthy sees the new security items as a goodwill gesture toward Northville and its shoppers.

"We're a community member, and we're going to be here for a long time," he said.

Novi's oldest art gallery will present a special one-woman show this weekend.

Meadowbrook Art Center, 41200 Ten Mile, will show the works of Katherine Pfeffer from 2 to 7 p.m. Sunday, Nov. 1. Refreshments will be served.

Pfeffer is a noted Michigan artist and has been painting Michigan in all its seasonal splendor for as long as she can remember. Pfeffer has aquired several local awards, has sold her work to various corporations, and has created numerous commissioned pieces including magazine covers for different corporations and newspapers.

She has organized and directed several art exhibits throughout the area, and very much enjoys hanging shows. She has owned and operated a picture framing shop for the past 15 years which has also kept her creatively in tune.

She has studied Zen and applies it to everything she does. She said, "Zen is a wonderful tool of understanding with which to live . . . I live and breathe art and find time to absorb myself in creating everday. I truly love this Earth and the challenge to try to capture the feeling and the expression of an aura that catches my eye."

Pfeffer has enjoyed traveling in the past few years and feels equally at home on the east and west coast. She commented, "I would like to see and paint everything in between and live until I have painted it all. I cannot imagine anything stopping me."

Perot

AN OPEN LETTER TO ANYONE WHO LOVES THEIR FAMILY AND THEIR COUNTRY

THE PEROT 92 CAMPAIGN WOULD LIKE TO ASK YOU A SIMPLE QUESTION:

DO YOU WANT YOUR CHILDREN TO LIVE IN AN AMERICA CRIPPLED BY DEBT, WHERE THE STANDARD OF LIVING IS MUCH LOWER THAN WHAT YOU ENJOY TODAY?

THE NATIONAL DEBT IS ALREADY A MONSTER.... AND ITS GROWING. THIS DEBT LOAD HAS THE POTENTIAL TO DESTROY OUR ECONOMY. BUT, IF WE ACT NOW,WE CAN FIX IT.

THE LIFE BLOOD OF OUR NATION IS BUSINESS.... YET BUSINESSES ARE LEAVING OUR COUNTRY. THEY DON'T HAVE TO... WE CAN FIX IT.

ROSS PEROT OFFERS REAL SOLUTIONS FOR THE TOUGH PROBLEMS, INCLUDING HEALTH CARE AND JOB SECURITY.... AND MOST IMPORTANT:

ROSS PEROT GETS THINGS DONE!

Please note that the "experts" you see or hear in the media are usually individuals that have party affiliations. An ex- senator or a former governor will always back their party's candidate and downplay an independent. Remember, Ross Perot has no party , so the media doesn't show us many "experts" who support his ability to win. However, even these "experts" often support the Perot programs and admit that Ross Perot has touched the hearts of the American people. Why then can't he win? If you feel he is right, then Vote! There are millions of you out there. Also, Ross Perot is on every ballot. His name may be in strange places and/or small print on some ballots. Don't be manipulated. Vote for the candidate that YOU want!

PLEASE CONSIDER YOUR CHILDREN AND THEIR FUTURE .

THERE ARE MORE INDEPENDENT VOTERS THAN THERE ARE REPUBLICAN AND DEMOCRATS COMBINED.....YOU CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE

ROSS PEROT CAN WIN .... YOU ARE NOT WASTING YOUR VOTE!

Town meeting debates tax relief proposals

By SHARON CONDRON
Staff Writer

State treasurer Douglas Roberts made no guarantees at the Northville PTA's Legislative Action Network Town Meeting Wednesday night that Proposal C would spur the new economic growth the state needs to fund the tax proposal.

Even though Proposal C known as Gov. John Engler's Cut and Cap plan seeks economic growth to fund the proposed tax relief plan which calls for a 30 percent cut in school property taxes in the next five years, Roberts said he makes no promises that will happen.

"We may not get the growth," Roberts told the sparce audience that attended the Town Meeting last week. "I have no guarantees about that but I am not proud of the (state's) economic history."

Roberts who's been a state official for the past 20 years said he's frustrated with the state's economy. Since 1966 he said he's watched the state's unemployment rates remain equal or higher than national averages. The fact that taxpayers in Michigan pay higher total tax burdens than most residents in other states is also nothing to write home about.

"The data is overwhelming that something is fundamentally wrong with the economic condition of the state," he said. "For 25 consecutive years Michigan's unemployment rates have been above national averages. This is something that begs for discussion. Even in our best year we didn't even have a good or equivalent unemployment rate.

"We aren't growing or creating jobs," he said. "We have to do something to change that or our children - my children - will have to get a job outside of the state."

Roberts who spoke in favor of Proposal C was one of three panelists who participated in Wednesday's tax debate at Northville High School sponsored by LAN. He was joined by Scott Schrager, senior committee analyst of the House Taxation Committee, an advocate of Proposal A (HJR-H), and David Olmstead who presented the latest version of the Olmstead/Kearney principals. The O/K proposal is the only proposal discussed Wednesday that is not on the November 3 general election ballot.

Roberts talked mostly about the need to jump start the state's economy by reducing taxes. He said he believes Michigan would see economic growth if tax levies were reduced for residents and for businesses.

"Our number one problem is the fact that we have high property taxes. That discourages development," he said.

That is why Roberts said he believes in Proposal C. Under the tax relief plan, school property taxes would be reduced by 30 percent over the next five years Ten percent of that cut would be felt by the schools in 1993. In addition, Proposal C seeks to cap property assessments at three percent or at the rate of inflation. If voters pass Cut and Cap and it becomes a constitutional amendment the State would have to reimburse the 30 percent property tax cut to the schools

That proposal differs from the HJR-H proposal (Proposal A) which seeks to limit home property tax assessments to five percent a year or to the rate of inflation, whichever is less.

As a drafted spokesman for Proposal A, Schrager agreed with Roberts about the state's economy, but said A approaches the problem by limiting property assessments rather than cutting taxes.

"We are facing difficult times in Michigan. For the past two years the state has ended its fiscal year in a deficit," Schrager said.

"A is really a choice," Schrager said. "And it's a choice you might chose to make rather than (Proposal) C. A controls assessments without the disadvantages of C."

Schrager said the biggest disadvantage of C is that in order to fund it and reimburse tax cuts to schools, there will have to be budget cuts in other state programs including potential further cuts to education.

"A is a better proposal than C," Shrager said. "I just hope that voters use their best judgment and make the best decision for themselves as homeowners. A is better for homeowners and it doesn't present the jeopardy to state programs that C does."

In contrast with Roberts, Schrager said he believes the number one problem in the state is rising assessments for homeowners. That's why he backs the HJR-H proposal which puts a cap on assessments without making any cuts.

Since Cut and Cap affects school finance and protects Robin Hood schemes by constitutional amendment, Schrager said A might be the better choice for Northville taxpayers who have been adversely affected by tax base sharing.

"C affects school finance and it locks into the constitution subsidaries from the state for wealthier districts."

While both A and C provide tax relief, the Olmstead Kearney concept seeks to reform school finance, eliminate Robin Hood tactics, and calls for the state to make good on its earlier promise to fund public education with the lottery proceeds. In addition, its authors Olmstead and Phillip Kearney hope to provide tax relief by reducing millage rates and getting to state to return to funding 50 percent of public education as it had in the 70s.

"We are not going to be passive and wait for Lansing to act," Olmstead said.

As a co-author of the O/K principals, the veteran board member of the Detroit Board of Education said he has convinced others to adopt his attitude toward school finance reform and tax relief.

"Four years ago in the Detroit schools we were close to state receivership," he said. "Since then we've been able to turn around attitudes. We have also come in to an agreement about Robin Hood acts.

"That (tax base sharing) has caused a greater disparity in per pupil expenses and in millage rates in some areas . . . All we are saying to the state is keep your promises."

The three supporters spoke briefly about their proposals and then responded to written questions submitted by audience members.

Most of the spectators' questions were directed to Roberts quizzing him about Cut and Cap and its impact on schools. Residents wanted to know how he and the state expected to fund the tax cut and reimburse the schools given its current deficit.

"The schools can go ask for money in millages. The only difference is now they have to ask for it," Roberts said.

That comment raised the eyebrows of taxpayers, school administrators, and board members who were seated in the audience.

Roberts reiterated his point that Michigan needs to revive its business base by cutting taxes. He said C would be the catalyst spurring that economic growth.

"Look at California. In 1980 Michigan lost two Congressional seats. California gained seven. People went to California and jobs were created," he said.

Four square off for 11th Congressional seat

By JAN JEFFRES
Staff Writer

The departure of veteran lawmaker William Broomfield from politics has made for a lively race for the new 11th Congressional District seat.

Previously designated as the 18th District, boundaries were redrawn in the apportionment process earlier this year to realign the district to include much of southern, western and central Oakland County, including Novi, and portions of northern Wayne County, including Northville.

The district was the scene of a hotly contested, and dirty Republican primary, in which State Senator David Honigman and former circuit court judge Alice Gilbert squared off against each other. Eut it was Republican Joe Knollenberg who survived the GOP contest.

And now that the race has reached the general election, coming up Tuesday, Nov. 3, the field is more crowded than ever.

Facing Knollenberg is Democrat Walter Briggs, who has run for the seat before in an unsuccessful bid to unseat Broomfield. Additionally, the race has attracted Libertarian Brian Wright and Natural Law Party candidate Henry Clark.

The Novi News interviewed the four candidates in a debate-style session with all present. The questions and their responses were as follows.

Could you tell me what organizations have endorsed you, given you donations?

KNOLLENBERG: Would you believe the Michigan Milk Producers? That's one I didn't even solicit. I've got the Livonia Police Officers Association, the POAM (the Police Officers Association of Michigan). There's the Michigan Chamber of Commerce, the U.S. Chamber of Commerce. The National Rifle Association. . .

BRIGGS: The American Association of Independent Accountants and Public Accountants, the UAW, the AFL-CIO, the Michigan Education Association, the National Education Association, the Sierra Club, the National Abortion Rights Action League, the Wayne County Sheriffs' Association.

CLARK: No endorsements and no contributions. My campaign is all self-financed. We're trying to get recognition first and contributions next.

How much money do you plan to spend?

CLARK: Less than $5,000.

BRIGGS: We're looking in the range of $250,000.

KNOLLENBERG: We'll be spending in the general election about $350,000.

WRIGHT: The Libertarian Party is the only organization I've had an endrosement from. I haven't spend any money.

What is your stand on abortion?

CLARK: Education is more effective than legislation. We think the goal is to prevent the maxiumum number of abortions and the way to do this is to raise the level of consciousness of the individual. It's the right of the woman to choose. Government's role is not to legislate it, it's to provide knowledge.

How would it do that?

CLARK: Through supporting education programs in the schools and through the health care system.

Totally hands off on the part of the government? If a woman wanted an abortion at eight-and-a-half months, is that permissable?

CLARK: It really has to be between the woman and the doctor, it's not the government's role to legislate.

What would be the government's role in education, would it be birth control education, morality education?

CLARK: You could do a spectrum. Birth control information is very important, risk control, explaining the dangers and the options. Our program involves transcendental meditation in many areas and this is one area it has shown to approve moral reasoning, on a voluntary basis.

BRIGGS: I'm pro-choice. I believe it's a woman's decision and I support the Freedom of Choice Act, which would make Roe v. Wade the law of the land.

Is there an upper limit at which a woman could have an abortion?

BRIGGS: I believe there are trimesters. In the first trimester, yes; with free discussion with the woman and her doctor in the second trimester.

The third would be not allowed at all?

BRIGGS: Yes.

KNOLLENBERG: Is that true? My understanding was it was totally open. You're the authority, but I thought it was nine months.

I'm against abortion, I'm for adoption. I failed to mention that I have the Right-to—Life endorsement. The exception is (when) the life of the mother (is threatened).

What would happen to all these additional children who might be born?

KNOLLENBERG: Adopt them. 50,000 children were adopted in this country last year and there were 1.6 million abortions. There's plenty of room for adoption.

What if there were 1.6 million babies up for adoption, how would you ensure they were placed in good homes?

KNOLLENBERG: I think the reason there's 1.6 million abortions is because almost 45 percent of people who have abortions are doing it for birth control purposes. If there weren't a permissive status that allowed for abortion, you wouldn't have as many. You're a long way to even getting close to treating the situation of the number of adoptees that could be placed.

BRIGGS: There are a large number of unadopted children, particularly handicapped and minority children that are not adopted every year.

Prior to Roe v. Wade, there were a tremendous number of back-alley abortions. How do you address that problem?

KNOLLENBERG: In the sitaution where it's the life of the mother in danger, I would allow abortion. Nor would I encourage any kind of law that would penalize the woman. There's already a law on the Michigan books that precludes prosecution of the woman. The woman is the victim, not the criminal.

Would you favor any education on alternative forms of birth control?

KNOLLENBERG: Sure, it's out there now. It should be stressed to a greater extent than it is. The starting point is in the home. We have a lot of situations where youngsters come out of the home and they're ill-prepared to deal with what's out there on the street. There has to be more education, more understanding coming out of the home.

WRIGHT: Freedom of choice. I can't see any argument for the government being involved in that decision. It's not the government's job to control a woman's reproductive system. I'm not an advocate of abortion out of convenience but once you start that kind of control of other people, you get on a real slippery slope. In Romania, they had womb police going around to make sure everybody got pregnant and stayed pregnant and of course Romania has thousands of orphans and thousands of orphanages.

I don't like to see this type of patriarchal system where father knows best, then that father has a gun pointed at a woman's head.

If you are in favor of that kind of choice, is there a point where it's too late? Would you allow it at eight-and-a-half months?

WRIGHT: I think morally, probably I would. Legally, no. It's a woman's choice.

You'd allow abortion even when the lady starts to go into labor?

WRIGHT: I don't want to get into the fine print of that. If somebody wanted to bring an action in that case, it would be up to the court to decide.

Working from the general assumption that the federal deficit should be cut, if you were going to cut it, where would you cut it first? Where would you cut it hardest? And how would you keep this up in the face of special interest groups coming out of the woodwork and protesting?

BRIGGS: The first thing we have to do is demonstrate that Congress is going to be fiscally responsible. Congress has to start by cutting its own budget, cutting its own staffs 25 percent, cutting its own pay, ending the free meals, ending the junkets and then ending the pork barrel projects they pass all the time. We need to cut the defense department. I don't believe that we need to pay for the B-2 bomber, SDI, the Sea Wolf submarine. We need to go through every system and look at whether it makes sense. We ought to question the duplication amongst the military departments to see if we can't get better coordination of effort and reduce some of the costs.

Other areas we need to go after on an immediate basis, if you look at the government examples, there are 60 different adult education programs scattered throughout different departments. We need .to bring those kinds of things together. That's one example of the waste that goes on. We need to be aggressive in getting con trol of that.

There are $100 million in back taxes we could collect. In terms of specific programs, you go through line by line looking at that area. There's welfare. We need to reform welfare so it's effective in taking care of the long-term dependents of that system rather than continuing the cycle of the disadvantaged. We have 25 percent of the women on A.D.C. who are on there for ten years or longer. We need to reform that system so it moves people off

We need to go throught the budget and look at every program and evaluate its success and its usefulness. Those that don't work, we've got to stop funding them. Those that do work, like Headstart, we need to continue those.

When you look at cutting programs, you're also cutting jobs. How would you reabsorb these people into the economy?

BRIGGS: If you say we're going to cut spending in an area of defense, say the Sea Wolf sumbmarine, we're not going to get every dollar from those cuts because you need to transition people from what was a military job to a civilian job. We need to work with companies to encourage them to develop new projects that are appropriate for the civilian economy. That is more appropraite than saying to them we're ending the spending right now on the project and now all these people are are going to end up in unemployment.

We have the existing facility, we have the manufacturing and intelligence to pick up a new project and focus on a project for the civilian economy. An example is rail systems in this country. We can build high-speed rails rather than buying them from the Europeans and the Japanese. We can focus on those kinds of things as opposed to military technology.

CLARK: We think the nation really needs to focus on major solutions to cut the deficit and also lower taxes and stimulate then economy Even if we were to cut down all the depart ments of the government except the defense department and the entitle ment programs, we would only save $250 billions of dollars, tops. The deficit is $400 billion. Although we support major programs like cutting the budget of Congress 25 or 50 percent, these are just small details which don't even address the problem.

What we need to do is focus on cutting the government spending. Initial measures would be to implement the Grace Commission Report. We could save $140 billion by doing everything they recommend. Even this is only a third of what we need just to get rid of the deficit.

We need to focus the country's health care system and our education system on preventative medicine. This will cut the need for health care by one-half. It will save the government almost $200 billion. It will save individuals as much as $400 billion a year. This will allow the companies to use that money that they saved for expansion. Other ways to save money are better programs for the rehabilitation of prisoners. Eighty-five percent of the crime is committed by repeat offenders. One out of every four households is affected by a crime every year. It costs billions and billions of dollars to the individuals and the government. By focusing on transcendental meditation, which is proven to work, it can save $30 billion a year.

A major problem that effects the whole country's economy and also contributes to the deficit is unemployment. By implementing measures that can stimulate the eco nomy by saving the country dollars and allowing us to lower taxes, it can decrease unemployment. We feel our programs can decrease unemployment by one percent a year. That will save the government $240 million in welfare payments and lost revenues.

We have to revitalize the educational system. The government is losing $70 billion a year in costs associated with illiteracy and poor job skills. One out of every four students in America is a drop out. In Japan, it's four out of every 100.

Is that a role of the federal government, to improve education?

CLARK: The federal government can improve education by providing the knowledge to the educational system. All around the country there are individual schools, individual programs that are very successful. Other schools need to know about the programs. It wouldn't hurt the federal government to do a little publicity about them. We promote postage stamps, we should promote education a little bit.

WRIGHT: All these things that Henry's talking about, they sound very nice. I have no problem with a voluntary activity toward that end of improving education. I'm a wary of somebody coming along and saying they have the true and correct way of living and through the federal government we're going to make sure that everybody knows about this. That kind of gets into endorsing a state religion. In my approach, people of Henry's persuasion would be perfectly free to advocate what they wish in terms of education in a free market.

There's not going to be any government imprimateur that I would advocate. In fact the only activity of government that I would advocate would be the protection of individual rights, life, liberty and property. There is no role for government in education. That should be something we do on our own, that we do in our communities, that we pay for.

If you want to do the best thing possible for people, you let them keep their money. So it is a significant problem that has developed over the last hundred years, more lately over the last decade or two. You have to make some fairly radical cuts. Certainly defense warrants at least $100 billion a year. You can privatize social security within four or five years. Certainly all the entitlements. I would definitely phase them out.

I'm in favor of what Engler is doing in Michigan although I think he has had bad PR. He hasn't put too much of a human face on it. Ultimately, what he is doing is a very benevolent thing. He is letting people keep their money it and he is getting people off the dole.

I'm not going to presume to tell you this is the best way too live. I'm simply going to let you live. The government ought to secure that right as long as you don't violate the rights of others.

In terms of the budget, I don't have any numbers for you but I think we are talking $100-to-$200 billion a year for the next several years. You do it as quickly as possible without pulling the world in on our shoulders.

KNOLLENBERG: We have too much congressional spending, we have too much taxation, we have too much regulation. Being a small business owner myself, I sense that the average American works about four and half months, until the middle of May, before he makes anything for himself. He just pays his state, local and federal taxes. We have to reform Con gress, but we have go beyond that. We have go beyond the point of cutting staff 25 percent. You have to go to the point of passing a balanced budget amendment because there is nothing that is going to reinforce the idea of a Congress, which is in essence really above the law.

Right now, they make laws for the rest of us but they are not laws that they are forced to abide by. Yet, it has been said that just the OLSHA rules that Congress violates, they'd be into millions and millions. I look for a general downsizing of congressional staff and a downsizing of committees. You've got over 300. Forty-five years ago, in Harry Truman's time, you had 45.

The foreign affairs committee moved from six in 1960 to over a 100 today and we had some very difficult problems to face back in 1960. All kinds of excess in government spending, government has been doing it for years but most importantly over the last ten years. People will tell you the Economic Recovery Act of 1981 didn't work. It did work. Taxes were slashed. They did improve the economy. The problem was congressional spending didn't have a lid on it. For every $1 they took in, they spent $1.20. Spending has to be controlled.

There's several studies, the Grace Commission, the Packard Commission, the Heritage Foundation, there's countless studies in which numerous congressman have gotten together to expose the waste, the fat, the excess.

You've got a little thing like the Home Heating Tax Credits which were produced back in the early 1970s. It was created because it was thought gas would go up to $3 per gallon. That hasn't happened. But the program still lives and is pumping out millions of dollars. There doesn't seem to be the ability to turn the screws and sunset these programs.

Defense you can cut down, but as the world's only superpower I think we have to remain vigilant, remain strong and maintain the right kind of military force so we can oppose that threat if anyone comes to arise against the rest of the world or ourselves.

I believe we can get government off our backs, control spending, pass a balanced budget amendment, have a line item veto which allows for the reduction of pork. It's going to be tough, but we can do it.

CLARK: I have a rebuttal against an allegation that was made. Education is one of the roles of government to play. There's nothing that we propose that isn't voluntary. It isn't in any way associated with any religion.

Knollenberg said he favored the balanced budget amendment and line item veto. I'd like to know, around the table, whether you favor or oppose these.

WRIGHT: Line item veto, yes. Balanced budget, provided it's at much lower levels. I don't favor a balanced budget if it's a balanced budget if it's going to be a $2 trillion budget.

BRIGGS: I believe so strongly that we need to get this deficit in control and balance the budget that I've taken a pledge called 'lead or leave,' which would say that if in four years we can't cut the deficit in half, from $330 billion to $165 billion, then I will not seek re-election. In terms of the balanced budget amendment, we have to start right away not until the ten years it will take to enact that and the five years to get it in place. I want to start right away trying to balance the budget.

In terms of a line item veto, I agree that Congress and Washington in general is out-of-control. The president has failed to submit a balanced budget in the last 12 years and in 11 of those years, Congress has returned to the president a budget that has had lower spending in it than the president submitted. We have a general problem in Washington that is going to require more than a line item veto to do that job. It's going to require the individual responsibility of all the Congressmen.

My other concern is the line item veto swings the balance of power far too far in the other direction. If you look at the appropriations bill in the education department as a single line, you can veto that entire department in Congress and Congress could be held hostage. You could trade a Civil Rights act off for vetoing the education department.

Just to clarify, you said no to both the balanced budget amendment and line item veto.

BRIGGS: Yes.

CLARK: We agree that line item veto would put too much power in the executive office. The seat of democracy in the United States is Congress. The executive branch has gained more and more power ever since the country was founded. The solution is congressional reform so that bills that are written are to the point, there aren't additions that are extraneous. With respect to a balanced budget, even if we were to cut all government programs except for defense and entitlements, we still couldn't do it.

We say the only hope to revitalize the economy is to balance the budget and create a surplus. The only way to do that is when the American people need less care. We need American people to become healthier so they need less health care. We need American people to focus on rehabilitating criminals so they don't go to prison and learn how to be better criminals. They should learn how to become better citizens and not need to prey on people.

We're saying balance the budget absolutely. We have programs that can do it.

Let's get to the philosophy of government issue. What do you think the federal government should do for its citizens, what is it's basic role?

WRIGHT: The United States Constitution. If anybody wants to read it and study it, that's essentially my philosophy of government. There might be a few extra things in there that I might not agree with. I don't fundamentally believe in the moral legitimacy of taxation. I think taxation is theft. It's like burning witches at the stake and the divine rights of kings, it's something we'll eventually grow out of. We can have a voluntary system. That's visionary.

At the moment, if you simply look at the constitution, in particular the tenth amendment, which is the last of the Bill of Rights, it essentially says that if it isn't stated explicitly here in the constitution, then the power is reserved to the states or to the poeple respectively. That amendment is a significant restriction on what government ought to be able to do.

If you read the constitution, there's nothing in there about free cheese, there's nothing in there about drug wars, there's nothing in there about a welfare system such as we have today, certainly not social security.

The elastic clause which is in the main body of the constitution is freely interpretated and that's why there is a legal pretense for a lot of this legislation. But I think that has to be read in terms of the tenth amendment. If the tenth amendment was not intended to restrict the meaning of the elastic clause to explicitly what's stated in this constitution already, then they would not have written the tenth amendment because it would have been redundant or contradictory.

That's essentially my philosophy of government. If you want it, you pay for it. You don't relinquish your social power. We can do just about anything we want to and you don't go around forcing people to pay for it for us. If you let people have the money that's stolen from them today, you would have a rich, prosperous, benevolent society.

Can you clarify for me? You said voluntary. Do you mean like a user fee system or do you mean 'I'll donate to the cause if I feel like it.'

WRIGHT: A little of both, if you're talking in terms of government. In education for example, you would pay for a service. In terms of forming of government, you can implement that through contract fees, since that's legal enough to reinforce. That might not satisfy a Libertarian purist but it would satisfy me. Contract fees, donations, lotteries. If government can find some way of protecting individual rights, then you'd have a very much smaller government and one that's in control and not in charge.

You mentioned the tenth amendment and you talked about rights reserved to the states. The last time states rights were a major issue in this country, it was a smoke screen behind which racists in the South were hiding. Would you respond to that?

WRIGHT: The tenth amendment basically states powers. If the federal government doesn't have this power than it has reserved to the states or the people respectively the right to make this legislation. In terms of the Bill of Rights, there are several that have been federalized. I think you have to interpret that in terms of economic activity, that isn't a justification for tyranny. If you wanted to know our philosophy, just read the works of Thomas Jefferson.

KNOLLENBERG: One-fourth of America's earned income goes to finance congressional spending. That's excessive. What we need from the government first of all, it has to work with the state government. In this United States of ours, a lot of what takes place is controlled by the individual states. To the extent the federal government is involved, I would see it as a sort of a shield over that. I would get involved only to regulate certain situations which the state's individually cannot.

Certainly, the common defense, which comes out of the constitution, is one I'm very concerned about. I'm concerned about our status in the world right now and our remaining strong in the face of what has taken place in the break up of the Soviet Union.

I see the federal government as lean, efficient, effective, but not to get into the business of resdistribution through taxation to address what government thinks is best for the people. That's going a bit too far. That's why I'm in favor of tax cuts. The only way you can generate new kinds of employment increases is get government off the back of businesses, particualarly small businesses and allow them to hire people and put them back into taxpaying jobs.

Government functions best when it functions least. I'm talking about the federal but it also applies to the state government. It's a partnership between the state and local governments, but I don't see the federal government becoming the great distributor of what they call money, they call it investments, but it's really taxes and it comes out of your pocket.

BRIGGS: The federal government has a role in terms of protecting defense but also internally within the economy, in terms of maintaining the infrastructure that commerce uses to get the job done. The government has a role to help us as individual citizens, to protect us in terms of the information we're given. One of the best things the government passed in terms of regulation was the Truth In Labeling and Truth In Lending Act, giving us the ability to know what it is we're actually buying rather than relying on the goods and packaging and what the manufacturer wants to tell us. That's an example of the role the government ought to play.

Government, particularly in light of the changes in the world economy, has a role as a partner with business, to work to help businesses develop new technology. We developed the VCR here in this country but nobody was willing in this country to build it. Because the Japanese government was willing to say to industry, 'we want to make sure you do build that' and provided the guarantees, that product is now being built in Japan.

We need an industrial policy for the nation, one that is not driven by the government but works together with business leaders to develop a strategy of where we want to be, as well as an environmental policy, to develop some consistency in the environment. These our things our government should do and should work with the citizens and businesses to develop them.

Can the government do things like develop an industrial policy and still cut the deficit? That's going to cost money to do all that.

BRIGGS: It depends on how you participate in this partnership. If you sit down and say do we want to be the automobile industry, if we do what's the best thing we can do working with autombile suppliers and manufacturers to make sure as a country we stay in the automotive industry.

If businesses want to invest, we will help facilitate that. You sit down and determine what the best way is to ensure that investment takes place. I'm not talking about directing. We're talkng about working with business to make sure they have the capital necessary.

CLARK: When we founded the Natural Law Party, we used the name natural law because we felt that was what the founding fathers were thinking of when they said everybody has the inalienable right to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. We quote Thomas Jefferson a lot because we thought in order to make this work and in order for everyone to live as self-reliant citizens and respect one another's rights, universal education was an important aspect. It depends on self-reliant citizens who don't go against natural law in their behaviour, in other words who don't make a lot of mistakes. The reason government has grown so big is because people are out there busy making mistakes.

That's why so many of our program focus on education and things like preventative medicine to help get people back in tune with natural law so they are self-reliant. Government as a result can be greatly downsized because people are living more in harmony.

The founding fathers warned about the dangers of political parties, that get between people and the government, that become elitist. People are no longer in touch with their government. The government is out of control.

How do you define natural law?

CLARK: We define natural law as the laws of nature that are identifiable by science.

Are you saying things like survival of the fittest?

CLARK: No. That is philosophy. When we say natural law we mean the laws of nature.

Other than the general economy, I think the most important issue in the local area would be the gas tax and funding of road improvements. Would you have an increase in the gas tax to improve roads? If not, how would you fund road improvements?

KNOLLENGBERG: I would not be in favor of that, a Ross Perot type gas tax idea. I am not a tax type person. I'm against raising taxes. Obviously, the roads need to be taken care of.

Locally, there's the county, there's the municipality and the state. And yes, more has to be done in that regard.

There is such a thing as a highway trust fund, which as you know is sitting up there but nobody is getting any money out of it.

They say out road and bridges are crumbling, but if you compare it globally, you'll find that they are not that bad. We can improve it. Italy and France and Germany have huge taxes on gasoline and their major road systems are good. And to a major extent, even their secondary roads aren't bad. That's not always true with France and Italy, but more so with Germany. The same thing is true with England — huge tax.

So I don't know that a tax is at all the idea. It has to be something other than a tax.

Do you have a proposal in mind to address that?

KOLLENBERG: Like I say, you've got local, city and state that can get involved too in this process. There needs to be a partnership to join with the feds on this thing. But there are already a great deal of funds that have been siphoned off to the trust fund. The funds are there already. That is a Congressional pill that gets kicked around as sort of football. To say tax is the answer, I don't think tax is the answer.

CLARK: Our general policy is to reduce spending across the board, cut taxes and stimulate the economy. With respect to the gasoline tax that Mr. Perot is advocating, we feel that it does have some merit in that it shifts more of the cost of driving the car on to the person driving it. We actually encourage stimulating interest in the alternative, non-polluting fuels. Once we have been able to reduce spending, cut taxes, I would favor an increase in the gas tax to make the cost more competitive and to make it more reflective of the actual cost to society. It wouldn't have to go more than 10 cents a gallon over five years, as opposed to 20 cents a gallon over five years.

But the purpose of it would be to raise money to support the infrastructure and to pay for the environmental clean up that is necessary because of grossly inefficient nature of the internal combustion engine.

One of the reasons our party was formed was to put known solutions in place. And there are a number of known non-polluting alternatives to internal combustion engines. You can argue whether the government should get involved in promoting the business, but I see no reason why it should be subsidizing inefficient engines. We should move away from that and small gas tax might help.

BRIGGS: The roads in this county are one of the biggest complaints that most residents have. It is something that works both locally and federally and at the state. But one of the things that we have to recognize is that the use of the highway trust fund requires a certain amount of matching funds which our local governments, state and county don't have available. We are all in a bind right now.

But I believe it is important to commerce in this area and in general in this country that we begin to take those highway trust funds and use them. That is one of the investments that government is responsible for.

We also need to look in this area at mass transit. We have a very limited mass transit system. In effect we have none. And creating road that continues to create congestion that continues to create sprawl seems inappropriate.

The money is there. It's allocated in terms of the highway trust fund, but it's being kept from being spent because we want to hide the deficit, the debt. My concern is that the congress and the government have yet to demonstrate that a tax raise would actually be used in the way in which it was intended. I would oppose an increase in the gas tax at this point.

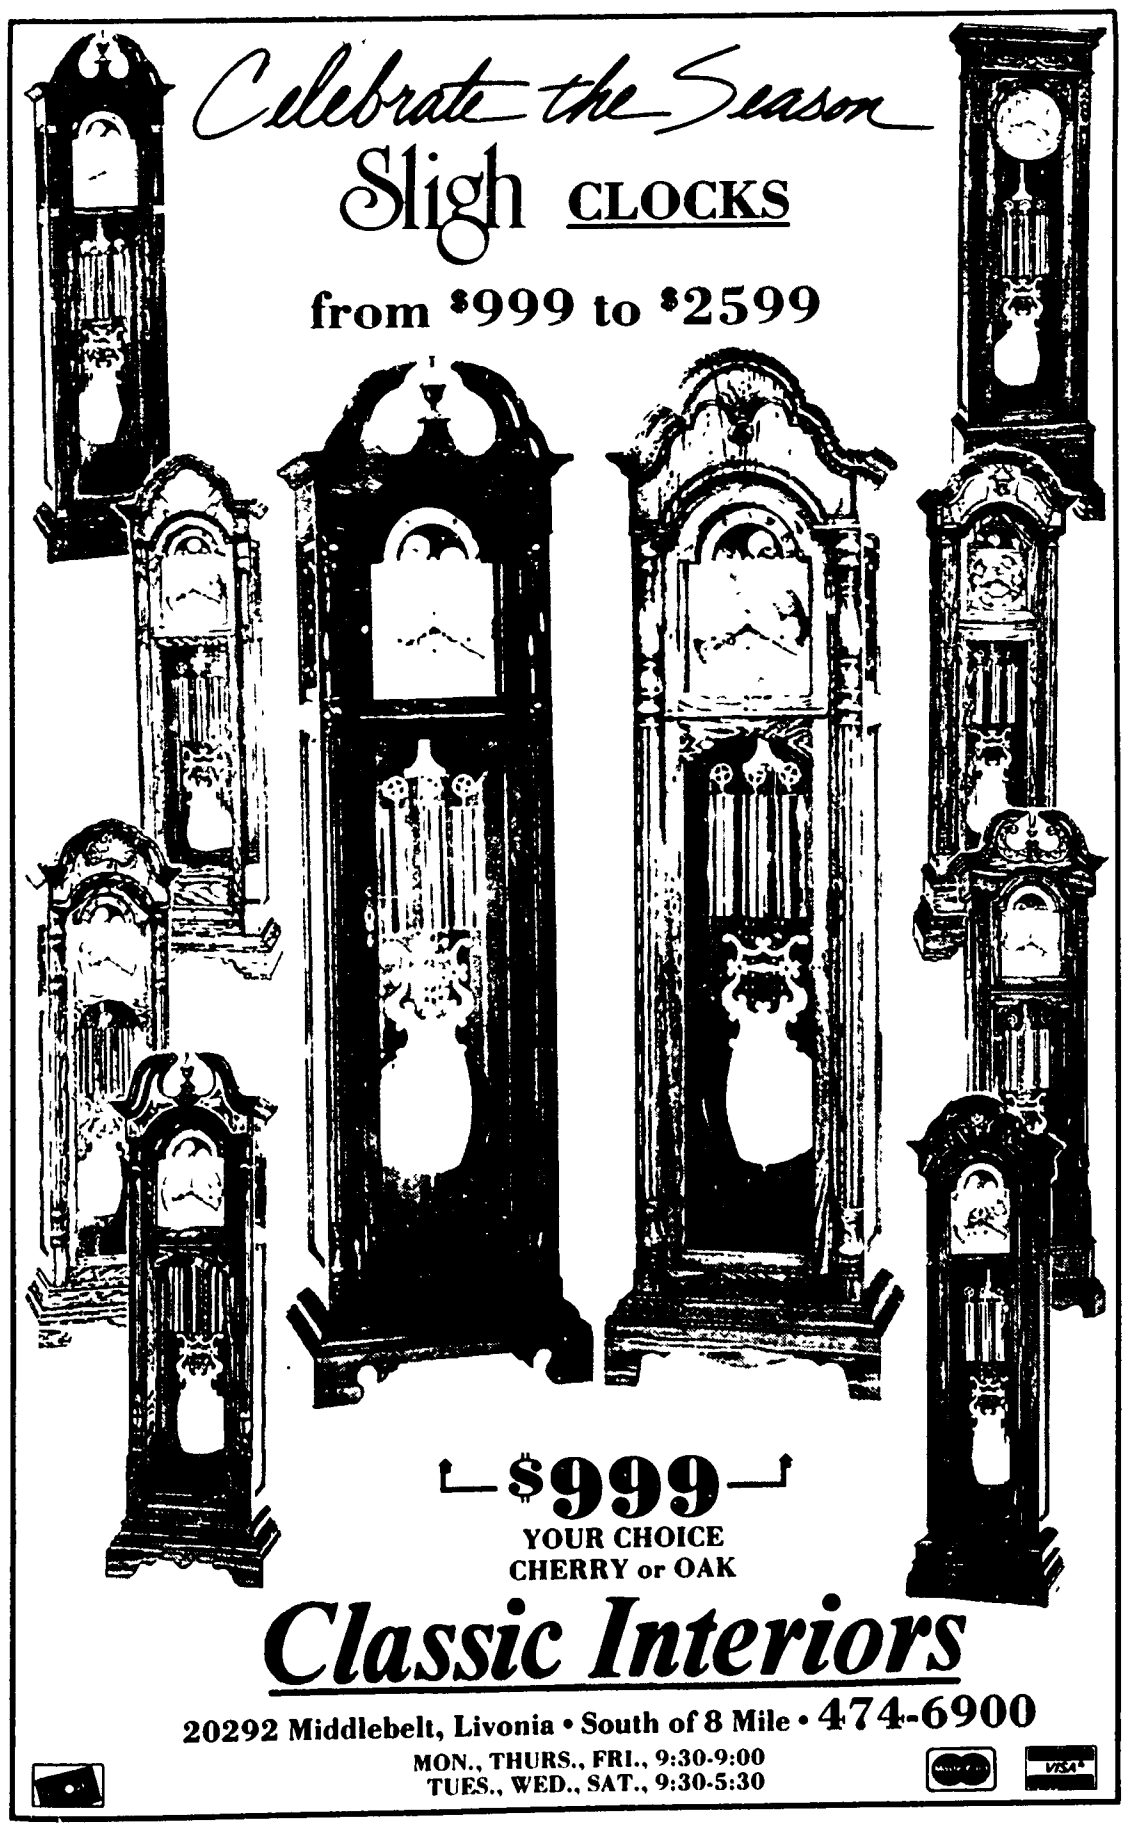

The other problem is that the gas tax is extremely regressive. Those indiviudals who need most to use gasoline to drive can least afford to pay that gas tax.

WRIGHT: Within the transportation industry there are a lot of opportunities for privatization. In terms of the immediate situation, I kind of agree with Henry. If they were going to pass a 10 cent tax increase that wouldn't bother me much. It would discourage a certain amount of degradation of the roads.

But you don't have a real market system. It is fairly easy to envision how the interstates could be turned into tollroads. This is a way of controllinguse and getting prices and usage in line with resources. It's a matter of the availability of resources and that the people who use them most should pay for them the most. And it would discourage unnecessary use.

In terms of local roads, I'm not real clear on the exact way that you could go about privatizing local roadways, secondary roads and city streets. But it is clear to me that the system that enables Miejer Thrifty Acre to show up on Haggerty Road, with all that blacktop and all those storm sewers and the transportation system required to get people to and from the store, that we are subsidizing them. In a sense, they get a free ride.

So what I'm saying is that the costs are distributed among the population and the roads are really bad. There needs to be alternative transportation systems. It is kind of difficult to do that when you really don't have a market because the state is responsible for the highway system and they have created this by fiat. They want property for I-96, it's theirs. Essentially they have created a transportation system by fiat and there is no market to support privatised transportation systems.

Cut and Cap draws fire from schools, city

By RANDY COBLE
Staff Writer

Some are for it and some are against it but a lot of Novi voters are undecided on Proposal C — the ballot initiative to "Cut and Cap" property taxes across Michigan.

Voters across the state go to the polls this Tuesday (Nov. 3). Of the four ballot proposals they pull the lever on, Proposal C has sparked the most debate.

Specifically, Proposal C would phase in over five years a 30 percent reduction in the portion of property taxes that go towards school operations. That's about 65-70 percent of your total property tax bill. In Novi last year, for example, the school district received about 62 cents of every property tax dollar collected. The City of Novi got about 21 cents for each dollar, Oakland County about 15 cents and area community colleges about two cents.

The non-school portion of property taxes would not be cut under proposal C. The school operating portion would be cut by 10 percent in 1993, 15 percent in 1994, 20 percent in 1995, 25 percent in 1996 and by 30 percent every year after that.

The second feature of Proposal C is the "cap." It provides that the annual assessment increase for a property in Michigan can be at most 3 percent or the rate of inflation, whichever is lower. If your home, for example, in 1993 is worth $100,000, under "Cut and Cap," the most tax assessors could increase its value by (and thus tax you for) would be $3,000 or the rate of inflation.

All this applies, however, only as long as the property stays with one owner. When sold, a property is reassessed at its current market value — then the 30 percent cut is applied again, and the cap goes into effect at the new level.

Proposal C has constitutional language to require the state to reimburse school districts for the money they will lose under the plan.

A main backer of the proposal C is Gov. John Engler, who campaigned two years ago on a pledge to cut property taxes. Proponents of cut and cap say that the plan will do several things:

- It will reduce Michigan's property taxes, which are well above the national average.
- The lower taxes will spur investment and lure businesses to Michigan, bringing jobs and tax dollars.
- Jobs mean taxpayers, as well as the businesses that employ them paying taxes in the state as well.
- This influx of revenue to the state will more than make up for money the schools will lose under the plan, and the state is constitutionally mandated under Proposal C to make up that loss.

Opponents of the plan say that cut and cap is a bad idea because of the following:

- Growth will not happen as predicted. To maintain current levels of services, people will just see other taxes rise.
- Low property taxes aren't a cure-all. Businesses have left the state due to poor economic times, despite receiving tax abatements, such as the Willow Run plant.
- The state would have to make up the money that school districts lose, but could cut drastically the amount of state aid beyond that figure.
- Legislators wouldn't pay back the wealthier districts (who are entitled to the most money), even if they had the money, since most of them represent poorer districts.

Those involved in the Novi Community Schools District are almost uniformly against the plan. The Board of Education has unanimously adopted a strongly-worded resolution against Proposal C. Their opinion is shared by many district parents.

"I'm dead set against it," said Orchard Hills Elementary PTO president Mary Bohme. "It will have a very detrimental impact, and I'm not about to help it along."

Bohme said she did not believe the state would reimburse the schools as the plan requires. "They don't have the money now — where are they going to get it from?" she said, and added that she thought the projected growth wouldn't take place.

Novi High School's representative to the district's Inter-School Council agreed. "There are too many negatives to the plan," said Sally McInnes "I'm very much concerned about the effect on our schools, and so I'm voting 'no.' "

Novi City Manager Edward Kriewall said he opposed "Cut and Cap" because it is inequitable and is not a comprehensive solution to the problems the state faces. "They're ill-conceived," he said. "They set the cap versus the reality of what a property's actually worth

"The (projected) growth is a big unknown," added Kriewall.

Despite thes indicators, however, the fate of proposal C is far from clear. Several voters contacted by the Novi News about Proposal C said they hadn't yet made up their minds how they would vote. The final word will come Nov. 3.

Proposal A differs from its more popular sibling

By RANDY COBLE
Staff Writer

Proposal A, a statewide ballot initiative to cap homeowners' annual assessment rates, has been often lumped together this election season with Proposal C — the much-talked-about "Cut and Cap" property tax relief plan.

But the two plans are very different, as are the effects on Michigan each would have.

Proposal A is a creation of the state legislature. Legislators saw the need for property tax relief, but couldn't agree on a method to achieve it. The compromise they reached was Proposal A: a ballot proposal that if approved would limit the amount homeowners' property could be reassessed for tax purposes each year.

Members of the state House and Senate agreed as well to freeze property tax assessments for 1992. Backers of A and especially Proposal C — Gov. John Engler foremost among them — say that if the ballot initiatives don't pass, property owners will see huge assessment increases when the freeze expires at the end of this year.

Proposal A differs from C — the "Cut and Cap" plan — in that it doesn't cut property taxes, and its cap on assessments is higher than C. Proposal C offers a 30 percent cut in the portion of property taxes paid for school operating expenses phased in over five years. Schools in Novi last year got about 62 cents of each property tax dollar collected. The rest of the money — which goes to local, county and community college expenses — isn't affected by Proposal C.

Also unlike Proposal C, it caps only homeowner's property tax assesments — C caps all classes of property tax assessments. If it passes, A would limit the amount your property could be re-assessed every year to five percent of its current value or the rate of inflation, whichever is lower. If you own a $150,000 home, for example, under A the most that could be tacked onto its value in an annual tax re-assessment would be $7,500 or the rate of inflation. Proposal C's measure is three percent or the rate of inflation, whichever is lower.

Under both plans, however, all bets are off when a property is sold. When there is a change of ownership, the property is re-assessed at its current market value, and then the cap kicks in again at the new level.

One local official said he opposes both. "The state is putting the cart before the horse," said City of Novi Mayor Matthew Quinn. "It should have first found the revenue to pay for a cut and then decreased property taxes proportionately. Instead, it has these imaginary funds that are going to come from the two proposals."

Quinn added that in his opinion, both plans are "stopgap measures." Lansing politicians have hawked Proposals A and C, he said, "so they can come back and say 'look what I did for you.' In two or three years, the person that has to repair the damage done will not be happy."

Voters undecided on term limits

By RANDY COBLE
Staff Writer

One of the four statewide proposals on the ballot this election day concerns an issue that is a staple of campaign politics — term limits. And there seems to be considerable uncertainty as to how some Novi voters will treat Proposal B come Nov. 3.

Michigan will decide if it wants to restrict the number of terms to which its state and national representatives can be elected when voters pull the lever on Proposal B this Tuesday.

The proposal would amend the state constitution to limit the time an individual could serve in the following capacities:

- U.S. senator, two six-year terms in any 24-year period;
- U.S. representative, three two-year terms in any 12-year period;
- Governor, lieutenant governor, secretary of state and attorney general, two four-year terms each;
- State senator, two six-year terms;
- State representative, three two-year terms.

"I'm against proposal B," said state Representative Willis Bullard, R-Highland. "We have term limits right now, and they're called elections." Bullard said that whether B passes or not, politicans will represent their districts. "The views of the legislator will continue to be the views of his or her constituents."

"People who are backing this," he added, "will be unhappy in a few years if they think that this will change anything. The public is mad and wants to do something, but this won't change anything."

One Novi voter disagreed. "I'm voting for that," said Mary Bohme. "You can get a lot of dead weight up there. Term limits can get some new blood in there." Bohme added that she "definitely" favored term limits at the state level, and probably would support Congressional limits too.

City Mayor Matthew Quinn said he couldn't support B as written, but favors the idea of term limits.

"If it was only for state legislators, I could support it," he said. "But by our limiting our (federal) congressional representatives, we're causing ourselves even more loss of power than we've undergone in recent years."

A plan he felt appropriate, Quinn said, would be an amendment to the U.S. Constitution limiting congressional terms and allowing states to limit their own legislators' terms as well.

Sally McInnes, another Novi resident and voter, reflected what many contacted by the Novi News felt.

"I'm not sure how I'll vote on that yet," she said. "On a federal level, I'm not sure how much would be accomplished (by having them). It takes so long to gain power there."

Several other Novi residents contacted by the Novi News said they were still undecided how they would vote on the subject. The final decision will come Nov. 3.

Schools oppose tax proposals

By SHARON CONDRON
Staff Writer

Believing the school district would lose upwards of $25 million if voters say yes to Proposal C next week, the Northville Board of Education Monday night passed a resolution opposing Proposal C and A.

The board's actions follow the lead of the Northville Chamber of Commerce and ADVOCATES for Quality Education which have all passed similar resolutions opposing the two tax proposals.

Superintendent Leonard Rezmierski said with the board's unanimous approval of the resolution, Northville enjoins the majority of school districts inside Wayne County that have taken positions against the two proposals.

"We've looked long and hard at our Legislative Action Networks proposal package," he said. "And I am aware that 30 of the 34 districts in the county have passed proposals against A and C and that an overwhelming number across the state have done the same."

Rezmierski said his chief objection to both proposals is that neither one makes any provisions for changing how public education is funded. He called for a change in the state's approach to funding education.

"We need to have a change. . . and we need to have adults deal with it (property tax relief and school finance reform) as adults," he said.

According to district Business Manager John Street, if voters pass Proposal C which seeks to cut school property taxes by 30 percent over the next five years, the district would lose about $25 5 million by the fifth year. Should C pass, Northville would see a $2.4 million reduction in property tax revenues in the first year. The figures climb in the four consecutive years with a $3.7 million loss in 1994 95, $5 million in 1995 96, $6 5 million in 1996 97, and a $8 million cut by 1998 99

That's a big cut in revenues for a district that relies on property taxes to fund 96 percent of its general operating revenues

School administrators and board members were reluctant to buy into the idea that a surge in economic growth in the state would pay for all that Proposal C propagates Even though advocates of Proposal C, the Cut and Cap plan, argue this tax relief plan would stimulate new growth and pay for itself, school officials are cautious and say the concept raises serious questions.

"Do we have faith in that growth and would it guarantee the $2.4 million we'd lose," Remierski asked. "We would be in serious jeopardy if we started the school year next year with a $2.4 million loss.

"It raises serious questions and could cause additional cuts in other state-funded programs that could cause further harm to us," he said.

Board treasurer Robert McMahon agreed.

"The question is where is the state going to get the money to reimburse the school districts," McMahon proposed. "Anaylists say the state could be in debt to the tune of $900 million next year . . . Proposal C is really just an attempt to downsize government."

ADVOCATES for Quality Education issued a press release earlier this week taking a similar stance. It is the groups' first official stance since forming earlier this year.

ADVOCATES contend Proposals A and C make no effort to end inequities between districts and allow Robin Hood schemes like tax base sharing acts to continue. Schemes like those, they say, take vital tax revenues away from out of formula districts like Northville and give them to poorer in formula schools.

Group hopes voters won't trash proposal

ators and Christmas trees.

"There's no limit to the amount you can put out. They do expect there to be a lot the first few weeks because people save it up," Flick said.

The committee in fall 1991, after placing the city-wide hauling plan out for bids, settled on a contract offered by Duncan Disposal as the best deal.

Novi was preparing to begin mandatory recycling on July 1.

Then a wrench was thrown into the works by Patrick Anderson, a leader of Taxpayers United. Anderson contended that a recycling fee the city would have imposed was a tax in violation of the 1978 Headlee Amendment. The group threatened to sue Novi if the city did not place the issue on the ballot.

Novi, unlike its RRRASOC neighbors Farmington Hills and Southfield, agreed to let the voters decide.

Meanwhile, Duncan held firm on its proposed contract prices. If the proposal is victorious, the city council still has the right to accept Duncan's offer or rebid the job, Schubring said.

Flick and Schubring, a Birchwood subdivision resident, have been busy putting their case to meetings of homeowners associations. The game plan is to start recycling first with single family residential, then ease apartments and condominiums and mobile home communities into the system.

As part of its work, the citizens committee surveyed 35 homeowners' associations and learned that trash collection in Novi — predominantly without recycling — ranges from to $213 per year for Timber Ridge subdivision to $96 per year at Carrington Green. The average cost is $151, without recycling, Schubring said.

"Pebble Ridge is really supportive. They really were looking forward to it. Some of them are paying $200 a year. That was without recycling. I talked to one person who was paying $110 per year, that was without recycling. Now, he'd be paying $150. He said it was worth it to get recycling because he was tired of taking it to city hall," Schubring reports.

The only visible opposition Schubring and Flick say they have seen to the ballot issue is in the form of flyers being distributed to Novi homeowners by another hauler, Hornbeck Sanitation Services of Ann Arbor, which would be displaced if the proposal wins voter approval.

According to a flyer circulated by Hornbeck, residents will be forced to pay for the service whether they use it or not and will see tax increases, low quality trash collection with no competition. The firm is offering to lock in their prices at $132 per year for one year.

"They're saying it's not competitive and that's not true at all. This isn't a lifetime contract. They want to come back now and encourage us to vote no when they didn't even try when we asked for bids," Flick said.

"How would residents not use the service? They have to have trash removal."

The city-wide contract would come up for new bids every three years, Schubring said. That's why big firms such as Waste Management Inc. have been supportive of the committee's goals, Flick says.

The transition to one hauler will have an added benefit, according to Schubring: "We'll keep a lot of traffic out of the subdivisions. There will be only one hauler one day per week. You won't have 10 haulers."

Flick and Schubring say that based on the response they've had from residents, the future of the program the committee has outlined looks bright.

And if all systems are go, the citizens group will stay together on a long-term basis to evaluate how the contract is working. As more consumer goods come in recyclable containers, the day may come when residents will send far fewer loads for the landfill. Novi might then find it economically feasible to move to a pay-by-bag user fee, a program which the committee found was too costly to adopt at present.

Another plus she says, is that recyclers will have greater assurance that all the work they do rinsing out bottles and peeling labels off cans won't go to waste. The recycling center at the Novi Civic Center has had problems with "contaminated loads" when the materials are not properly cleaned or when the wrong stuff is dumped into the bins. These loads end up rejected by the firms which purchase the goods.

But what if residents just say no?

"The option that exists is that Novi can write an ordinance to require recycling in which case, costs for everybody would increase. Then the hauler who you're using, they say, 'you're paying this now, now we tack on another $5 per quarter.' If Novi doesn't require recycling, the federal government is going to. A city-wide contract keeps the prices down," Flick argues.

Schubring says that the committee has talked to representatives from the other municipalities which led the way on recycling, Farmington Hills, Bloomfield Hills, Southfield, Walled Lake and Wixom.

"We learned from their mistake, so we should have one of the best contracts around," she said.

On the citizens committee with Flick and Schubring are Debbie Meyers, Esther Miller, Charles Staab, JoAnne Zimmerman and former Lakes Area Residents Association president Sarah Phelps.

Recycling containers would become a familiar sight along Novi roadways on pick up day if voters accept a city proposal on the ballot Tuesday, Nov. 3.

Engineer to probe main

Mayor Matthew Quinn, Mayor Pro Tem Hugh Crawford and Council Member Robert Schmid.

"If you keep trying hard enough you'll get one who tells you the answer you want," Crawford told Cassis, who proposed the resolution.

Schmid said it was too early to seek outside help.

"I don't think we're at the stage, frankly, just because a council person says there's been wrongdoing," he said. "I am opposed to spending a lot of money to investigate a situation that may not be warranted. We spend money like it is going out of style."

Donohue exonerated the developer's role in the matter. A partial owner of Mystic Forest is Robert Harris, who is the head of South Hill Construction Company, which won the water main contract from the city.

"I don't believe there's an issue that South Hill is the problem here," Donohue said. "South Hill was a smart, intelligent business operation throughout this whole episode in my view . . . It's an issue of the city engineers and the city council relationship."

The city council in March 1992 passed on the easements as part of its consent agenda, which is typically approved without discussion. But the new water main path was not specifically brought to their attention by the consultants.

Council members such as Joseph Toth question the validity of the construction contract, since they say they assumed the plan had not been changed.

Monday's special meeting was the second reserved for what has been called "Watermaingate." The issue will be discussed again at council meetings in November.

JCK staffers say the water main was redirected into Mystic Forest to preserve a stand of trees along Novi Road. The subdivisions' developers were not willing to sell the city the easement for the straight-shot project, said JCK engineer Deb Gosselin.

"When somebody tells me — being a lady I'm sorry, Mr. Harris, I don't want to repeat the terms he used — he made it clear we would not get the easement," she said.

One of the developers, Robert Langan, lives on Novi Road and his frontyard is screened by the vegetation, Gosselin explained.

"We also felt, and continue to feel, it was the cheapest alternative to get the project completed," she added.

"We can all look back and say isn't this interesting but at the time it was just an insignificant thing."

She told the council that rather than fight for the easement the engineers thought the reroute would move the project forward and make the main functional sooner. She said the developers could paid $138,000 to tap into an existing main and now stand to $183,000 for the rerouted water line.

The 200-foot jog to the west into the proposed subdivision cost $47,000 more than running the line straight along Novi Road would. But keeping to the original route would have added $62,000 to the price for tree removal and replacement, she said.

The city is supplying the funds up front for the project; money which will be paid back when users tap into the system. The project was first approved in 1990 to ease water pressure problems in the area by looping the system.

Cassis found at the Oakland County offices in Pontiac a document showing that a significant section of the easement needed were the main to travel straight along Novi Road was sold to the city in February 1991 for $1. This stretch of land was owned by Alfred Dimatteo, now deceased.

Pope said seeking the independent review of the water main was a "matter of trust."

"We've already got an easement and three-quarters of the land to build a water main. The easement is not useless in negotiations. The city again could have just continued the water main as far as we did," he said.

While Harris contends the trees in question are worth about $300,000, city forester Chris Pargoff appraised them at $8,337. To replant the road would cost $15,000, he advised.

According to Pargoff, some of the trees are "compromised" based on their proximity to Detroit Edison power lines, others will be lost to a sidewalk and several will be moved and transplanted by the developer.

"There is no basis in fact or reality that that rerouting was done to save trees or save money," Cassis said. "In my opinion, it was built to order to help some property owners to save money and to increase engineering costs."

She said she was disturbed that the original cost estimated for the straight shot main was $225,000, with engineering fees of $34,000. The figure has risen to $433,000 with engineering fees of $131,000, Cassis added. An additional $50,000 will be spent by the city for a pressure reduction valve.

Donohue told the council the issue boiled down to how much the main was needed to improve the city's system at that time.

"If there was an immediate necessity for the construction of a 16-inch water main there, the city was in a negotiating positions that was very weak," he said.

"My question was that the developer needed the water main as much as anyone and the city's position could have been stronger."

site lies on the south side of Grand River Avenue, between Wixom and Beck roads in northwest Novi.

There are five similiar antennas currently standing in Novi, and more stand near city lines in adjacent communities. Cellular One owns two of the Novi antennas.

The commission voted 7-1 in favor of the Grand River site plan. Commissioner Lodia Richards cast the sole "no" vote; Commissioner Robert Taub was absent from the meeting.

Commission Secretary Timothy Gilberg said he did not like the fact that so many towers are being built in the area. "We have to live with these antennas," he said, "but I don't want my kids to be able to swing from antenna to antenna."

Commissioner Eric Schaefer disagreed that the antennas are too numerous. "I use the technology, and I understand the need to maintain it," he said. "I don't notice them (the antennas) driving by."

"Where are we going with this?" Gilberg asked Cellular One representative John Crane. "Can you predict what our needs will be in 10 to 20 years?"

Crane said the company has no immediate plans for more towers, but had no guess for its requirements decades from now.

"That's too far down the road to tell," said Cellular One radio frequency engineer Leonard Diefenbach, later adding that computer-generated predictions indicated the company wouldn't need to build any more towers in Novi for at least five years.

"So in five years, you could be back here asking for another tower," said Richards. Diefenbach acknowledged the possibility.

The commission gave close attention to the company's request for setback variances for the antenna.

According to city ordinances, the antenna would have to be built on a piece of land with setbacks at least as long as the tower itself — in other words, 180 feet away from the base.

The idea is that if the tower were to collapse for any reason, it would fall on the owner's own property. The existing plan has adequate setbacks from the south and north, but only 123½ feet of clearance from adjoining property to the east and west. Cellular One will need a special land use permit from the ZBA to build the antenna on the site.

Crane said that it can withstand up to 102 mile per hour winds. City Planning Consultant Brandon Rogers noted that the towers are designed to bend in the middle in the event of very high winds, instead of falling over completely. A likely compromise, he added, was for Cellular One to give the city a liability release if the plan is granted.

The planning consultant, however, questioned the company's plans despite his recommendation for approval of the proposed antenna. "I see this one going in to relieve (cellular traffic on nearby) I-96, not Novi," Rogers said. "I don't see you building one in southern Novi for some time to come," which would service primarily city customers.

Several commissioners after the vote expressed interest in having the city's planners and attorney research the antenna issue.

Chairperson Kathleen McLallen wanted to know if the city could do anything to slow or stop the proliferation of communications towers in Novi, and whether it should. Commissioners John Balagna and Richard Clark, however, said that they felt such research was unnecessary, and said that the situation is acceptable. In the end, there was enough interest among the commission to request the research be done.

Gilberg voiced his approval. "We have a chance to plan where we're going," he said. "We can see where we want them, how many — there's no overall plan (now)."

Schools draft policy on conflict of interest

By SHARON CONDRON
Staff Writer

A little less than six months ago Northville school officials found themselves defending their conflict of interest policies against Citizens for a Better Northville's criticisms.

In response to the controversy, the School Board Monday night approved a first draft of amended conflict-of-interest policies. The amendments were recommended by the board's policy subcommittee.

One pair of policies addresses school board members' and administrators' actions relative to their offices. They also place limits on hiring immediate family members.

The board also approved the first draft of a pair of policies — for administrators and board members — specifically covering potential conflicts of interest in contracts the school district signs.

Even though the policies were approved without change on the first reading, all four will need a second reading before replacing the old versions in the board policy handbook. That action will come at the board's next meeting, Nov. 9.

The revised conflict policies police board members' and school administrators' conflict-of-interest issues and clear up language that left the former policies open to interpretation.

Policy Subcommittee Chairperson Richard Brown said he hopes the revised policies will lay to rest charges citizens raised to board members earlier this year.

"This was very controversial six months ago," Brown said. "There was some confusion about the language or the interpretation of the policy, so this is our attempt to clarify it."

Brown said attorneys for the district looked at the policy and have reworded it to parallel the state's Legislature's Code of Ethics.

The revised versions of the two conflict-of-interest policies prohibit the district from hiring immediate family members during the term served by the school board member or any central office or building administrator. They further outline the code of conduct both groups must follow during their tenure with the district. The policies also prohibit school officials and administrators from disclosing confidential information before it is public information and prevent both from using their positions to benefit financially.

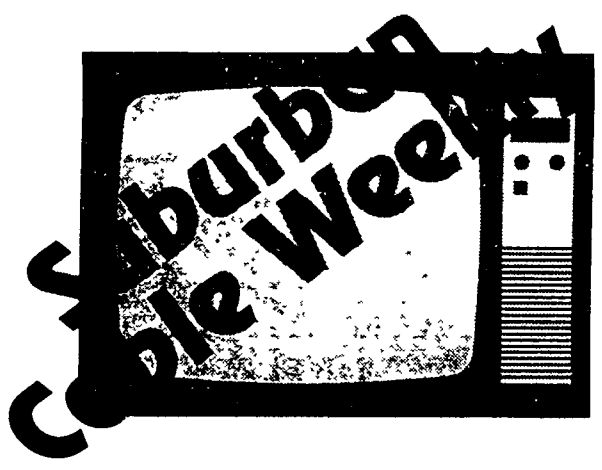

The pair of policies dealing with contracts requires board members to disclose a potential contract conflict and abstain from voting on it. The wording is aimed at those who can derive a financial benefit from the contract as a stock holder or partner in a business the district is considering contracting with.

There's a clause in the contract policy which waives that provision if two-thirds of the board is not eligible to vote because of a conflict. The provision allows board members to vote if they stand to gain less than $250 or less than 5 percent of the cost of the contract.

The point of contention raised by the former policies last spring by CBN members was whether it was ethical to allow board members who were married to district employees to vote on contracts and sit in on contract negotiations.

These policies, school officials say, end that discussion by including a provision that keeps former board members from being hired by the district for at least one full year after their elected terms expire.

As We See It

A tough choice, but nod goes to Briggs

It has been a hot contest from the beginning, but that will not make the choice much easier for voters when they go to pull the level in Novi's 11th Congressional District race.

Long-serving U.S. Rep. William Broomfield decided to step out of politics this year with the reapportionment of his district, setting up the contest. Many had aspired to that post over the years, but Broomfield was invincible at the polls. With Broomfield gone, the race turned into a nasty contest in the Republican primary, but Joe Knollenberg turned out to be the survivor. Now, in the general election next Tuesday, he'll face off against Democratic candidate Walter Briggs and two third-party candidates.

Either of the major party candidates would do an acceptable job as the district's representative to Washington D.C. Both Briggs and Knollenberg have shown they've studied the issues and understand the task facing them.

Nonetheless, there are flaws to both candidacies. For instance, the responses Knollenberg and Briggs gave to queries about abortion were a bit disturbing. Neither was prepared to fully explain his point of view. Briggs put his support behind the Democratic Freedom of Choice plan, but was unsure what exactly it included. Knollenberg said he wanted to ban abortion, except when the mother's life is in danger, preferring adoption. But he was unprepared to say how the potential additional 1.6 million adoptions could be handled.

Admittedly, Knollenberg is likely to be more closely philosophically aligned with the majority of voters in the conservative 11th District. He espouses a no-tax, balanced budget, deregulation perspective when it comes to questions of how to deal with the economy and the federal deficit. He is a fiscal conservative.

But we have qualms. Knollenberg did not appear to depart from Republican party philosophy on any of the issues raised in our interview/debate session. The last thing we need in Washington, in our firm opinion, is another political party hack, and we fear Knollenberg may be just that. His background as county party chair does nothing to alleviate the concern.

Briggs, while sounding typically Democratic on many economic and federal budget issues, also deviated from party philosophy on some significant issues. And we count highly the ability to think and act independently.

On that basis, we are putting our endorsement behind WALTER BRIGGS.

As we say that, we would advise Briggs to be a bit more fiscally conservative. Yes, he wants to cut the deficit and balance the budget, but he often suggested new programs which would entail additional spending on the part of the federal government, which would appear to run counter to those goals. Still, he has financial acumen, being an accountant by occupation.

So in the final analysis, when all the pros and cons of both candidates are listed and compared, we give the edge to Briggs. We believe he'll serve the district best.

Curbside recycling

Novi's ballot proposal for a mandatory user fee to support the implementation of a curbside recycling and trash collection program is by no means a perfect proposal.

But then this is not a perfect world. And the true test of the worth of such a proposal should be whether it is an improvement over the current system, whether the costs are fair and reasonable, and whether it moves the city in the right direction.

We say the answer is "yes" on all three of those counts. Therefore, we urge voters to say YES when they get to the ballot box next Tuesday, Nov. 3.

Is it an improvement? Without a doubt. At present, trash collection is in the City of Novi is provided by private, independent haulers who contract with homeowners or homeowners' associations piecemeal. No provisions are made for curbside recycling, and although Novi does have a recycling center at city hall, the fact that residents have to transport their recyclables to it makes it difficult to use.

Not only will the addition of recycling keep the city in line with other communities in the Resource Recovery and Recycling Authority of Southwest Oakland County (RRRASOC) consortium, it will mean Novi will have in place at least parts of a solid waste management plan as required by the state and federal governments.

But more importantly, recycling is simply the right thing to do.

Is the cost fair? This is the most controversial part of the equation. Nonetheless, the assessment of costs as proposed appears to be as reasonable as can be expected for the time being.

Members of the Novi Citizens Solid Waste Committee proposed that each home should pay a flat fee for the recycling service, and members of the committee estimate the final cost will be under $150 per home per year. Final figures have not been calculated.

Right now, Novi residents are actually paying slightly more, on average, for trash collection without the curbside recycling service. The committee found that trash hauling fees paid by residents ranges from $96 to $213, but average $151. Because the city will contract for a single hauler, the rate will be the same city-wide, a rate pretty comparable to what they are paying now.

But the controversial part has been that the user fee is mandatory. Every home will pay, even if they don't use. The fee won't be assessed on the amount of use. At the same time, it is not a tax, based on the value of the home.

Actually, that works out to be pretty fair. We have trouble imagining a homeowner not using the curbside recycling and trash collection service at least to some degree. And the amount of use likely has very little to do with the actual value of the home. It seems entirely likely families in less expensive homes can produce as much trash output as the residents of the higher-priced homes.

So a flat, mandatory fee really makes some sense.

Does it move the city in the right direction? Utlimately, we would like to see a system a little more refined. We like to see trash collection charged exactly on the amount of use a homeowner makes of the system, a pay-per-bag system for non-recyclable trash. That would be ideal because, if the goal is to reduce the waste stream, charging on the amount of output would provide one more incentive for residents to recycle or otherwise reduce their waste.

But we also understand that could well be a complicated program to put in place.

Two additional pieces of an overall waste reduction system need to be put in place before work is complete. Efforts must be made, likely in the realm of public education, to show residents how they can reduce their overall consumption and reuse some of the items and materials that are now going out in the trash — the other two legs of the waste reduction triad.

Nonetheless, the proposal rates as a significant step forward for the City of Novi, and we urge its adoption by voters.

A therapeutic dose of reality

Phil Power

One of the many reasons so many folks are grumpy at "the media" is that we tend to hide behind our newspapers or TV camera or radio mikes when we get challenged by real people or the real world.

It was, therefore, good for my soul that I agreed to go on David Newman's talk show last Friday. My column last week had asserted that Proposal C was at heart a scheme to downsize, radically, Michigan's government under the convenient disguise of a ballot proposal to cut property taxes. Newman evidently found that argument interesting and provocative.

So at the appointed hour of 3:05 p.m., I called the WXYT studio and listened, a little nervously, as Newman interviewed me and invited people to call in with their points of view.

What I heard for the next 20 minutes was a therapeutic dose of reality in this election season: Callers were mad about taxes, angry at expensive and ineffective government, and scornful beyond measure at the politicians whom they blame for this fix.

Caller Marty wanted radical — he happily used the word "amputation" — cuts in government programs. Property taxes were far too high. Anything to bring them down was OK with him.

Greg started with the Laffer Curve (the assertion that if tax rates are cut, tax income will go up) but went on to talk about the waste and corruption that shot through all levels of government, paid for by our high taxes.

Pat talked about bureaucracies and waste. He cited the $800 hammer purchased by the U.S. Defense Department. Prompted by Newman, he then expressed his scorn for the craven politicians who preferred to hide behind ballot propositions instead of doing their job and making tough votes.

All in all, it was pretty rough stuff. What was striking to me was the level of anger, the intensity of scorn for politicians and the deep mistrust of government of any sort.

The most telling point was made by Dave, from Livonia. He was opposed to Proposal C because he felt that taxes and spending ought to be controlled as locally as possible so people could see (and correct) the waste and keep watch on (and punish) the politicians.

"I can't do anything about the governor," Dave said, "but give me 20 friends and we can scare the pants off a local politician."

Dave was absolutely right. Over the years, we have somehow succeeded in alienating ourselves from government and transferring governmental activities from our own communities to some abstract place where buying hammers for $800 is the norm.

How have we come to this state of affairs? There's plenty of blame to go around.

Some media folks never get beyond the protective screen of their medium to experience the real world. And some politicians think real people are something to be kept at a distance from the workings of politics.

I'll bet President Bush wishes now he had been on more radio call-in shows while the recession was getting going. Being inside the bubble for too long is bad for anybody.

Stories hidden in state report

Tim Richard

Most of the Capitol press corps dumped their copies. I almost did — just 280 pages of statistical tables and graphs

"Condition of Michigan Education 1992" turned out to be full of stories of what has happened to our schools in the last decade or so. Some of the stories are a bit mysterious, others full of political significance.

We have fewer kids in school. Since 1971, public school enrollment dropped 30 percent from 2.1 million to a current 1.5 million.

No, they haven't switched to private and parochial schools. The non-public schools high-water mark was 361,000 in the mid-1960s. Today they enroll 175,000. No wonder many are pushing for a voucher system so they can dip into the state treasury.

VOC-TECH. There was a precipitous fall in high school vocational-technical education enrollment. It plummeted from 130,000 at the end of the '70s to 81,000 currently, or 37 percent. In the same period, total enrollment dropped only 19 percent.

In short, we're losing ground steadily in our effort to arm kids with job skills. I share, with Rep. Bill Keith, chair of the House Education Committee, the belief that every kid should be workforce ready and that too many are falling through a useless crack called "general education."

You would expect enrollment in agriculture courses to drop, and it has. But here we are in a "service" economy, and the numbers of kids in marketing, office practice and health occupations also are dropping.

"Everyone thinks vocational education is great — for someone else's child," Keith observed after taking a lot of flak for his voc-ed bill. Parents want their kids to go to college and be financiers or lawyers, whether the kids deserve it or not.

COLLEGE TESTS. Scores are improving on the American College Test (ACT), which is a composite of English, math, social studies and natural sciences. Michigan students are consistently a bit ahead of the national average. Scores range from 1 to 36.

But the picture of different ethnic groups is far different. Asian Americans scored steady 22s during the last half of the '80s. Whites scored around 21, Hispanics 20, Mexican Americans 19, American Indians 18 and blacks 16.

Unfortunately, something is missing. The state doesn't break out the scores of kids born to two-parent families from kids born to single "teen" mothers.

Any educator will tell you, from experience, that kids from one-parent homes have more school problems, on average, than the others. It's common knowledge that black families are in a horrible state; that Asian families are more stable than any of the others.

My hunch is that black kids from two-parent families would test as well as whites and Asians from two-parent families. But I can't prove that hunch is right, and no one can prove it's wrong, because the state doesn't run those numbers.

TEACHERS. When Bill Clinton asks, "Are you better off than four years ago?" Michigan teachers should rise up, shout "Yes!" and vote for George Bush. Their average salaries have doubled from $19,663 in 1979-80 to $39,421 in 1990-92. It works out to 9 percent a year.

(I'm kidding about Clinton and Bush. Presidents have nothing to do with school pay. Michigan taxpayers are the true providers.)

Those annual pay hikes aren't quite what they seem. Teachers are getting older. In 1981-82 they averaged 41 years; last year, 44 years. They get seniority pay hikes as well as annual scale hikes.

You used to hear that we need to bring down pupil-teacher ratios. Well, we've done it. The ratio dropped from 23.4 to 1 a decade ago to 21.3 to 1 last year.

So while enrollments fall, so do class sizes. And teachers' pay can go up.

There's some progress.

Where ya gonna cut the budget?

Michael Malott

"Bad news," I told my boss as we sat down in a meeting last week. "I'm going to have to increase the rate at which I charge for my services . . ."

"Read my lips . . ," he began in response.

"Easy to say," I quickly countered before he could finish. "But I have been going over the family budget for 1993 and there are a number of potential cost increases coming up which are beyond my control. Now I've been cutting everything from the budget that I can. I assure you, this is a bare-bones family budget. My only option is to enhance revenues. Before you say 'no' to that, I think it is incumbent on you to tell me where you're gonna cut the budget."

"What cost increases are you talking about?" queried my supervisor, a man of infinite patience and humor.

"First and foremost is taxes," I said, raising my hand to count off the increases on my fingers. "Bill Clinton says he wants to raise taxes on the rich and apparently he counts me as a member of that group." My boss looked at me askance. "Well, I know I wasn't in the rich category when George Bush was handing out tax breaks a while back — I was in the trickle-down category — but these definitions change over time. Clinton wants to get rid of the deficit and he can't do it without a tax increase. After all, where you gonna cut the budget?

"Maybe Clinton won't get elected," he said.

"Bush says he wants to close loopholes and — just as the definition of rich is changing — I used to call those deductions. Ross Perot says we need an increase in the gas tax.

"But it's not just federal taxes," I continued. "Local taxes ae likely to go up too. The Novi school district needs a bond issue to build more schools. They can't do that out of existing revenues. Where you gonna cut the budget? The Parks and Recreation Department needs more money for parkland, a swimming pool and an ice arena. The city is hurting because of those tax assessment appeals. Really, where you gonna cut the budget?

"Maybe you'll save some money from Proposal C," he suggested.

"It'll never pass," I said. "It sounds good and it would cut property taxes, but no one has explained how the state is going to pay for it. Seriously, where you gonna cut the budget?"

I could see his patience was running out. "Listen, you are just going to have to learn to live within your means . . ."

"I realize," I said undaunted, "that you are not fully aware of my family's budgetary process. I'll be more than happy to educate you about how it works and answer any questions you may have. The first thing you have to understand is that our budget simply cannot run a deficit. That's actually prohibited by law. Secondly, my wife does have line-item veto powers, so all of the necessary budgetary constraints are already in place. Still, I don't think it's fiscally responsible of you to say 'no' to a salary increase unless you can go through the budget and identify those specific areas that you think could be trimmed." I accentuated my point by letting a voluminous computer printout hit the top of his desk with a heavy thump.

"Now," I launched into my presentation, "contrary to popular belief a substantial portion of my family budget is fixed costs. There's the mortgage and insurance premiums. There's car payments . . ."

"Perhaps you should drive a smaller car," he said.

"As you know," I said to drive the point home, "replacement of my personal transportation system would require an initial outlay that, while perhaps more cost effective in the long run, would eliminate any potential savings to be achieved in the first year or two." I got the conversation back on track. "There's utilities — gas, electricity, water, sewer . . ."

"Turn out the lights when you are not home," he interrupted again.

"That budget cut would be unwise in the extreme," I quickly pointed out. "Turning the lights off would make my home more susceptible to burglary."

"Looks like you're spending an awful lot at the grocery store," he said, pointing to one particular line in the printout. "Why don't you have macaroni-and-cheese a few nights instead of steak?"

"I think that would be a very bad idea. Surely I would be less productive if I came to work undernourished."

"The entertainment and recreation category seems disproportionately high," he said, nitpicking again.

"Again, I think it is important for me to come to work well rested and refreshed. An extensive family entertainment/recreation program is important to the well-being of your employee," I explained.

"Look at this wardrobe expenditure," he said. "What are you, a clothes-horse? The Cold Weather is over you know."

"I know much has been said about a 'piece dividend' from a thaw, but you can never tell when hospitalities will break out somewhere around the world and I think my family should be well-dressed to respond at a moment's notice."

"You know," he said in a quieter voice now, trying to reason with me, "I have a budget of my own that needs to be balanced . . ."

"Darn it," I said, letting my own anger show for the first time, "I think it's time for you to step up to this problem and deal with it like a man. Don't be a coward. I know it's not the popular thing to do. I know it is politically dangerous. Nonetheless, it's high time you faced up to your responsibilities and obligations and went out and demanded a revenue increase of your own."

No-fault meant much to this family

Letters

To the Editor:

Please vote no on Proposal D to lower our Michigan auto insurance rates. As the parent of a child with a catastrophic injury as a result of an auto accident, I can tell you firsthand what the present Michigan no-fault insurance program has meant to my son and our family.

It all began with the phone call all parents of a child who drives dreads. Char had just turned 21, a student of Western Michigan University, when he nearly died in Kalamazoo in an auto accident. Wearing a seatbelt when he slid sideways into a tree didn't protect him from massive head injuries. When they cut him out of the car with what they call "the jaws of life" he was already in a coma from which he did not emerge for months.

First, he was in intensive care during which he hovered between life and death because of brain swelling. When he finally stabilized, there was coma stimulation therapy, respiratory therapy so he wouldn't develop pneumonia, occupational therapy to maintain his inactive limbs, tube feedings, surgery to install a shunt to drain brain fluid build up, and on and on. Twenty years ago, an individual like Char would not have survived such a serious accident, but medical science has improved the survival rate for these near-fatal automobile accidents.

Eight years have passed since this strategy began. Because of the massive brain damage, Char's left side is paralyzed so he's in a wheel chair permanently. His coodination on the right side is so poor he can barely print his name without great effort. My son's vision is impaired so reading is difficult. Long-term and short-term memory deficits are present as well as speech difficulties. The list goes on and on. He can, however, put his arm around me and give me a hug and a kiss and tell me he loves me, and his wonderful sense of humor is still intact, so we focus on what he can do rather than what he can't do.

Physical therapy, occupational therapy, speech therapy, counseling, a computer tutor, plus outings in the community make up Char's day. A facility, especially for the head-injured, provides these rehabilitation services as well as long term living accommodations. On weekends Char comes home to visit his family. Twenty or 30 or 40 years from now, he will still need to live in a supervised setting providing these same therapies and stimulation. We're into the maintenance phase now, because there won't be much improvement this many years post-injury.

It's a challenge to create an interesting program of daily living for an individual with multiple handicaps who isn't able to work, but who is alert enough to know George Bush is president and that Michigan State lost to U of M.

Thanks to the present Michigan no-fault insurance with lifetime benefits, this is possible for my son or your daughter or your father or mother. I have no idea what the expenses relating to my son's accident amount to, but I know they must be in the millions and realistically there's no end in sight. Char is only 29 years old. The greater tragedy would be to vote "yes" on Proposal D, whereby a ceiling will be placed on medical benefits for catastrophic auto injuries.

Please don't stick your head in the sand and think this can't happen to your loved one. We live in the beautiful Northville community, but tragedy knows no boundaries. Vote "no" on Proposal D. Rest assured the insurance companies will make a bundle if Proposal D passes. Otherwise, they wouldn't be pushing so hard to pass this measure.

Are term limitations constitutional?

To the Editor:

Given that the U.S. Constitution states in Article I, section 5, subsection 1 that "Each house shall be the judge of the elections, returns and qualifications of its own members . . .", how can a state limit the term of a member of Congress without a Constitutional amendment?

Will have to fight park bond issue

The following letter was addressed to the Novi City Council, and submitted to the Novi News for publication.

To the Novi City Council:

I'm writing you this letter because I will be unable to attend your meetings. I hope that you will be able to formally introduce this letter to your minutes for the Oct. 26 or the Nov. 2 meetings.

In listening to last night's meeting, I couldn't help but to get a little upset at the prospect of you wanting to raise my taxes again. When I first moved to Novi, my taxes were $1,800 a year. A short three years later, I'm now paying over $2,300 a year. After your next two year assessments and the school board's millage proposal, I'm afraid that I will no longer be able to afford to live in Novi.

Right now I reside in the north end and since I've been here, I have witnessed a number of people move, because they were tired of the taxes they had to pay and the little or no services they received in return from this city.

When it rains, I'm surrounded on three sides by water, but the city can't budget the money to fix this problem with our sewer system, even though I am paying an assessment for my sewers.

Now you want me to subsidize a park that will increase the traffic problems in the north and put more wear and tear on the roads that do not get repaired as it is. I also find it appalling that you would consider paying $25,000 in taxes for the land owner. I wish you would be that kind to me. I'm sure that money could be better spent elsewhere.

If and when you vote to put this proposal on the ballot, I will have to strongly object and lobby hard and strong to defeat it. This proposal will not make the city better, it will only make life more troublesome in the north end of the city.

Many people in our community are losing their jobs more and more each day. I don't think another tax burden at this time would be in their best interest.

Alan M. Hulslander

Opposes city trash proposal

To the Editor:

One of the best kept secrets in town is the fifth proposal appearing on the Nov. 3 City of Novi ballot, the Solid Waste Collection Proposition. The proposition authorizes the city to implement city-wide trash collection services.

It has always been our philosophy that government should only perform those functions that cannot be done better by the private sector. Rubbish collection is one of those functions that the city cannot do better. If the proposal passes, the city will end up with one more union, one more department that will require a sizable tax increase to run, and employees who won't work when it is less than 10 degrees or over 90 degrees, or when the trash smells too bad.

We have been residents of Novi for the past 17 years. For 15 of those years our trash has been picked up by Hornbeck Sanitation. In all those years they have never missed a trash pick up. They have provided excellent service at a reasonable price. City service could not be better than what we have received.

We urge all Novi residents to vote no on the Solid Waste Collection Proposition. The city should not get iteself in the trash pick-up business. We, as residents, do not need higher taxes, more unions, poor service, increased bureaucracy and our trash removal options taken away.

The proposal on the City of Novi ballot is a bad idea whose time has not come. We hope you will join with us in defeating this plan. Government must only do what the private sector cannot do. In this instance we are all very well served by the private sector. City rubbish removal service is not needed.

We're not dumb; 'yes' to Prop. D

To the Editor:

Current Michigan insurance law is a bonanza for ambulance chasing trial lawyers. They don't want the gravy train to stop. As long as those who are substantially at fault in an accident can continue to sue the driver not a fault (under current law), there will be no shortage of frivolous lawsuits. These are the suits which make trail attorneys wealthy while driving up auto insurance rates for all drivers. No wonder individual trial attorneys have contributed as much as $25,000 each to defeat Proposal D.

The lawyers' primary argument against the proposal is nothing less than ridiculous. They're trying to convince us that our auto insurance medical coverage under Proposal D will not be adequate, even though it will give Michigan motorists the highest level of medical coverage in the nation. (Pity the other 49 states.) Let's show them we're not that dumb. And, let's bring auto insurance rates under control. Vote "yes" on Proposal D.

Prop. D is fair and equitable

To the Editor:

I am concerned that the debate over the Proposal D auto insurance reform plan must be brought to a higher level if voters are to understand the merits of the plan. At present, reckless charges and countercharges are being tossed around with little regard for the truth. The truth is Proposal D is the only option available that would allow voters the chance to lower insurance costs.

Most everyone would agree that there needs to be some control placed on the items that are driving up the cost of insurance. If we ignore the importance of cost control, we will run the risk that our insurance delivery system will become both unaffordable and unavailable. The number of uninsured motorists continues to climb and if we do not address the affordability issue, the number will continue to rise with each passing year.

By holding down medical litigation expenses, we can still enjoy the nation's best benefit system (it just won't cost as much). Michigan is the only place in the world that forces its citizens to purchase unlimited medical benefits as a requirement to drive a car. This unyielding policy must be changed so we can make insurance available for everyone. By allowing consumers the right to choose the level of insurance coverage that best serves their needs, our society can also reduce the number of uninsured drivers.

The problem of cost containment is a real one. Proposal D is a fair and equitable way of addressing the cost containment problem. By voting for Proposal D, we can cut down the cost of auto insurance and still enjoy the benefits of the nation's best No-Fault law.

Keith A. Tappan

Council should hear concerns

To the Editor:

Bosco Field is gone.
Developers continue to build.
Property taxes are high.
Can we build a consensus?

Novi Youth Baseball does not have a place for the kids to play baseball for the next several years. Bosco Field will produce the new crop from Novi's old farm fields — a subdivision.

The soccer fields for Novi's youth are inadequate. We have new kids joining our soccer programs at a record rate. Soon we may not have a place for them to play.

The Novi City Council will be forced to move adult softball leagues off of Power Park softball fields to make a place for the kids to play.

Citizens groups are being formed to pursue new projects for a swimming pool and an ice arena. The demand for new services will continue.

Recent surveys by the Novi News continue to confirm that Novi residents believe the City of Novi is developing too fast. If this is fast, wait until that water moratorium is lifted and the free flow of water will start. Then bulldozers will work overtime. Developers investment in the remaining empty fields will begin to skyrocket.

A quick review of the names of the ownership of vacant land will confirm the change before the city is inevitable. The land is owned in the names of partnerships and corporations, no longer in the names of the families and farmers of yesterday.

Property taxes are frozen by the state legislature for only a few more months. Property assessments will begin to rise again without the passage of a permanent solution such as Proposal C on the November ballot.

Senior citizens continue to be faced with property tax bills that in some cases are now higher than their original mortgage payment. First time home buyers see relief with the reduction of interest rates, but the uncertainty of rising property taxes raises concerns.

The Northville schools have had a battle over funding with taxpayers. In December, the Novi school board will be requesting an increase for much needed expansion of buildings. All taxpayers continue to look over their shoulders to Lansing to see if our legislators will again send out their medieval tax distributor, Robin Hood, to remove our local tax revenues.

These are clearly the problems facing the Novi City Council as we debate how we will pay for the purchase of additional parkland.

The city administration has proposed a solution to the Novi City Council which would be to purchase approximately 400 acres of land in the center of the city at Twelve-and-a-half Mile and Dixon. In addition, the plan would include 100 acres on the west end of the city for future development. The 400 acres parcel would include a place to build all the baseball and soccer fields the city will need in the future. In addition, the site would include land for an ice arena, swimming pool, historical village, recreation vehicle storage yard and a tree farm for passive enjoyment. The mayor is right. The city administration should be praised for their vision in placing this proposal before the city council. This plan has been worked on for 6 months in closed door executive sessions. When the proposal became public, the city council was asked to place it on the Jan. 12 special election for approval. The majority of the council asked to wait to place this on the ballot until we heard more from the residents of the city.

This plan would require the selling of $9.9 million of bonds to fund the purchase of 500 acres. The administration has stated that this would cost .78 mill a year to reduce the bonds. This would cost the average homeowner of a $150,000 home approximately $58 in taxes a year. The city administration points out that .30 mills of old debt (police building, etc.) will drop off the property tax bills. This would reduce the cost to the average taxpayer of a $150,000 home to $30 or more taxes a year. However, remember this is the same debt that was falling off when the voters approved the $18 million road program last year.

The Parks and Recreation Commission and the city council have been working on a plan to purchase parkland without raising additional taxes. This plan would provide the purchase of the 100 acres on the west end of the city. The council has set aside $300,000 over the past few years to purchase land. In addition, we would have to earmark some of the tax revenues from the new construction in the community to land contract payments. Just like any family which is expecting an additional family member, we have saved to provide for their needs. We would still need to ask for assistance from the residents for money to develop the baseball and soccer fields. This would cost an estimate of $1.5 million or .12 mills with the direct cost to the homeowner of a $150,000 home $9 a year. If you consider that the same debt of .30 mill will be dropping off the new tax rolls, the city could still buy and develop 100 acres of parkland with a reduction in the overall tax rate.

However, it is very important to point out that this would not provide for all of the parkland needed for the future of the city and the cost of all land will only continue to increase.

The question for the taxpayers of Novi is this: Should the city council ask for your support of this plan to purchase parkland on a Jan. 12 special election? Have we planned for all of the needs of the city? Is the Twelve-and-a-half Mile and Dixon property a good location? Should we break the proposal into two questions with an $8.4 and $1.5 million request? Should we ask for your support for a community swimming pool? What is best for our present economic conditions?

While some people believe that the council should follow the administration's lead and place this before the voters without asking these questions, I believe that the city council should ask tough questions of the administration, but most importantly, listen to the concerns of the community.

If you would like to share your views on this subject. The city council will hold a special meeting to listen to your views Nov. 2 at 7 p.m. If you would like to share your views with me, I can be reached at home at 348-6571.

Challenger courts voters in judge race

By TIM RICHARD
Staff Writer

It's never been done. No challenger ever has beaten an incumbent state Court of Appeals judge. George F. Killeen wants to be the first.

"I like the idea," said Killeen, 48, a solo practitioner in Flint running against Judges Martin Doctoroff and Clifford Taylor. "There are two incumbents and one of me. They have the incumbency, and I have the name identification."

Doctoroff, 59, of Birmingham, was appointed in 1987 by Democratic Gov. James Blanchard and won the 1988 election to fill out the term. Last year the 24-member bench elected him chief judge, a potent administrative post.

Taylor, 49, of East Lansing, was appointed last March by Republican Gov. John Engler, his close friend. Taylor previously had lost bids for Congress and attorney general.

"Marty and I had a combined fundraiser in Oakland County and one up here," said Taylor in his Lansing office. "We grossed $60,000 in Oakland and $30,000 up here." Taylor said they are close on criminal issues, but they are running separate advertising campaigns.

Doctoroff added, "We have both been evaluated 'preferred and well qualified' for the 2nd District Court of Appeals by the Oakland Citizens League, a division of Civic Searchlight. This is the highest rating the organization gives."

"Money is difficult to raise," said Killeen, "because no incumbent has ever been beaten."

The state's second highest court handles about 12,000 appeals a year from trial courts and writes 5,000 opinions. It had original jurisdiction when 50 suburban school districts, including Novi and Northville, sued the state for categorical aid and social security money.

Just a relative handful of cases go up to the state Supreme Court.

Yet the 24 appeals judges toil in relative obscurity. Rarely does the public see them; indeed, many cases are handled entirely with written briefs and no oral arguments by attorneys. Seldom do any issues surface at election time.

Irish names do well. In 1988 five of the six winners of new appellate judgeships had Irish names.

The 2nd District rambles across 15 Michigan counties — but let Killeen describe it:

"Oakland has one-third of the available votes. Macomb and Genesee have one-third plus. The others have the remaining one-third, with Ingham having one-third of that, or one-ninth of the total."

Doctoroff is from Oakland County, Taylor from Ingham, Killeen from Genesee.

Killeen has the same name as a former Macomb and Wayne county commissioner. He figures he has name recognition from a 1980 run for Genesee prosecutor and the Macomb name. In college-day jobs, he was a member of the UAW and the Retail & Wholesale Dairy Workers, AFL-CIO.

He has the endorsement of the Michigan Trial Lawyers Association — the hobgoblin of corporations, doctors and Republicans.

A graduate of Mott Community College, Eastern Michigan University and Wayne State's law school, Killeen is the sole occupant of a building behind the courthouse in Flint, where he handles civil contracts, divorces, personal injury and some drunk driving cases.

Killeen said Taylor and Doctoroff, despite their party differences, are conservatives. In his analysis of 59 cases, Killeen said Doctoroff voted for the defense 51 times. "I'm the least conservative of the three," he said.

Doctoroff graduated from Harvard in his home town of Cambridge, Mass., came to the University of Michigan law school and spent three years as an FBI agent.

By 1980 he was a senior partner in the firm of Bushnell, Gage, Doctoroff & Retzen. He went through the legal ranks: public administrator in Oakland, special assistant attorney general, special prosecutor for an Oakland grand jury, chair of the state Attorney Discipline Board, other bar association posts.

"My most exciting case was when I developed a new theory of recovery against the Michigan Department of Transportation," he said. "If I could establish that the state was guilty of maintaining a nuisance, then my client's contributory negligence (by drinking) wouldn't be an issue."

A couple of cases — one decided on appeal in 1977 — brought him fame and funds, just at the time one of his four sons was starting Harvard.

He did heavy-duty defense work for Detroit Edison. Then his practice evolved to major divorce cases.

These days, Judge Doctoroff sees himself as a strict constructionist rather than judicial activist. "Our court isn't supposed to write the law. I'm going to come as close as I can to what the community wants."

He's proud of his opinion in a bitter divorce case between two psychiatrists. He held that the mother could collect damages because the father had used his psychiatric knowledge to brainwash their three minor children against her. Doctoroff's ruling reversed the Wayne circuit judge who had barred the mother from collecting damages.

Doctoroff's court is getting a lot of attention in Lansing over whether to expand it. The Court of Appeals was born in 1963 with nine judges and now has 24.

The Supreme Court administrator says 15 judges should be added by 1994 and argues there's work enough for 80 judges, when Michigan is compared to other states. Conservative legislators and Engler go into budget shock at those numbers.

"The only way you're going to get more (work) is with additional judges," Doctoroff said. "Ten years ago, we had no wrongful discharge, sexual harassment, age discrimination, criminal drug cases, teacher tenure cases. There's a medical malpractice explosion.

"We're a very litigious society. We are not a 'kinder, gentler nation.' In 1965 each judge wrote three opinions a month. Now each judge writes 14 opinions a month."

Doctoroff would accept a constitutional amendment, proposed by state Senate Republicans and many Democrats, to bar defendants pleading guilty from an automatic right to appeal. Proponents say it would reduce the appeals caseload by 25 percent.

Judge Taylor supports such a constitutional amendment but said, "We are going to have to add judges." He'd like to look at mediation and arbitration, as the federal appeals court has done.

Challenger Killeen said the amendment idea is "real likeable in the abstract, but lawyers would be reluctant to let go of anything that might be abused."

Raised in Flint, Taylor went to U-M and then to Georgetown's law school and spent three years in the Navy.

After a 1971-72 stint as an assistant county prosecutor, he spent 20 years with the firm of Denfield, Timmer & Taylor in general practice — personal injury defense, criminal defense, some plaintiffs' work, divorce, oil and gas. Professionals rank him as one of the best trial lawyers in the state.

His biggest case involved "splintered interests" in oil wells that had been drilled in the 1920s-30s and plugged. As people died, their ownership rights became splintered. A 1962 Michigan law said owners had to drill, register or lose their interests. Taylor represented oil drilling companies.

"The question in our case was, was this an unconstitutional 'taking' by a mere lapse of time? We won," said Taylor. The U.S. Supreme Court upheld Indiana's and Michigan's laws.

Taylor has served on the State Board of Law Examiners (they create and grade the law exam), on a screening panel for federal judicial appointments, and on the Commission on Courts in the 21st Century.

Like Doctoroff, he's a strict constructionist, saying an appeals court isn't a legislature and should keep an eye on the plain meaning of words.

On the bench, Taylor is proudest of his a dissent in a "blue bandit" case where the majority reversed a conviction of a man charged in 18 armed robberies.

PRESIDENTIAL MASQUERADE

Bush and Clinton masks lead the polls at costume stores

By CRISTINA FERRIER
Staff Writer

If you are planning to dress up as one of the presidential candidates this year, don't expect to stand out from the crowd.

The Bill Clinton masks are sold out. The George Bush masks are going fast.

But Ross Perot masks can't be found, said Jim Plantz, owner of Costumes by Nightmare in Novi Town Center. The store is a seasonal shop that sells Halloween costumes and accessories.

"I think Perot got in too late for the manufacturers. If you really wanted to dress like Ross Perot, though, you could just strap on a big pair of ears."

Whether your Halloween party affiliation is Democratic, Republican, independent or none of the above, it's definitely time to get your costume together.

"Halloween is on a Saturday this year," said Costumes by Nightmare clerk Linda Certo "So there are a lot of people planning to dress up and go out

"A lot of people won't even tell us what they are planning to be They want to win the prize "

Bars and nightclubs across the metro area traditionally hold Halloween costume contests, awarding cash prizes for the most original In fact, Certo said, they have been selling more adult size Halloween costumes this year than those designed for kids

"People like to dress up," she said In fact, a few people are planning Halloween weddings and the members of the bridal parties have been in the store to choose their costumes for the wedding."

"Talk about a wedding to remember," Plantz said

More costumes to avoid, if you are going for originality, are Morticia or Gomez Addams of The Addams Family movie Ditto for Catwoman, Batman or Spock Those costumes are very popular this year and most are already sold out.

Kids have favorite costumes, too.

"Ninjas," said Barbara Plantz, another Costumes by Nightmare "expert."

"All the boys want to be Ninjas this year."

And girls?

"Belle," she said, without hesitation. "From Beauty and the Beast."

The easiest way to throw together a last minute costume, if you still don't have one, is probably to purchase one of the complete packages sold at most costume stores. These kits run

SANDIE WALLACE

Wallace brings holiday cheer to nursing home

By BOB NEEDHAM
Editor

Sandie Wallace is a waitress at Country Epicure Restaurant, and she coordinates a volunteer project, which she originated: celebrating birthdays, Easter, and Christmas with the 35 residents of The Whitehall Home for the Aged

For a long while, she said, "I'd drive by an old folks home and think 'I have so much; why don't I go inside and ask whether I could do a birthday party once a month with balloons, a cake, and flowers.' "

And so she did — did it for seven years at a nursing home where she lived. Now she's doing it at one near where she works. She's been doing it at Whitehall, with others helping her, for almost two years.

The last Wednesday of each month she brings a party to celebrate the birthdays of those born that month. The Village Florist in Milford gives her bunches of flowers, "bright and happy colors" — one for each birthday person. The Foodtown Supermarket in Hartland supplies her with ice cream.

"And the owners of Epicure," she said, "have their pastry shop make a huge cake.

"We walk around to show the cake," Sandie said, because not all of the residents are in one room.

At Easter, she said, "Two of us make baskets for everyone," filling them with special things they make, including diabetic chocolate.

Then Christmas — that's special, with gifts for everyone. Sandie gets a list from Whitehall of the residents with an item each person would like, including sizes, and she posts it at Epicure so all employees can see it and choose one to shop for.

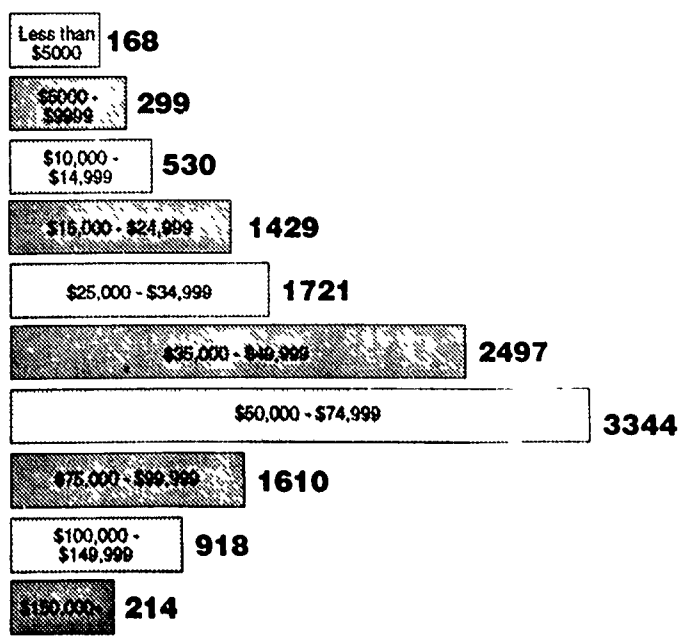

"Everybody gets excited about when is the list going to be put up," she said. "Fifty people here at Epicure want to buy gifts."

Doing this "is very rewarding," Sandie Wallace said, as for example, when the party is over, "they all wave goodbye when I go and say, 'We'll see you next month.'"

Slattery fills top post at WNF&GA

Phyllis Slattery was recently selected as the 33rd national President of the Woman's National Farm & Garden Association. She was elected at the WNF&GA's 78th annual meeting.

Slattery has been a member of the WNF&GA since 1961. She's also been an active member of the Northville Branch, where she served as president from 1966-1968 and as Michigan Division President from 1982-1984.

During her tenure with the organization Slattery has worn a variety of hats. She's been on the publications and publicity committee while she lived in London, England and was elected to the same post while a resident of Perth, Australia. During that time, as a staff writer for the WFN&GA magazine she covered most of the organization's premier events. After her return to the United States, she became the editor of the national magazine and in 1979 she was recognized as Member of the Year for her work on the publication.

Slattery is also active in other Northville clubs including the Northville Woman's Club, where she's a past president, and was recently named as an honorary club member at the club's centennenial celebration. A longtime resident of Northville, Slattery has also chaired Town Hall and the Michigan Week celebration.

Rose Cottage brings home European Fare

Susan Baker, co-owner of the Rose Cottage Tea Room, recently returned from a 15-day pub and tea room tour of England and Wales.

Her itinerary included stops at the famous Savoy, Ritz and Dorchester tea rooms where she was served more formal luncheons and teas. In spite of the elegance of the tea rooms, Baker preferred the heartier, more savory English fare served in the smaller village pubs. The Green Man Pub nestled in the lower level of Harrod's Department store, where the Queen and royal family shop, was a favorite of Baker's.

Baker returned with several of her favorite recipes including ones for shepherd's pie, bubble and squeak and spotted dick. It's recipes like those she intends to fold into the Rose Cottage Tea Room fall menu.

Halloween Soup

The Marquis Theatre's Cotton Candy Theatre Kids present six performances of Halloween Soup, a spooky comedy for the entire family.

The shows are scheduled for Oct. 30 and 31. On Friday curtain time is 8 p.m.. For Saturday performances, there are 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. matinees and on Sunday the sole show is at 2:30 p.m.

Mother's Club Fundraiser

The book retails for $35 and is available by calling Nancy Rosselot at 349-4622, Judy Bartling 347-7645 or Connie Conder at 451-2222. Proceeds from the sale will fund two scholarships for Northville high schoolers.

Nehs takes principal award

Gerald Nehs, a Northville resident and Livonia elementary school principal was the recent recipient of Michigan's Outstanding Practicing Principal Award. He collected his award at the annual Michigan Elementary and Middle School Principal's Association State Conference held last week in Traverse City. He was picked from a field of 12 candidates state-wide for his accomplishments in education.

During his tenure, Nehs founded a self-esteem program for children which earned him the State PTA's Child Advocate Award three years ago. He also founded a student volunteer community-service program called "Youth Making A Difference" which encourages students to take responsibility for their community.

Garden of the Month/October

Wilsons' garden upstages garage sale

By PATRICIA A. ZIELKE
Special Writer

I wasn't really searching for my next "Garden of the Month" while garage saling last week.

But what I found on Summerside Court in Northville Estates was not only a garage full of interesting sale items, but bunches of flowers and herbs hanging from the rafters to dry. My quest for sale items was soon forgotten because I was captivated by the colorful upside-down bouquets and the aroma of savory herbs that filled the air.

There were cock's comb, lavender, sage, chive, tarragon, oregano, bedstraw, pink and yellow yarrow, green and pink hydrangea, blue and red salvia, fever few, sea holly, coral bells, love lies bleeding, two band aids, lambs ear, sweet Annie, tansy, gomphrenea, pearley, everlasting santonina, nigella, statice and baby's breath.

The bountiful gardens and charming Dutch colonial home belong to Reatha and Bob Wilson who enjoy working together in their spacious one-acre garden.

On each side of the driveway leading to the house are split-rail fences containing Japanese maples and blaze roses, surrounded by masses of yellow, white and gold mums.

Closer to the front of the house are rose hedges, euponymous, bunches of golden, orange and pink mums, salvia, lavender and large hydrangea bushes displaying both green and pink blooms. Along the front is also home to peonies, burning bush, deutzia, yucca plants, Queen Elizabeth roses and privets which add privacy to the open front porch area.

A triangle at the end of the drive is filled with golden sundrop, pansies, annual galardia and santonlina. Herbs are grown separately in a three-tiered ledge garden Rasberries and blueberries abound at the end of the garden along with apple trees, rose of Sharon and snowball bushes.

Standing on the long back deck — which is enhanced by a sloping rock garden filled with day lilies, creeping phlox, dwarf lilacs and spirea — you can enjoy a panoramic view of the entire garden, which is surrounded by trees and shrubs including white paper birch, hammock, sugar maple, sumac, tall evergreens, box elder, and lilac bushes.

There's an abundance of flowers and roses in bloom at Reatha and Bob Wilson's Northville Estates home.

One rectangular and two square gardens have been carved out of the center. One holds cock's comb, zinnias, asters, gomphrena, fever few, blue salvia, tall snapdragon, rhubarb and tomatoes. Another is filled with lacy dusty miller, pink petunias, and dianthus bounded on two sides by tall pink rose bushes. The third garden had an abundance of spider plants, cosmos, black eyed Susan, lambs ear, Japanese Iris, phlox, baptist's bush and burning bush.

A trip inside to Reatha's workship was next, where the garden's flowers are artfully brought together to form lovely floral creations that last many seasons. Some flowers are air dried, while others, such as roses, peonies, pansies and zinnias, are preserved with silica gel. Reatha's designs can be seen at Judy's on Center Street.

So, what did I get at the garage sale? A beautiful nosegay, a pleasant experience, and a reminder to always stop and smell the roses, unless, of course, a bumble bee is uoing it simultaneously.

PTA News/Elementary Schools

SILVER SPRINGS

We have had a wonderful demonstration of our "Silver Springs Spirit" at our recent PTA meetings. Lots of new faces and new ideas, all in the interest of making our school the best it can be.

Silver Springs is happy to resume its "Partnership in Education" with the McDonald's restaurant near Eight Mile and Haggerty roads. McDonald's will continue to sponsor a "Breakfast with the Principal" each month, at which the "Students of the Month" will be honored.

Our first roller skating party of the year took place on Sunday, Oct. 25 at Skatin' Station in Canton. A fun time was had by all.

A "Junior Enrichment Series" program, the Mask Puppet Theatre, will be presented at Silver Springs today at 1 and 2 p.m. Parents are welcome to attend.

Silver Springs' Halloween parade will take place Friday, Oct. 30, from 2:45-3:15 p.m. Students are invited to bring their costumes to school to wear in the parade.

Parent-teacher conferences will take place during the week of Nov. 2-6.

Something new at Silver Springs is a "Suggestion Box" located in the office. Please use it to help us improve our school.

Also new at Silver Springs is the use of computers for student voting of class representatives to the Student Council.

Silver Springs is instituting an exciting reading incentive program, "Eagle Stars Fly High," under the guidance of parent Kathy Wysocki. This program will provide good reading habits and all students will be eligible to participate. Look for upcoming details.

After lively discussions at our September and October PTA meetings, a committee was formed to explore ways to improve the school's Holiday Shop. Committee members are: Holiday Shop chairpeople Margaret Netti and Teri Jachimoqicz, parents Martha Conrad and Cindy Petty, PTA president Debra Shutt and principal Ken Pawlowski.

Silver Springs is very proud of its beautiful newsletter "Silver Springs Spirit." Many thanks to Peggy Quick for her hard work and dedication. The newsletter is scheduled for three more printings this school year.

Silver Springs has resumed its participation in the Campbell Soup Label program. A chart of eligible labels appears on page 7 of the newsletter. Labels should be sent to school in an envelope marked with your child's teacher's name.

The kick-off for our Morley Candy fundraiser will be on Nov. 2, with Nov. 16 the deadline for orders. Orders will be delivered on Dec. 2. This year's fundraiser will stress participation by all students instead of rewarding individual sales volume. Please support this event, our only fundraising effort at Silver Springs.

Our thanks to Denise Anderson for a great job on the School Directory.

Our representatives to the newly created Legislative Action Network, Diana Stadtmiller and Jerry Rupley, are urging all Silver Springs parents to become informed about Proposals A and C which will appear on the Nov. 3 ballot, and on the Downtown Development Authority tax issue. All of these issues will affect funding of Northville's schools.

Please take time to look at the PTA Bulletin Board, located just inside the school's main entrance. If you have anything to contribute to the bulletin board please contact Lynne Byal.

A number of PTA committees are looking for parent volunteers. Our "Art Appreciation" chairperson, Karen Stephens, needs volunteers to bring this worthwhile program into Mrs. White's kindergarten classrooms. Julie Johnson needs volunteers to help with the Publishing Center. Ken Pawlowski has asked for parent volunteers to help with the Student Council. Peggy Quick is looking for people to help with the newsletter. Mimi Salamat, chairperson of the Health/Science Committee, needs volunteers to help with a number of future activities. Diana Stadtmiller, chairperon of Junior Great Books, can always use more volunteers.

If you have not already joined the PTA, we urge you to do so and to become actively involved. It is a great way to show your child the value that you place on his or her education. And to facilitate the involvement of parents who cannot attend daytime meetings, Silver Springs' next PTA meeting will be the evening of Tuesday, Nov. 17 at 7. We hope to see you there, but please remember that if you cannot attend monthly PTA meetings, you can still become involved.

WINCHESTER

The Wichester PTA would like to thank all the volunteers that helped make this year's Fall Carnival a great success. A special thank you goes out to Lori Dow and Donna Samhat for doing such a fine job in organizing this event.

The students enjoyed the Star Lab Planetarium JES program on Oct. 15. The next JES program will be "Snakes Alive" with naturalist Beth Duman. She will be bringing 5-6 native Michigan snakes and explaining their habits and habitats. The program will take place on Nov. 10 and 11 in the Rondelle for all grade levels.

Our first Family Skate Night will take place Nov. 17 for Grades K-2 and Nov. 19 for grades three to five at the Skatin' Station in Canton. The time for both events will be 6:30-8:30 p.m.

The pancake breakfast and Santa Secret Store event is scheduled for Saturday, Dec. 5, from 9-11 a.m. Volunteer sign-up sheets will be on the PTA Bulletin Board during the parent teacher conference during the first week of November. Be part of a fun morning and enjoy a great breakfast with your family.

Our next PTA meeting will be Wednesday, Nov. 4, at 9:30 a.m. in the Rondelle. Babysitting is available at a cost of $2 per child. Jacque Martin-Downs representing PRIDE Parent Training, will present a brief introduction of a parent to parent drug prevention workshop which will be available to our parents at a later date. A brief overview of the ALPS Program will also be presented during this meeting. Our first evening PTA Meeting will be held on Nov. 23 at 7 p.m. Winchester will then host the Board of Education Meeting which will begin at 7:30 p.m. that same evening.

We hope to see you there.

around $20 and include a cloth costume and accessories.

Most of the standard ideas are there. Flapper, gangster, witch, cheerleader, clown, nun, priest, etc. You won't win prizes for originality, but you won't knock yourself out in preparation time or money, either.

"Usually when you try to make a costume yourself, you end up spending more than you would have to just buy it," said Plantz.

But that doesn't mean do-it-yourself costumes have to be a major project. Certo has some easy suggestions.

"If you have a cape and some makeup, you can make all kinds of things," she said. "You could be a ghoul, or you could wear a leotard and be a cat."

"There's always the stand-by, a ghost," said Plantz.

Or, Certo added, with some old clothes and a little imagination it isn't hard to create a witch, pirate or hobo costume.

The important thing, of course, is to have fun. Wear something comfortable and be sure to get more treats than tricks.

JOHN HOLBROOK IS ONE OF "JERRY'S KIDS."

MDA® and JERRY'S KIDS® are registered service marks of Muscular Dystrophy Association, Inc

John, an ALS patient, just turned 80.

Still, he's one of "Jerry's kids."

That's because Jerry Lewis's cause, the Muscular Dystrophy Association, battles not just muscular dystrophy, but dozens of other muscle diseases, too — including ALS, killer of adults.

Also called "Lou Gehrig's disease," ALS strikes in the prime of life, gradually paralyzing almost every muscle in the body. Right now, no cure is known. But MDA has launched an all-out assault against this deadly disease.

MDA has developed the world's largest integrated ALS research and patient services program. The Association has established five major ALS research centers, and maintains some 230 clinics to help people with ALS and other neuromuscular disorders. And MDA provides ALS patients with medical care and equipment free of charge.

You can join the fight against ALS and other muscle diseases by making a tax-deductible contribution to MDA. You can even specify that your donation is to be used exclusively to benefit ALS patients.

Please help "Jerry's kids" of all ages. Send your donation to MDA today.

CUTTING DRUNK DRIVING

Q&A

By WILLIAM T. TOMICKI
New York Times Travel Syndicate

Q: We are looking for a tour of South America that focuses on the natural world. Any tips?

A: The ecotours in Machalilla National Park, in Quito, Ecuador, are designed for people interested in studying nature up close.

The tours last from four to six days, with itineraries that include foests, marine-animal habitats and archaeological digs.

Inside the lush 90,000-acre national park are a tropical dry forest, a cloud forest constantly shrouded in mist and animal refuges similar to those of the Galapagos Islands.

For further information contact Adventure Associates, 13150 Colt Road, Dallas, Texas 75240 or call (214) 907-0414. Information is also available from your local travel agent.

Q: What are the chances for good fishing and diving in Honduras?

A: Many consider the waters off Honduras to be the "ocean's breadbasket." A wide variety of fish inhabit the waters there.

Dazzling tropical species and jewel-like coral formations are a big attraction for marine vacations.

Among the island's prize catches are super-sized bonefish, tarpon, snook, billfish and blue marlin.

Travelers can contact the Utila Lodge — a small resort complex with a sport-fishing and diving facility — in Honduras' Bay Island keys. The sea there is clear and tarpon regularly swim up to the docks.

Various vacation packages include accommodations as well as boat dives, fishing gear, diving instruction and refreshments during fishing expeditions. For further information contact San Antonio, Fla.-based Roatan Charters, which owns the lodge, at (800) 282-8932. Information is also available from your local travel agent.

Q: Do you know of any bicycling trips through Spain that explore the Pyrenees?

A: These gorgeous mountains along the French-Spanish border, from the Bay of Biscay to the Gulf of Lions, provide moderately hilly terrain for bicyclers.

Cycling Through the Centuries, a group that leads cyclers through Portugal and Spain, has planned a 10-day tour of the Pyrenees, into the scenic Basque country.

Participants will cycle through medieval villages and ride over historic paths once traversed by the armies of Hannibal and Napoleon. Trips begin and end in Pamplona, made famous by Ernest Hemingway's famous tales about the annual bull running that takes place in the town's streets.

The tour is set for next year in early September, but it is a good idea to make early reservations. For further information contact Cycling Through the Centuries, P.O. Box 877-P, San Antonio, Fla. 33576 or call (800) 245-4226.

Q: Is it true that travelers can now visit Nepal's Mustang region?

A: The Mustang region -- a small, once-autonomous kingdom inside Nepal — is now open to trekkers. The valley has an altitude of 11,500 feet to 12,500 feet, with spectacular cliff walls that rise sharply to heights of more than 20,000 feet.

Lo Mantang, a medieval-fortress village in the valley, is home to shrines, monasteries and ancient castles.

Trekking trips to Mustang, suitable for both novice and veteran mountain hikers, will be conducted by Himalayan Journeys. For mor information contact the agency at (800) 435-TREK.

Cruising down to Cincinnati

Life revolves around the Ohio River in historic city on seven hills

By ANNASUE McCLEAVE WILSON
New York Times Travel Syndicate

Cincinnati was settled in 1788, long before the steamboat era, by Col. Benjamin Stites, who was so impressed with the beauty and natural advantages of the harbor and hills along the Ohio River that he decided to build there.

Seven hills make up the Cincinnati area, and there are some remarkable views of the gentle, winding Ohio River, an integral feature of life on the Ohio-Kentucky border. Mount Adams, one of the hills, boasts Victorian row houses reminiscent of San Francisco, as well as restaurants and shops. In Eden Park, atop another hill, is the highly regarded Cincinnati Art Museum.

Many early Cincinnatians were German immigrants who lived downtown along the Erie Canal, which they jocularly referred to as "the Rhine."

This neighborhood became known as Over-the Rhine and, though the Germans have moved on and the canal has been filled in to become Central Parkway, the area is worth a tour by car for its remaining 19th-century architecture.

Cincinnati is a river town and its destiny has always been linked to the Ohio. If you travel by car or taxi into the city from the Greater Cincinnati International Airport, cross the river on the Anderson Ferry by taking scenic Route 212 to Constance Road and follow the signs. The ferry costs $2 and you can pick up U.S. Route 50 right into town.

Cincinnati's Findlay Market, an open-air market in operation since 1852, is famous for its fresh meat and produce

WHAT TO SEE

Downtown Cincinnati sits very near the river, and the several bridges across to Kentucky, including Roebling's Suspension Bridge (a first draft for the Brooklyn Bridge), loom and lurch over the water just to the south.

Riverfront Stadium is right on the river, and in season the continuous flow of Reds and Bengals fans helps keep downtown Cincinnati abuzz.

Fountain Square at Fifth Street between Walnut and Vine is named for its 1872 Tyler Davidson fountain done by the Bavarian sculptor August von Kreiling.

Two museums downtown are worth a visit. The Taft Museum, 316 Pike St. (513) 241-0343, is an 1820 mansion in which the old master paintings and European decorative art collections of Anna and Charles Phelps Taft, half-brother of President Taft, is on view. Hours are 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Saturday and Sunday from noon to 5 p.m. Suggested donation, $2; students and seniors, $1.

The Contemporary Arts Center, 115 East Fifth St., (513) 721-0390, famed for successfully defending itself in a lawsuit involving the controversial Robert Mapplethorpe retrospective in 1990, is open Monday through Saturday from 10 a.m. to 6 p.m. and Sunday from 1-5 p.m. Admission, $2; students and senior citizens, $1; free on Sunday and Monday.

The Findlay Market on Elm Street in Over-the-Rhine is an open-air food market worth a morning browse on Monday, Wednesday, Friday or Saturday. Its 1852 market building is on the National Register of Historic Places.

Quite a few historic houses have survived in the Cincinnati area and are worth driving by, if not touring. On Dayton Street near downtown, once called Millionaire's Row, is the John Hauck House, 812 Dayton St., (513) 721-3570, open Thursday and Friday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; Sunday, noon to 4 p.m., admission $2, an Italianate town house built by a famous Cincinnati brewer.

Through Over-the-Rhine on Sycamore Street and into Mount Auburn, up the hill to the north of downtown, are a great many restored 19th-century buildings.

The riverside neighborhood of Covington just across the Ohio has a number of antebellum mansions in the East Second Street area. The 1853 Mimosa Mansion, 412 East Second St., (606) 261-9000, is open Saturday and Sunday, 1-6 p.m., admission $3.

Union Terminal, 1301 Western Ave., (513) 287-7000, houses the Museum of Natural History and the Historical Society, Monday through Saturday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., admission from $4.95 to $11.95; children, $2.95 to $6.95. Although the museum's collection is still growing, the building is worth seeing for its unusual art deco architecture and rookwood mosaics.

The Cincinnati Zoo and Botanical Garden, 3400 Vine St., open every day from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., is verdant and pleasant all year round. Admission, $6; children, $3.25. Its botanical collection is one of the largest of any zoo in the world. Admission, $6; seniors, $4, children, $3.25.

WHERE TO EAT

The Maisonette, 114 East Sixth St., (513) 721-2260, is Cincinnati's best-known restaurant and for the most part still stands up to its excellent reputation for French haute cuisine. Dinner for two with wine costs about $130.

A restaurant with a spectacular view of Cincinnati is Primavista atop Price Hill, 810 Matson Place, (513) 251-6467, open Monday through Saturday from 5:30 p.m., and beginning Oct. 18 Sunday from 5 p.m. Primavista serves elegant Italian cuisine. Dinner for two with wine costs about $80.

An innovative restaurant downtown is the Bistro on Vine, 713 Vine St., (513) 421-8305, which uses regional ingredients in unpredictable ways. Kentucky goat cheese with sweet roasted garlic cloves, smoked lamb sausage and duck burritos are samples of what is offered on the "grazing menu." Dinner for two with a local wine costs $40. Monday through Thursday, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m.; Friday and Saturday, 11 a.m. to midnight; closed 3-5 p.m. Monday through Friday).

Chateau Pomije, 2019 Madison Road, (513) 871-8789, is particularly pleasant at lunch. You can choose a wine from the wine shop in front and have it with your meal in the back room or out in the garden. The ample vegetarian burrito is very good; so is the chicken caesar salad. Lunch for two without wine costs under $20. The restaurant is on a stretch of Madison Road called O'Bryonville, where there are antique shops and a lovely patisserie called The Bonbonerie, 2030 Madison Road, (513) 321-3399.

Two well-loved hamburger joints are Zip's Cafe, 1036 Delta Ave. at Mount Lookout Square, (513) 871-9876, open Monday through Saturday, 11 a.m. to midnight, Sunday, 11 a.m. to 11:30 p.m.; and Stanley's Pub, 323 Stanley Ave., (513) 871-6249, open every day from 4 p.m. to 2:30 a.m. A cheeseburger and beer at both places costs about $5.

A good place for coffee and dessert is the Cafe Vienna, 1141 St. Gregory St. in Mount Adams, (513) 621-6655, Wednesday, Thursday and Sunday, 11 a.m. to 11 p.m., Friday and Saturday, 11 a.m. to 1 a.m. A cappuccino costs $2.40.

To be entertained while you eat, go to Arnold's, 210 East Eighth St., (513) 421-6234, where you can listen to live bluegrass music every Wednesday night and most Fridays. Open Monday through Friday, 11 a.m. to 1 a.m. and Sturday from 4 p.m. to 1 a.m. Hot baked turkey with mashed potatoes costs $5.50; Greek spaghetti deluxe, $8.25; homemade fresh fruit pies, $2.95 a slice.

A word about the famous Cincinnati chili: "Two-way" is chili with spaghetti, "three-way," add cheese, and "five-way," add onions and beans. A bowl of it costs under $3 at Camp Washington Chili Parlor, Hopple and Colerain, (513) 541-0061, open 24 hours, Monday through Saturday.

WHERE TO STAY

The Omni Netherland Plaza, Fifth and Race Streets, (513) 421-9100, is a grand and gracious hotel, built in 1931. The massive original lobby, now the restaurant and bar, is reminiscent of a splendid cruise ship of that era. A double room costs $165 and up.

Near the river in Covington is the Amos Shinkle Townhouse bed and breakfast, 215 Garrard St., Covington, (606) 431-2118. The 1854 house has been lavishly restored, with high ceilings with murals and period furnishings. Three rooms are in the main house; four in the carriage house. Prices range from $68 to $110 and include a full breakfast.

On the Ohio side of the river is the Prospect Hill Bed and Breakfast in Mount Auburn, 408 Boal St., (513) 421-4408 Another restored 19th-century residence, the house and three guest rooms are furnished in the Victorian style. Rooms, two with a view of the city, range from $59 to $79

Icelandic sweaters have adventurous beginning

By EVERETT POTTER
New York Times Travel Syndicate

The snow is blinding, driven by a 30 mph wind, as Eymundur Thorarinsson, his wife Sigridur Sveinsdottir and a dozen other family members and neighbors drive 200 sheep through the mountains of northern Iceland.

It is the fifth and final day of the annual sheep roundup, held in early September.

Sheep are a vital source of food and clothing in frigid Iceland.

Lamb is a dietary staple that turns up smoked, baked or boiled. And the wool from Icelandic sheep is spun into a remarkably soft yet durable yarn used in famous Icelandic sweaters.

In the annals of fashion it's difficult to imagine a more adventurous beginning for a sweater.

In summertime the sheep are brought up to the mountain highlands, where they are fattened up for two months during the endless days of the short Icelandic summer. In fall they are brought back down before winter comes.

The roundup goes on in driving rain, blinding snow and morning fog. The sheep are run through mountain passes and rivers that rise and fall extremely fast.

The work is done almost entirely from the back of Icelandic horses. These sturdy, muscular beasts with long flowing manes are one of the world's purest breeds.

On the fifth day, in a deep valley, more than 3,000 sheep are driven across the last icy river to a corral.

It's here that a process known as the "rettir" begins; dozens of owners must sort through the sheep to find their own.

Some sheep are marked by cuts on their ears, made when they were lambs. Others have numbers carved into their horns.

The boys in the group make a yipping, doglike noise to keep the sheep moving while the women emit an eerie, trilling sound that's impossible to duplicate without the rolling Icelandic consonants.

Flasks of "mountain Sprite," the soft drink liberally spiked with vodka, are passed from hand to hand. The horses tire after five days on the trail, but the pace quickens as the trip nears home.

The wool from the sheep — the end product of this mountain ritual — is used for the Icelandic sweater.

While many commercial shops sell the sweaters, the best prices and selection can be found at the Handknitting Association of Iceland.

Founded in 1977, the cooperative consists of about 400 women and five men who each knit six to eight sweaters per month. Each knitter earns about 50 percent of each sale.

"The best knitters can make a sweater in about 12 hours," says Anna Moller, who works at the association. "Normally, it takes two days."

The Icelandic sweater is distinguished by its patterns: A series of zigzags, diamonds and rectangles descends in rings from the neck to the upper chest. The pattern is echoed by a small band below the waist.

In the traditional sweaters earth tones predominate. But blues, purples and reds are becoming increasingly popular. The garments are immensely warm yet surprisingly lightweight.

Iceland is notoriously expensive: A can of beer is about $9 and a cup of coffee about $2.50. But the price of the handmade sweaters is a great bargain.

Women's cardigans and pullovers range from about $96 to about $112. Men's sweaters range from about $106 to about $122; children's from about $54 to about $100

With Iceland's 15 percent Value Added Tax (VAT) deducted from these prices, the savings multiply. (Americans are entitled to a VAT refund for sweaters and other items that they purchase in Iceland and take home with them.)

The shop also sells hats, gloves and mittens in matching colors and thick "TV socks" for padding around the house. For about $15 sweaters can be shipped by air to the United States. A free catalog shows the dozens of styles available.

For a copy of the catalog or for further information contact the Handknitting Association of Iceland, Skolavordustig 19, Reykjavik, Iceland, or call 011-354-21890.

For further information about Iceland contact Icelandair, 360 W. 31st, New York, N.Y., or call (212) 967-8888.

Kevin Shaw looks for more running room.

Gridders take third in WLAA with triumph

By SCOTT DANIEL
Sports Editor

Danny Walsh

Kevin Shaw knocked down a two-point conversion pass with less than three minutes to play Friday to preserve a 14-13 Mustang victory over North Farmington.

For Northville it was the biggest play of the season. The win left the school with its best finish in WLAA history — third place. And, in all likelihood, it pushed the Mustangs into the state playoffs.

"They are extremely competitive and don't believe they will lose," coach Darrel Schumacher said. "They have just done whatever it takes (to win)."

That's what the Mustangs did Friday night.

With the score tied 7-7 at halftime, Northville got the winning touchdown on its first possession of the second half. The Mustangs began on their own 30-yard line and quickly moved into scoring position.

On the second play from scrimmage at the 32-yard line, quarterback Danny Walsh rolled to his right looking to pass. The Raiders closed all passing lanes on the play but Walsh found plenty of room to run. The senior cut back to the far left of the field and went down the sideline for 23 yards. A roughing call against the visitors put the ball at the North Farmington 30-yard line.

The Raiders stiffened, but Northville scored five plays later on an option pitch. Kevin Shaw ran seven yards for the touchdown at 8:42 of the third quarter.

Shaw got to play defensive hero late in the fourth. North Farmington took over on its own 14-yard line after a Mustang punt.

Senior tailback Todd Anderson then hoisted the Raiders on his back to get the visitors within striking distance. The 6-foot, 175-pounder ran or caught the ball on 10 of North Farmington's first 11 plays of the drive. Jason Kong capped the drive with a 24-yard TD run at the 2:57 mark of the fourth.

"He's a horse-and-a-half," Schumacher said of Anderson.

After calling timeout, the Raiders elected to go for the win. Quarterback Dave Zietz found a receiver open near the goalline for the two-pointer. But Kevin Shaw and another Mustang stepped in front to bat the pass away and save the day for Northville.

Justin Cataldo recovered an onside kick and the Mustangs were able to run enough time off the clock to hold on for the 14-13 win.

"I felt it was one of our better team games," Schumacher said.

The coach said his team's ability to stop Anderson from breaking long runs was a key to the victory.

"I thought the kids responded well to keeping him from getting the long runs," Schumacher said. "I felt if we could do that we could come out on top. I'm very proud of the way the kids responded."

Northville's third place overall finish in the conference also put a smile on Schumacher's lips.

"All we wanted to do was be in position to win," he said. "You couldn't be prouder of the kids. I'm elated at where we are at."

North Farmington opened scoring in the first quarter. Anderson capped a 12-play drive with a one-yard TD run.

The Mustangs tied the game late in the first quarter as Marc Golden hit Jason Holman on a 22-yard touchdown pass. Golden took the handoff from Walsh and then found Holman all alone in the end zone for the score with just 40 seconds to go in the period.

Golden played an outstanding game. In addition to the TD pass, the junior intercepted a Raider pass and made numerous tackles.

"We got him to the spot where he can excel," Schumacher said. "Defensively he was everywhere."

Golden wasn't the only Mustang that played well.

Kevin Shaw had 54 yards in rushing, while running partner Rob Subotich did an excellent job of blocking. Walsh passed for 22 yards and ran for 51 more.

Northville concludes its regular season tomorrow night against Novi for the Baseline Jug. Schumacher said it should be a war.

"I think it will be a real battle," he said. "I think they want to win this game more than any other."

BASELINE JUG GAME

Football
Novi vs. Northville
7:30 p.m. at Northville

Advantage
	Running Back Both schools feature solid backfields. Northville is led by Kevin Shaw at tailback and Rob Subotich at fullback. Andy Sill does the bulk of the running for Novi while Pat Whitehead adds strength around the goalline. Mustang quarterback Danny Walsh, a highly elusive and creative runner, provides a dimension the Wildcats can't match, however..
	Quarterback Senior John Lahti gets his final call in a Novi uniform. The 6-foot, 175-pounder has played above and beyond all expectations this season, ranking as one of the state's best passers. Walsh simply doesn't have Lahti's throwing ability Wide Receiver The Wildcats go five deep in receiving threats with the likes of Ron Kane, Kevin Serra, Dereck Gavigan, Randy Naumann and Brian Csordas. Northville is led by Brian Jackson, Justin Cataldo and Eric Shaw. Both groups are capable of big games. The key will be which quarterback has time to get them the ball.
	Lines Neither squad boasts outstanding size. Offensively, Northville has improved in recent weeks, particularly on run blocking which has freed Kevin Shaw and Walsh to run outside. The Wildcats, although extremely small, have done a superior job giving Lahti lots of time to throw and opening holes for Sill. Novi has had touble on the defensive side. Teams have run at them successfully and for big yardage. The Mustangs' John Gatti, a defensive end, could be a big factor in the game by putting heat on Lahti.
	Linebacker Both schools feature hard-hitting, mobile players. Csordas and Jason Fischer, who may not play because of injury, anchor Novi. Bryan Kelley is Northville's top linebacker while Scott Hartsough adds support.
	Defensive back The Mustangs have an outstanding secondary. Walsh, Marc Golden and Eric and Kevin Shaw provide excellent coverage and big-play potential. Kane and Mark VanPoperin lead Novi.
	Special teams The Wildcats kicking game, both punting and place kicking, has been a sore spot all season. The Mustangs have been average on punting, but kicker Mike Hirvala has become a real weapon. Northville, led by Walsh, has also excelled on returns and seemingly gained points every game. If Novi can shutdown the Mustangs here, it will be a big boost.
	An analysis Novi has put up awesome offensive numbers this fall behind Lahti and his receivers. The 'Cats haven't played a defense as mobile and quick as Northville's, though. Novi must show a balanced attack to stay in the game.
	Prediction NORTHVILLE 31, NOVI 21.

Tankers give Walled Lake 70-23 dunking

By SCOTT DANIEL

To say that Northville High dominated Walled Lake Thursday in a 70-23 swimming dual meet would be an understatement.

The Mustangs won every event against the combined Walled Lake high schools. According to coach Bill Dicks, the visitors were fairly competitive considering the circumstances.

"The school has never stressed that sport," he said. "The coach is doing a heck of a job, and his kids had a very positive attitude. They have made steady improvement."

With the Walled Lake victory, Northville moved to 5-3 overall. The Mustangs are 3-3 in the WLAA.

Daneen Lang, Jill Walro, Tammy Cook and Mutsumi Yoshida took the 200-yard medley relay. Cassandra Johnson, Renee Olin, Julie Tharp and Michelle Hoblacki were fourth in 2:24.

Jodi Wesley won the 200-yard freestyle in 2:01.7. Megan Goble was second in 2:05.3.

In the 200 IM, Rebecca Anderson was the winner 2:23.6 and Mary Rivard was third 2:48.6.

Wesley took the 50-yard freestyle in 27.7 while Mandy VanHorn 28.5. Andrea Moretti's 1:08.8 won the 100 butterfly and Alicia Doehler was third in 1:26.2.

Northville took first and second in diving. Amy Christoff totaled 192.5 points, and Lisa Hojnacki scored 176.5.

The 100-yard freestyle was won by Brenda Newton in 59.6. Amy Kohl was second in 1:00.3.

Lang placed first in the 500 freestyle with a time of 5:54.4 — personal best. Rivard took third in 6:36.8.

Sheila Osborne, Goble, Newton and Wesley won the 200-yard freestyle in 1:46:8. Katie Rompel, Kelly Walro, VanHorn and Chris Parry were second in 1:59.6.

In the 100-yard backstroke, Anderson's 1:07.4 won while Katy Gudritz was fourth in 1:19.1. VanHorn won the 100 breaststroke in 1:19.8 while Parry took fourth in 1:36.4.

The 400 yard relay team of Goble, Newton, Moretti and Wesley won with a time of 3:58.6. Stephanie Keetle, Kohl, Cook and Jill Walro were second in 4:16.8.

NORTHVILLE 58, LIVONIA CHURCHILL 35: Although the Mustangs had just started tapering, they were still able to defeat the Chargers easily Oct. 20.

Tapering is a process that cuts back on the amount of yardage for swimmers so that they can peak for a certain meet. The Mustangs are gearing up for the WLAA meet and state finals next month.

Dicks said he was pleased with his team's performance against Livonia. He added that the margin of victory would have been greater in a six-lane pool instead of Northville's four-lane facility.

Harrison dumps Mustang runners

By SCOTT DANIEL

Farmington Hills Harrison proved to Northville why it's one of the top cross country teams in the Western Division Thursday by easily defeating the Mustangs 15-45.

The Hawks were able to take the top five spots in the race held at Cass Benton. Coach Ed Gabrys said he knew it would be a tough meet for his runners, but he was nonetheless a little disappointed.

"We wanted to break into their top five," Gabry said. "But they were just a little more talented that day."

It was the last dual meet for Northville this fall. The Mustangs finished 3-3 overall.

Conditions were mixed for the race. Gabrys said it was a pleasant day, but the course was sloppy from rain and snow earlier in the week. As a result about 40 seconds were added to finishing times, he said.

Jeff Zwiesler was Northville's top finisher Thursday with a time of 18:36. He was sixth overall.

Nate Kirmis ran an 18:43 race to take seventh overall. Chis Smith finished in 18:58 (9th) and Mark Ritter was 11th in 19:27. Rob Kukainis finished with a time of 19:39, while freshman Jim Hansen was close behind in 19:52. Dwight VanTuyl was Northville's seventh finisher in 20:21.

The Mustangs were scheduled to compete in the Western Lakes Activities Association meet yesterday. Gabrys said a fourth- to sixth-place finish in the conference would be good.

"Who knows what will happen," Gabrys said.

Regional competition takes place Saturday. Northville will run at Marshbank Park in West Bloomfield. The top two teams plus 10 individual runners will advance to state finals.

Wesley won the 200 IM in 2:17.7. Hojnacki took the diving competion with a total of 190.55.

In the 100-yard butterfly, Anderson won with a time of 1:06.1. The Mustangs' next victory came in the 500 freestyle as Wesley swam a 5:27.23. Lang recordied a personal best in the event with a time of 5:56.

Goble won the 100-yard backstroke in 1:04.3 while Johnson had her best time this fall to place fourth in 1:20.6. The team of Newton, Goble, Wesley and Moretti took the 400 freestyle relay with a time of 3:57.

Netters finish seventh

The Mustang tennis team's season came to a close Oct. 16 as Northville failed to advance from regional competition.

Just two teams advanced to state finals from the Mustangs' region — Bloomfield Hills Lahser and the WLAA's North Farmington. Coach Uta Filkin was critical of the regional format, which had competition spread out at six different locations. She said many players were forced to default for failing not to show up on time for their match.

"It wasn't a good tournament," Filkin said. "You shouldn't have to default."

No Northville players defaulted. Many did make a quick exit from the tournament, however, amid stiff competition.

Jennifer Lower fell in the first round at No. 1 singles. She lost in two sets to a player from West Bloomfield.

Kyley Mills also lost in the first round. She fell to Novi's Beth Vanderhoff 7-6, 6-4.

"She really played well," Filkin said. "She's made giant strides this year."

At No. 3 singles, Ellen Song took her first round match in three sets. The senior lost to No. 1 seed Jill Berringer of Farmington Harrison in the second round 6-1, 6-0.

Alissa Miller won her first round match on a default. She then lost in two sets in round two to a Lahser player.

At No. 1 doubles, Jennifer McCormick and Lisa Wagner made it to the second round. The duo won a two set match in the opening round but then lost in two to a team from Walled Lake Central.

Kristen Davis and Heather Hutzing lost in two sets to North Farmington's Lindsay Livermore and Jenny Pagewski at second doubles. Nanda Filkin and Julie Weix won 7-5, 6-0 in their first match but then fell in two sets to a North Farmington squad in round two.

WLAA MEET: The Mustangs closed the conference season on Oct. 14 by taking a seventh-place finish out of 12 schools.

Filkin said Northville had the misfortune of taking on highly seeded players in early rounds. Nonetheless, she said the result was "a little disappointing."

Lower played Walled Lake Western's Katie Kennedy in the first round and fell 6-2, 6-1. At No. 2 singles, Mills fell to Livonia Churchill's Lee Branlet 6-3, 6-4.

Song was a first match winner. She beat Livonia Franklin's Nicki Meehan 6-2, 6-3 In the semi-finals, Alisson Walkoan, who was the eventual conference champ, beat Song 6-1, 6-3. Miller dropped a two-set decision at No 4 singles.

Canton defeats hoopsters 64-37

By SCOTT DANIEL
Sports Editor

Stephanie Gray scored 18 points Thursday to lead Plymouth-Canton to a 64-37 victory over the Mustang basketball team.

According to coach Bob Shoemaker, the final tally was a little misleading. He said Northville played a solid game, at least in the first half.

"The score didn't indicate how well the kids played," Shoemaker commented. "We were as good as they were for a half. It's quite a compliment to the kids."

The Mustangs trailed Canton, which spent several weeks as Michigan's top rated team, by six points at halftime. Adjustments to the pesky Northville defense allowed the Chiefs to cruise to the victory.

The Mustangs' two Achilles heels, poor shooting and turnovers, did them in against Canton. Northville shot just 25 percent from the floor while committing 32 turnovers.

"Our biggest problem was our inability to get into our offense," Shoemaker said.

Neither squad played well offensively in the first quarter. The Chiefs scored 15 while Northville managed 10. Beth MacLean and Julia Bermingham led the Mustangs with three points each.

Canton jumped out to a quick lead and maintained throughout the first quarter, Shoemaker said. The Chiefs increased that lead by one before halftime.

Shoemaker was very proud that his team held Canton to just 25 first-half points.

"We outplayed them in the first half," he said.

Canton owned the second half, though. The visitors outscored Northville 39-18 in the two frames.

"When you play a good first half," Shoemaker said, "there is a tendency to let down. Quite frankly, they played well and took us out of our offense."

Lindsay Bacon led the Mustangs with 10 points. Kari Krupansky and MacLean each had eight points.

NORTHVILLE 62, NORTH FARMINGTON 51: The Mustangs won their second game in a row Oct. 20.

Northville played well from beginning to end against the Raiders, Shoemaker said. Balanced scoring was the hallmark of the contest as Howe, Gretchen Sander and MacLean all scored 12 points.

"It was our best offensive display all year," Shoemaker said.

The Mustangs had 69 shots in the game, 52 from inside the paint. Shoemaker said it's a good indication of how effective the offense was in the game.

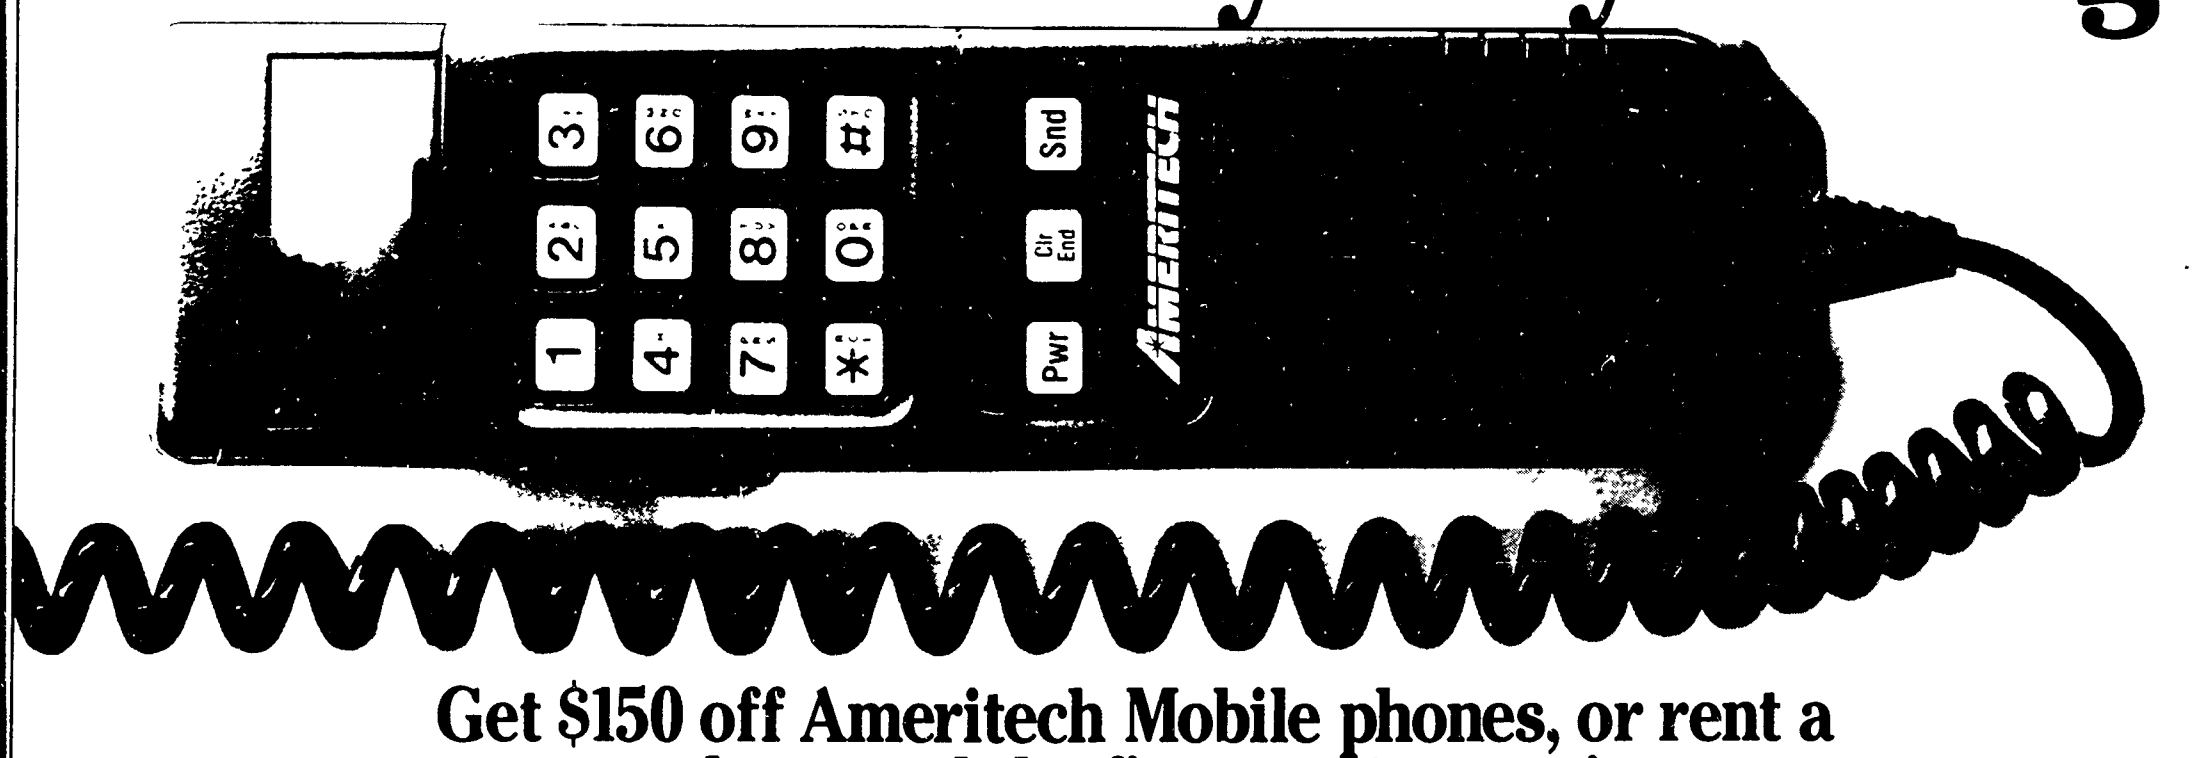

Northville took control in the first quarter. The Mustangs took an eight-point lead by the end of the period behind the scoring of Bermingham, who had six. Howe and Sander each had four points.

Northville took a 30-24 lead at halftime. The Raiders, which were led by 20 points from Carrie Perkins, never mounted a comeback in the second half.

Several Mustangs had strong all-around games.

MacLean had five rebounds and three blocks to go with her 12 points while Howe also snatched six boards. Point guard Nicole Hayden garnered her highest assist total of the year with seven.

RVs offer great freedom.

RV's offer ultimate personal freedom

Perhaps the ultimate in independence is having a home on wheels. You can live anywhere you like, for as long as you like, and move whenever you want.

No wonder owning an RV (recreational vehicle) appeals to so many people.

Even if you use your RV for a few short weeks a year, you may find it an ideal alternative to expensive hotels and resorts. Also on the pratical side, when not using it for recreation, you can use your RV for hauling items — from sofas to stacks of newspapers — anything too big to fit into your car.

As an RV owner, you automatically have thousands of friends nationwide. You'll meet them in campgrounds, in trailer parks and at RV "roundups."

An RV lets you carry more with you when you travel, and lets you bring more back hoome, too. Your pets can come with you, if you like. Also, when parked alongise your home, (or someone else's), an RV makes a great guest room.

Perhaps the most difficult decision potential RV owners face is what kind to buy — and what accessories to choose.

The anser depnds on two things: your budget and your lifestyle.

YOUR BUDGET

This is an excellent time to shop for an RV. Just as with automobiles, sales of RVs slow during the recession. Dealers are offering great bargains.

In addition, gas prices are low — a bonus, when you consider that even the sleekest, most energy-efficient RV tends to be a bit of a gas guzzler.

Don't worry about finding something in your price range. You can pay as little as $2,000 for a folding travel trailer (which you tow behind your auto) to upward of $100,000 for aluxury home the size of a bus.

But a bargain doesn't always mean a good deal. Beware of cheaply constructed RVs built by small, fly-by-night manufacturers.

How can you tell if the RV you're considering is worth its asking price? Several magazines publish critiques of RV models; among them are Motor Home and Trailer Life. Also, Consumer Reports gives mechanical reliability ratings for pickups and vans.

If you already own a van or truck, or if you're thinking of buying one, you're in luck: These are easily converted to RVs. The city you live in may have a shop that specializes in "van conversions."

Many RV dealers, parts shops and some sporting goods suppliers also offer equipment and accessories that will make a van or truck your home-away-from-home: fold down beds, stoves, sinks, portable toilets, awnings, more.

One ready-made combination van/RV is the new VW Vanagon Camper; it has a pop-top that opens for standing room, two double beds, a built-in kitchen — and drives like a station wagon.

YOUR LIFESTYLE

The most common mistake first-time RV buyers make is underestimating the amount of space they need.

Probably the best way to experience this firsthand, as well as other aspects of RV ownership, is to rent before you buy.

Ask the RV dealers in your area about rental rates. Even though you'll pay top dollar during the peak season, you may save in the long run if you discover the RV you had planned to buy is too small (or too big).

Incidentally, you nmight consider flying to a destination, then renting an RV to explore the surrounding area. Think of the possibilities — Canada, Alaska, Florida, Hawaii — even Australia or New Zealand. (Contact a travel agent for specific information.)

When you evalute an RV, pay particular attention to its floor plan, number and location of storage compartments, sleeping arrangements, bathroom size and water-storage capacity.

You'll find even lower-priced models use space ingeniously. Everything you need is at your fingertips or within easy reach. And numerous items, such as tables, beds and countertops have multiple uses.

The ultimate RVs may be those built by Beaver Coaches of Bend, Oregon. The company makes 200 motor homes a year, with list prices that range from the high $100,000s to just over $300,000.

Beaver's high-end Marquis model weighs 28,000 pounds, is over eight feet wide, and 40 feet long. The Caterpillar diesel engine can haul 80,000 pounds, and gets 9 miles per gallon under ideal conditions.

Above the driver's seat is a cupboard that holds a $4,000 stereo system, the cockpit seats are leather; the sitting room curtains are electric; the kitchen has a microwave oven; the bathroom a Jacuzzi spa; and the bedroom a queen-size bed. The list price: $311,739, fully equipped.

Such hotel-suites-on-wheels are the stuff dreams are made of — and it does make sense to spend a little more on an RV if you plan to use it often (or live in it full-time). On the other hand, if you'll be on the road for only a week or two a year, a small travel trailer or camper shell probaby is all you really need.

Substance abuse affects entire family

Some of us live in homes where a family member abuses alcohol or drugs. We could rationalize their use by saying, "At least it's not affecting our children." Unfortunately, we would be totally wrong.

Substance abuse has an insidious effect on the entire family. It quietly spreads through the family, leaving it in a state of chronic stress. The following are some characteristics of the family affected by alcohol or drug abuse.

First, people living with a substance abuser compulsively protect their inside feelings. Children may find when they cry, get angry or even show some excitement, they can be scolded for being out of line. The parent might say, "Wipe those tears off your face before I give you something to REALLY cry about," or "This is not the time for goofing around; sit still!" To survive in the family, children find only certain feelings okay to have. As these chidren grow into adulthood, they also may become a substance abuser to numb out the feelings that were not allowed in their home.

Any addiction, such as gambling, sex, food, work, exercise and television, can arise when people stuff their feelings and don't allow themselves the privilege of having them. They believe having feelings doesn't change things for them so they don't dwell on them. By the time they come into therapy, they've disallowed their feelings to the point that they feel nothing.

Second, punishing and shaming the child is common. Humiliating a child for doing something wrong serves the parent well, but creates a child with no self-worth. Joking about the child at his expense is also common. "Johnny wouln't know how to do it; he barely knows how to brush his teeth." When the child grows up, his opinion of his capabilities and confidence level will suffer. After he's continually told he is a klutz, idiot or dunce, he internalizes those opinions and it becomes a self-fulfilling prophecy.

Third, rules of the house are unclear, inconsistent and rigid. Inconsistent rules confuse children. For example, when it was all right last night to stay out until dark, but it's not okay tonight to do it, they don't understand the reasoning. Often the alcoholic goes in the "blackout" stage and forgets what they talked about. During their blackout they may say one thing, but it changes the next day because they have no recollection of what they say during their blackout.

The next day the child approaches that parent saying, "You promised we would go to the baseball game today." The parent retorts, "I never said anything about it so forget it." The child begins to doubt his own perceptions of what is really said. As adults, they end up guessing about what is normal and not feeling confident about their own perceptions of reality.

Fourth, in the substance abuse home, everyone must conform to the strongest person's ideas and values. Individual differences are not accepted. Children quickly learn that one does not fight "city hall." If they try to convey their opinions, the parents thwart opposing thought because it is too threatening to them.

If your home has someone abusing alcohol or drugs, do your children a great favor by getting help. Children of Alcoholics groups are available through counseling centers and in some school districts. Alanon groups are available throughout the metropolitan area. Call 779-3111 for information.

Lady harriers fall to Farmington Harrison 24-32

By SCOTT DANIEL
Sports Editor

Minus one of its best runners, the Mustang girls cross country team fell 24-32 to Farmington Hills Harrison Thursday.

Laura Brown, who has consistently been among Northville's top finishers, had to sit the race out with shin problems. Coach Nick Dunwoodie said his runner has battled bad shins all season and finally was forced to yield Thursday.

With Brown the outcome would have been closer, he said. The coach said it's doubtful his squad would have won, however.

Rachel Liedel placed second in the race, held at the Hawks' home course. She posted a time of 21:58.

Monica Nayakwadi was Northville's second best runner (fourth overall) in 22:31. Laura Thomas was seventh overall in 23:08.

Cross country and track runner Adrienne Browne placed eighth overall in 23:25 while Aaron Maloney finished in 23:52.

The race finished Northville's dual-meet season. The Mustangs went 3-3 overall.

The Western Lakes Activities Association meet was scheduled for yesterday (after Record deadline). With regionals also on the agenda for Saturday, it will be the Mustangs' most important week of the season.

"We are as good as we are going to get," Dunwoodie said.

A total of 21 schools will compete in regionals. The coach said Northville has a tough draw with teams like Ann Arbor Huron and Ann Arbor Pioneer competing.

Top two teams from the regional advance to the state finals. The 10 top runners, not from those schools, also go.

Dunwoodie said it will likely take a time around 20:00 to qualify individually. He said Liedel is a good candidate to make it.

"It would be quite an effort," Dunwoodie commented. "But she's capable."

Novi beats Hartland

By SCOTT DANIEL
Sports Editor

Novi scored early and often Friday night to take an easy 33-20 road win over Hartland in the final Kensington Valley Conference game of the year.

The 'Cats took a 21-0 lead into halftime on a pair of Pat Whitehead touchdowns and a third score by Ron Kane. The win was quite a bounce back for Novi after losing big to Howell the week before.

Coach John Osborne said his squad had a solid week of practice in preparation for the KVC finale. He was particularly pleased with the opening two quarters of the contest.

"It was a good first half," Osborne said. "They didn't have a first down (in the first half)."

The 'Cats dominated from the start.

After trading possessions, Novi got its offensive machine rolling by taking over on downs at its own 43-yard-line. The Wildcats used a pass-interference penalty on Hartland to keep the drive going on a third-and-10 play.

Tailback Andy Sill ripped off runs of 13 and 14 yards to get Novi into scoring position. Whitehead finished the drive at about the midpoint of the quarter with a seven-yard TD run.

The 'Cats made it 14-0 on their next possession. They took over on the Eagle 40-yard-line after a bad punt and scored 10 plays later.

Big plays of the drive included passes from quarterback John Lahti to receivers Kevin Serra for 15 yards and Brian Csordas for 10 yards. Whitehead found the end zone again on a one-yard jaunt as the second quarter began.

Novi's defense sparkled. The Eagles either punted or lost the ball on downs on every possession of the first half.

The 'Cats closed the scoring in the half by scoring on a third straight possession. On the 10th play of the drive, John Wroe took a handoff from Lahti and then hit Kane with an 18-yard TD pass. Novi took the 21-point bulge into halftime.

"It was a very solid half," Osborne said. "The defense was outstanding and allowed minimal yardage. It was our best half of the year."

The Wildcats added touchdowns in the third and fourth quarters.

Dennis Zielinski scored on the opening drive of the second half on a five-yard run. Sill added a three-yard TD run near the start of the fourth quarter.

Osborne said his squad played with more emotion against the Eagles.

"We were a lot more aggressive," he added.

The 'Cats' dominance showed in the statistics.

Novi outgained Hartland 378 yards to 167. Sill had a good portion of those yards with 142 rushing. Lahti passed for 136 yards while seven receivers had catches.

Novi finished 3-3 in the KVC and is now 4-4 overall. The Wildcats finish the season on the road tomorrow night by squaring off with Northville for the Baseline Jug.

The Mustangs enter the game with a 6-2 record and appear headed for state playoff action. Osborne said it will be a great game.

"It should be an interesting contest," he commented. "(Northville) is getting better every week. I hope we can give them a go."

While the 'Cats have averaged 28 points per game, Osborne said the Mustangs may be a little tougher to score on.

"Their defense will give us some problems," he said. "They've always done a good job defending us."

Moving the ball and continuing good defensive play will be the keys for victory, Osborne said.

"We will have to get our tackling tuned up," he added.

Game time is 7:30 p.m.

Mortgage agreements can be very costly

By James M. Woodard
Copley News Service

How can a mortgage loan with a "no prepayment penalty" clause result in a hefty prepayment penalty for the borrower?

That question was recently asked by a young couple who were refinancing their home mortgage loan. They were asked by the original lender to pay a prepayment penalty in the amount of $3,765, even though their mortgage note (contract) clearly stated no such charge would be made.

"It's a problem that's surfacing in an increasing number of refinance cases," according to a mortgage loan officer of a major bank, who would speak only on the condition of anonymity. "Many people probably pay the charged penalty without question. It's unfair to borrowers and they should be alerted to the possibility of this improper charge."

The most recent case, she said, involved the young couple who needed to refinance their home mortgage loan, originally made by one of the nation's highest-volume mortgage lenders. In planning the refinance loan, the couple carefully calculated all their costs. But

Side-to-slope make the Hines unique

By James McAlexander
Copley News Service

Design plans for the Hines take full advantage of a side-to-side slope to create a home with four separate levels, each a half-flight up from the last.

Not surprisingly, the garage is on the lowest level. Most of the family living area, including living room, dining room, kitchen and utilities, are on the second level. The family room is on the third, and sleeping rooms are at the top.

All four levels center around a lofty skylit entry foyer, partially encircled by railed stairways and open to the ceiling at the top.

An eating bar that angles out from the kitchen work island offers an open invitation to sit and chat with individuals working in the kitchen. For more formal meals, this counter doubles as a buffet.

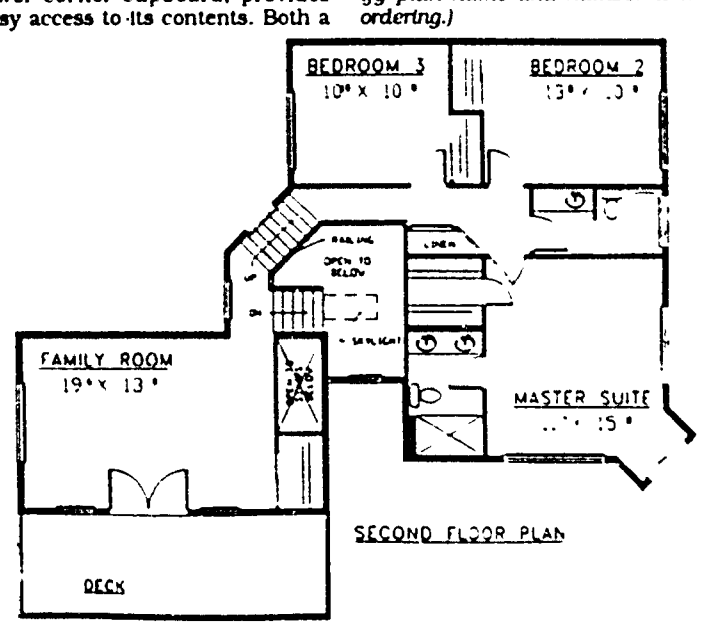

A Lazy Susan, built into the lower corner cupboard, provides easy access to its contents. Both a powder room and a small utility are conveniently close to the kitchen.

The 14-by-20-foot family room has its own storage closet and opens onto a wide balcony that runs the length of the room—a natural spot for catching a few rays.

In the front corner of the owners' sleeping room, a uniquely designed pop-out dormer could be built as a window seat, or left open for a sewing machine, easy chair or what have you.

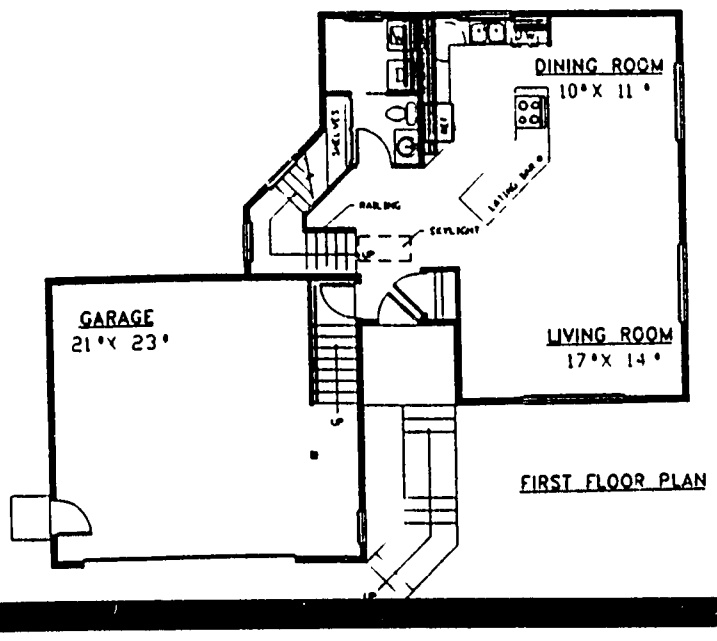

Other features in the master suite include a walk-in closet, oversize shower and twin lavatories. Two other bedrooms share a bathroom with compartmentalized water closet.

Fishin' & Collectin'

By Pamela Dear
Special Writer

Collectors like to show off, usually with shelves full of wonderful finds. Treasures may include plates, coins, depression glass, and even teddy bears.

You might say that Will and Norma Cash of Lyon Township are collectors of sorts. Their eclectic keepsakes add a special personality to the decor of their farmhouse which is over 100 years old. The owners have every reason to show off, and their treasures are not confined to shelves.

For example, Will, a keen fisherman, has visually employed his favorite pastime as an interesting motif into the garden and house design. Driving up to the charming two-bedroom home, located on Silver Lake Road, passers-by are treated with a scene nostalgic of Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn.

On the front lawn, Will constructed a 16-by-16 foot dock and anchored a 12-foot aluminum boat adjacent to it. A statue of a boy sits on the edge of the dock, with legs hanging lazily over the side, in a fishing pose. Realistic details include a minnow pail, fishing pole, standing pelicans, driftwood, and roping. The theatrical mood is successful without the element of water.

"I grew up next to a pond," Will said. "I like water and fishing. I've been fishing since I was a kid."

Will was named Lunker of the Year in 1990 by Michigan Bassmasters. He participated in January of this year in the prestigious B.A.S.S. Master Invitational Tournament held in Leesburg.

Color for winter

By C.Z. Guest
Copley News Service

GARDENING

For any gardener, the longest season is the one when the only color around is in the pages of the latest seed catalogs. A good way to combat those winter-season blues with some real-live color so that February and March don't have to be just shades of gray is to plant some early-spring-blooming bulbs now.

Early-blooming tulips, narcissus, crocuses and other minor bulbs will grace any garden with flowers even while surrounded by snow. These delightful, small flowers are subtle and delicate, so for greatest impact, plant them in large snowdrifts. Some specific bulbs you might consider are:

• Species crocus. Naturalizes well in full sun or shade. Blooms in February and grows 4 to 6 inches high. Plant 10 to 20 bulbs per square foot.

• Dwarf iris. Grows in sunny beds, borders, rock gardens and also containers. Blooms from February to March and grows 4 to 6 inches high. Plant 15 bulbs per square foot.

• Waterlily tulip. Will thrive in beds, borders or rock gardens. Blooms March to April and grows 6 to 10 inches high. Plant five bulbs per square foot.

• Glory of the snow. Grows easily in rich, well-drained soil. Good companion to forsythia. Blooms late February to early April and grows 4 to 8 inches high. Plant 20 bulbs per square foot.

• Siberian squill. Plant in a sunny rock garden or shaded woodland. Makes a good companion to snowdrops. Blooms March to April and grows 4 to 6 inches high. Plant 12 to 20 bulbs per square foot.

• Narcissus Cyclamineus hybrids. This includes tete-a-tete, February silver and February gold. All are at home in sun or semishade, rock gardens, beds or woodland. Blooms February to March and grows 6 to 10 inches high. Plant five to seven bulbs per square foot.

Caution: Buy only hybrids that have been professionally propagated — this species is endangered in the wild.

C.Z. Guest is a gardening authority whose work appears in House and Garden and author of numerous books and videos, including "Five Seasons of Gardening" (Little, Brown and Co.)

Winter blooms

■ Plant early spring bulbs now for a shot of color during the late winter months. Early blooming tulips, narcissus and crocuses will flourish while surrounded by snow.

Crocus

■ Plant bulbs where snow drifts gather or where the garden looks its bleakest during winter.
■ Plant dwarf iris in beds, borders, rock gardens or containers to bloom from February to March.
■ Glory of the Snow blooms from late February to early April when planted in rich, well-drained soil.

South Lyon couple catch collecting bug, hook line and sinker

Fla. He occasionally writes articles for "Michigan Wilderness."

When he is not fishing, Will is orchard manager, head of production, at Erwin Orchards in Lyon Township, and in the off-season he operates his own taxidermy business.

"I put that boat in the yard about a hundred times in my head," Will explained. Will's Uncle Jim found the boat and Norma's parents located the statue.

Norma commented that it is amazing how many cars slow down to look at the boat and dock display. "One day I counted 30 cars," she said. "It gives you a warm feeling and brings back the kid in you. It makes you use your imagination."

Will and Norma themselves have been quite imaginative in making improvements to their home's exterior. Will installed a 100-foot wolmanized walkway which begins at the driveway, leads to the front porch, wraps along the dock, and turns down to the taxidermy workshop located to the rear. This wooden pathway lures visitors to stroll and admire Norma's flower beds. Shrubs, peonies, roses, lots of summer annuals, and a split rail fence assist in creating this picturesque country garden.

Maintenance is minimal with the use of landscape timbers and wood chips. A wishing well, wheelbarrow planter, and several bird feeders, attracting starlings, sparrows, and squirrels too, are relaxing touches.

Other home repairs included hanging, an attractive pewter grey vinyl siding, adding a new roof, shutters, front porch, and upgrading an average front window with a large, and winning bay window.

The two-story home's interior, 1,370 square feet in size, is equally delightful. It is here that the couple further show off their distinctive collectibles. Will's warm regard for fishing is evident. For example, a clock, wood carving, pewter box, and letterholder all sport a fish motif. Two suncatchers of fish hang in the living room window.

A glass cabinet stores mounted bass, trophies caught by Will and Norma. Will said the largest bass he caught in Michigan weighed six pounds. Norma also enjoys the sport and is a former member of Bass n' Gals. Her small-mouthed bass, mounted on driftwood, sits on the television.

Miniature pewter and metal fish characters are displayed in a shadowbox. Have you ever seen Christmas tree lights in fish shapes? Will's sister Wendy found some to add to the couple's varied collection.

Norma centers her interest on collecting memorabilia featuring chickens and roosters. "I just really like chickens and roosters," Norma said. "I don't complain about Will's fishing lures, and he doesn't complain about my chickens."

The roomy kitchen is filled to capacity with cherished salt and pepper shakers, statues, soup bowls, mugs, dish towels, refrigerator magnets, rug, clock and more, each containing a chicken or rooster design. Norma does not know how many items she has. "Almost all of them Will has found for me," Norma said.

A shelf above the kitchen window and a cupboard display the whimsical pieces, bringing the homespun grace of country life into the room. A shadow box also holds miniatures. Norma said more items are packed away due to a lack of space. A circular stained-glass suncatcher with a rooster, of course, sits in the the window. In the garden, lawn ornaments and planters of chickens and roosters merrily abound.

Throughout the home, other personal finds are visible, including train cars belonging to Will as a child, an heirloom oak bed with ornate trim, and artificial floral arrangements done by Norma. A red-and-white Crown Gasoline pump, a real conversational piece, provides an eclectic element. Will restored and painted it. The original gallon price of 34 cents is intact.

"I still pull into the driveway and can't believe we live here," Norma said. "It was such an eyesore before."

"It really was," Will added. "But we have a long way to go." The couple plan to renovate the living room next. Norma said they have seriously undertaken home projects during the past five years. "Will is so artistic. I am so proud of him," she beamed.

This old farmhouse has been cared for with love and charm and stamped with a special personality, thanks to Norma and Will Cash.

Mortgage agreements can be very costly if you're not careful when the loan transaction was being closed, they were shocked by the prepayment penalty being charged by the original lender.

They had good reason to expect no such penalty. The mortgage note they originally signed read as follows:

"Borrower's right to prepay ... I have the right to make payments of principal at any time before they are due. I may make a full prepayment or partial prepayments without paying any prepayment charge."

Despite this clearly understandable language, the borrower was charged six months interest, over $3,700 as a prepayment penalty. To authorize the charge, the lender pointed to a confusing clause buried in an addendum to the mortgage note. It reads as follows:

"Prepayments in the twelve-month period beginning with the date of the note or anniversary date thereof ('Loan Year') borrower shall pay the lender six months advance interest on the amount by which the sum of prepayments made in any such loan year exceeds twenty percent of the original principal amount of the note."

In the "demand schedule" submitted by the original lender, a charge of $3,765 was listed as a prepayment penalty. Below the listed fees and charges was the following statement:

"Prepayment charge if shown will be waived if buyer obtains financing through (name of original lender firm). The prepayment charge is a contractual fee determined by the note."

In this particular case, the original lender decided to waive the demand for a prepayment penalty when the borrower and refinance loan officer objected. But in other similar cases, with other lenders, the charge was firm and had to be paid if the borrowers were to close their refinance transaction.

It pays to restore a chair

This novel Hunzinger chair should be worth $365 to $385.

By James G. McCollam
Copley News Service

ANTIQUES

Q. I have enclosed a picture of a Hunzinger chair we have purchased. I have removed most of the original red woven cloth that had worn through to the metal.

I also have enclosed a tracing of the Hunzinger marking on the back leg. Should I begin to refinish it? Or is it better left alone?

I would like to know the value of this chair.

A. George Hunzinger patented a variety of novel chairs from 1870 to the turn of the century.

Your chair should be worth $365 to $385 when completely restored. When an antique is in poor condition, it is better to restore it. There is nothing gained by not restoring this chair.

Q. I have a 7 1/2 -inch compote with the enclosed mark. It is hand painted with delicate flowers and has what I think is called a reticulated border around the top.

What can you tell me about the origin of this compote and how much it might sell for?

A. This compote was made by the Carl Schumann Co. in Arzberg, Germany, around 1900. An antique dealer would probably have a price of $125 to $135 on this piece.

Q. I have a blue-and-white cup and saucer marked with a picture of a rabbit and "Dedham Pottery."

Can you tell me something about their origin and value?

A. Your cup and saucer were made by the Dedham Pottery in Dedham, Mass., in the early 1900s.

They would possibly sell for $225 to $235 in good condition.

Q. I have a Leebald penny gumball machine. It has a round glass container in a Victorian-style cast-aluminum base.

What would this machine be worth? It is in good condition.

A. Your gumball machine was made around 1920. There was a revival of Victorian style in the '20s. This machine is quite rare— a true classic.

I find one listed in the price guide "Coin Operated Machines" by Jerry Ayliffee for $1,000 to $1,200.

Q. I bought a bowl at a flea market. It is 11 inches wide and 7 inches high, cream colored with pink roses on it.

It has a mark, "KT&K" with S-V below. Could you tell me approximately what it is worth?

A. Your bowl was made by The Knowles, Taylor & Knowles Co. in East Liverpool, Ohio. The S-V means semivitreous china. It was made in the early 20th century and would sell for around $35 to $45 in good condition.

Q. My husband and I were married in 1952, and as a wedding gift, we received a little dish.

I will describe the dish as best I can. It is porcelain with little blue flowers on four corners. The rim is painted blue and gold, the inside of it all white.

The bottom has a crown over an eaglelike bird, and over the crown are the letters "M.Z." Under all these marks, it says "Austria."

Please tell me if this dish has any value.

A. Your dish was made by Moritz Zdekauer in Austria in the early 1900s. It would be worth around $35 to $45.

Letters with picture(s) are welcome and may be answered in the column. We cannot reply personally or return pictures. Address your letters to James G. McCollam, P.O. Box 1087, Notre Dame, IN 46556.

Controlling silverfish that come to visit your home

By Gene Gary
Copley News Service

Q. We have had a problem with silverfish. These are insidious little bugs that appear on our walls and ceilings. They are easy to catch and kill, but we want to know how to get rid of them and prevent them from reappearing.

We have tried numerous solutions and chemicals, none of which has been effective in ridding us of this problem. Do you have any suggestions?

A. Silverfish can enter the home in several ways. They often come into the home through infested secondhand books, cardboard boxes or old papers. If your home is new, they may have come with the wallboard and green lumber, and found a feast of wood shavings, sawdust and wallpaper paste. Humidity from newly poured cement gives them the dampness they need.

These long-lived nocturnal insects may be making their way inside from flowers near your home's foundation. Preventing and controlling begins outside. Close off any holes around pipes entering the walls. Relocate flowers growing around foundations some distance from the structure because these insects like the mulch in flower beds.

If you collect old books, check all new acquisitions carefully before setting them on your shelves. Clean out bookcases periodically, shaking out the books for any signs of the insects. Repair any plumbing leaks. Check any lined draperies you have; silverfish often hide between the lining and the fabric

Once indoors, silverfish hide and lay eggs in wall cracks and behind baseboards. Usually, the first signs of the insect itself are damaged papers or books. They eat the sizing on paper and chew ragged holes in the paper itself. They also eat cereals, dead insects, linen, cotton, silk, paste and glue (as used in bookbindings).

One of the best non-toxic controls is technical boric acid. Technical boric acid is tinted blue for easy identification, and is treated electrostatically to cling to the insect's coat. The powder clings to the insect and the poison is carried back to its lair, where other pick it up. It's available at some hardware and builder's supply stores.

A commercial product that is similar (99 percent boric acid) is Roach Prufe, manufactured by Copper Brite Inc., 1482 E. Valley Road, Suite 29, Santa Barbara, CA 93108.

The powder should be blown with a bulb duster into any baseboard crevices and around door and window frames. Control may take several weeks.

Send inquiries to Here's How, Copley News Service, P.O. Box 190, San Diego, CA 92112-0190. Only questions of general interest can be answered in the column.

Will vandalism turn our forests into an endangered species?

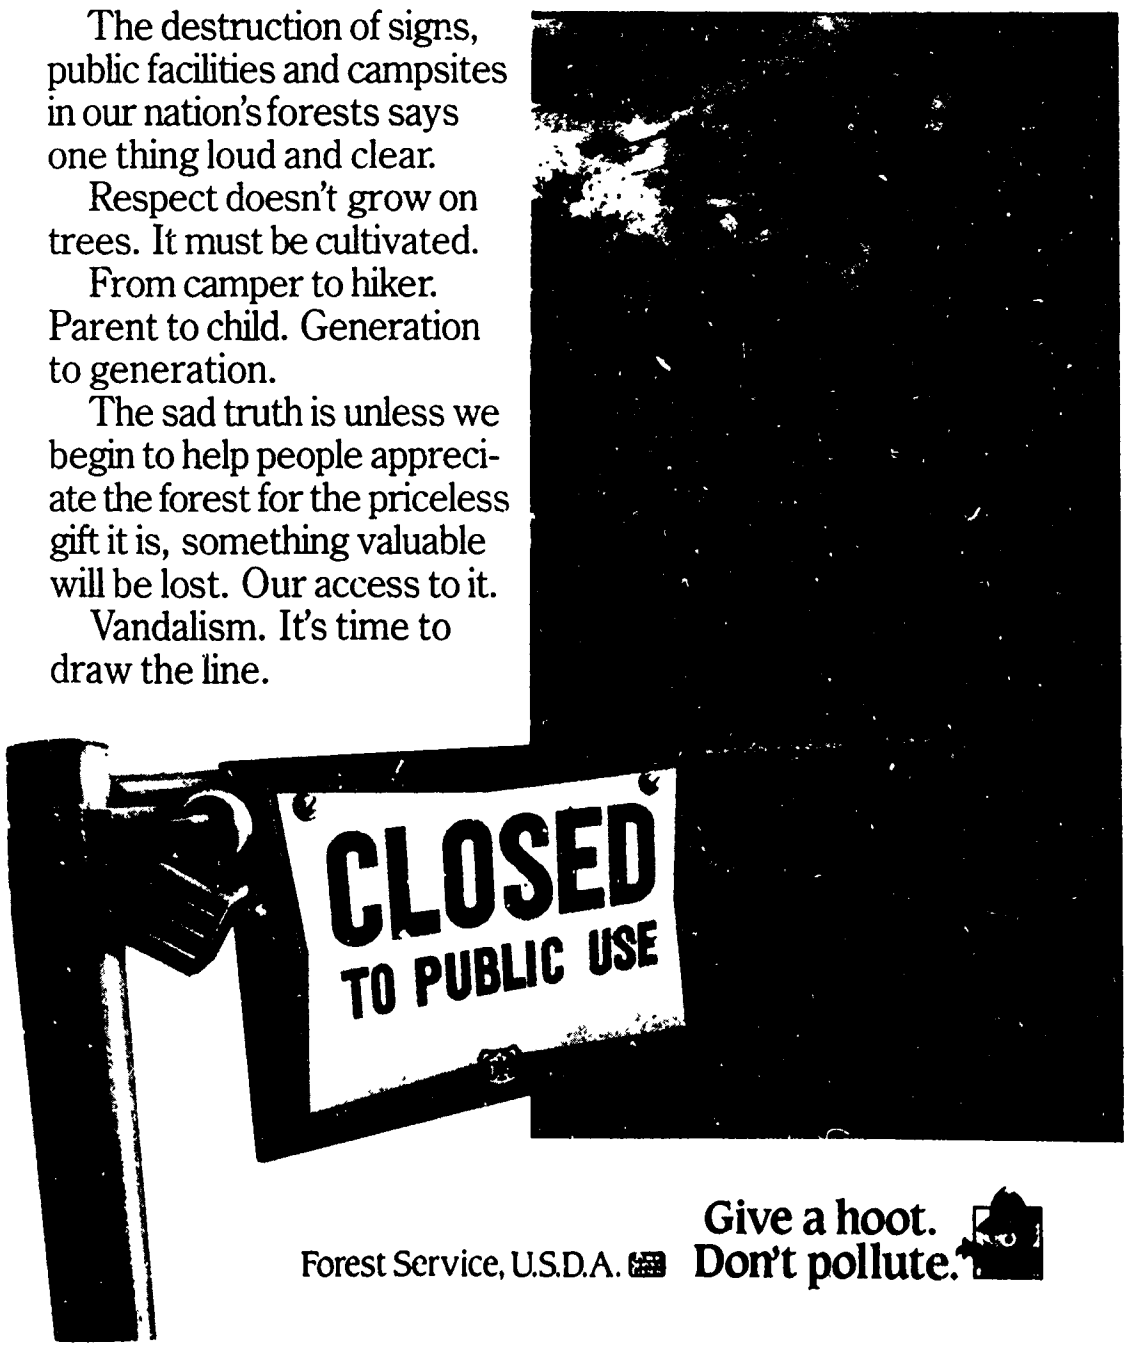

The destruction of signs, public facilities and campsites in our nation's forests says one thing loud and clear.

Respect doesn't grow on trees. It must be cultivated.

From camper to hiker. Parent to child. Generation to generation.

The sad truth is unless we begin to help people appreciate the forest for the priceless gift it is, something valuable will be lost. Our access to it.

Vandalism. It's time to draw the line.

Forest Service, U.S.D.A.
Give a hoot. Don't pollute.

Teacher taps into 'students' creativity

By RICK BYRNE
Copy Editor

Ann Oberts doesn't just teach piano. In fact, she seems to spread a little music everywhere she goes.

"I deal with everything from drugs, to suicides, to 'I'm flunking a class,' " she said.

That's some pretty heavy duty stuff for a piano teacher. But in the beginning, Oberts had only intended to be a music teacher. She got her bachelor's and master's degrees in music education at Northern.

She gave her first piano lesson in 1967 while she herself was still a student at Northern Michigan University.

"My mother had a friend who wanted to take some lessons," Oberts said. "I found that by doing that, I could supplement my spending money, and it gave me a chance to build up my teaching technique."

It must have worked because for the next six years she taught music to elementary school students at Sawyer Air Force Base near Marquette.

"I was teaching 650 kids, twice a week," she said. "I got to know how to deal with children and to get them to be creative."

But it was while teaching piano to children that she became interested in the conflicts that children faced when as they were growing up.

"I prefer giving private lessons," she said. "Once I got beyond the

Streamlined business turn to new interiors

Management efforts to streamline corporations are having an effect on the streamlining of offices too.

While no one is suggesting new interior designs incorporate wood planks, milk crates and cardboard, interior designers will continue to incorporate smaller offices, more work stations and less ostentation into their work as clients continue to hold the line on costs.

"Even though we see signs that the economy is starting to rebound, our clients are still very sensitive not only to the bottom line but also to the market they're doing business in," said Thomas Ernst, president and CEO of Ford & Earl Associates, a Troy commercial interior design firm, which had revenues of $3 million last year.

Within the commercial interior design industry, the use of more work stations and other space-saving devices is known as rightsizing, a catch-all term that refers not only to workforce reductions but also the consolidation of facilities and operations.

From a fact sheet provided by Ford & Earl, rightsizing has led to several trends in how designers plan the office spaces of tomorrow. The movement includes a reduction of private office space, more work stations, smaller-scale furniture and greater attention to ergonomic furnishings and space design.

"For a client planning a move, every department may ask for their own conference room, but only one might be approved. And for a client of ours in the health-care industry, which is doing very well, while they might have the budget for the expensive, they've been extremely conscious of practicality."

Chrysler Corp., which completed its 3.3-million-square-foot technology center in Auburn Hills, purposely kept individual offices to a minimum in favor of wide open spaces pocketed by work stations.

The reason was two-fold: to promote the free flow of ideas and to cut down on costs. As a general rule, work stations are a much more efficient use of space, taking up a third of the room an office might occupy. Because of this, their use has soared in recent years, not only for secretaries and bookkeepers, but also account executives, entry-level professionals, even managers.

"The advent of the personal computer really spurred sales of the work station, because as companies continued to update their equipment, they couldn't very well continue to afford knocking down walls, getting permits and hiring contractors," said Jim Sturdy, commercial sales manager for ROP Business Interiors Inc. in Livonia.

Peter Jeff, a spokesman for Grand Rapids-based Steelcase, one of the world's largest office furniture makers, said sales of the company's Avenir product line, a mid-priced system of office furniture, have more than doubled since 1990. Steelcase operates a design studio in Southfield.

Other interior designers of office space have cited the same trends. Fewer clients are ordering mahogany desks and leather chairs. Even once large art budgets are being curtailed in favor of less expensive creative offerings.

The movement toward practicality is expected to continue well into the current economic recovery, said Ernst. No firm wants to take a chance on ordering rosewood furniture only to have the economy sputter and stall. The same goes for expensive frescos and portraits.

For a client that recently moved to Auburn Hills, Ernst said his firm created small squares, circles and triangles from different colors of plexiglass to highlight interior halls in place of works by Degas or Warhol. Still, clients have not lost sight of quality.

"As far as selection goes, quality still rules," said Ernst. "Clients continue to favor natural wood doors as they wear better than paints and laminates.

"And for lobby floors, they might choose granite because it lasts much longer than tile or carpeting, but it all depends on economic factors and the length of time a firm plans to stay."

And design firms themselves are not immune.

Hanging in the lobby of Ford & Earl is a reproduction of a floor plan the firm created for one of its clients.

"When we moved here (six months ago), we, like most companies operating in a recession, didn't have a great deal of money in our art budget, so we improvised," said David Elston, chief operating officer and general manager.

"I suppose in a best-case scenario, we would like to have spent $10,000 on a work of art, but we didn't have it in our budget. We simply had an artist recreate one of our recent floor plans on canvas. I think the entire work costs us $300."

Local Saturn dealer offers new concept

Karen Tibus began her automotive career as a switchboard operator at Don Massey Cadillac in Plymouth 15 years ago.

Today, she's president of Saturn of Plymouth, Saturn of Farmington Hills and Saturn of Okemos dealerships.

If you're looking for the Farmington Hills Saturn dealership, however, it's not here yet. You've got to wait until mid-December when it's scheduled to open at Haggerty and Grand River, next door to Pace Warehouse.

"I have a lot of respect for all the posts in the store," said Tibus at her Saturn of Plymouth offices.

That's because she's done them all, including a stint as a car washer for the Cadillac dealership, as well as general office, service cashier, sales, assistant to the president and general manager.

The new 16,000 square foot dealership will be able to serve the Farmington, Novi and Lakes area. "I think Saturn fits a lot of family needs," Tibus said.

Saturn, which takes a market approach, allows dealers to pick a particular market area for their stores. Tibus took the Plymouth-Livonia, Farmington Hills-Novi and Lansing areas.

"That means no one else can build in that area," said Tibus, a Plymouth-Salem graduate.

Tibus likes Saturn's human approach to car sales. When a customer walks in, a receptionist provides a brochure and price sheet.

"There are no secrets. Every customer is just as important as the next. Prices are non-negotiable. We are buying the same car at the same price," Tibus said.

Saturn offers no rebates, no incentives. All cars are sold at a set price. "When customers come in, they know what they are going to get," Tibus said.

Saturn doesn't have sales people, it has sales consultants who help customers pick the car that fits their needs. "We get a lot of people who are learning. We want them to go out and compare our cars with other cars."

Prices range from $9,100 to $18,000. Saturn offers three four-door models, two two-door models and two station wagon models.

Three days after you buy a Saturn, a customer relations person will call you. This isn't someone you've never met before. While at the dealership, the customer relations person was already introduced to you. "She asks for honest feedback," Tibus said.

Five days after your purchase, the Saturn Corp. will call. And 30 days later you will get a survey in the mail, as well as a VIP packet, which includes a picture of you with your new car on a calendar.

Tibus admits there's been plenty of myths that have grown up around the Saturn product. But one of the amenities is a 24-hour road service, available over an 800 number. "And it's not just an answering machine," Tibus said.

With all the hard work and the determination to please customers, Tibus said, the quandry is how do you continue to exceed yourself time and again. "We have a real growth pattern. It's not a one-time shot. Now the question is, 'What are we going to do to make you come back, the second, third and fourth time you buy a car?' "

The new Farmington Hills dealership won't have a big back lot for new cars, but if business is great, Tibus doesn't rule out buying property for an additional lot.

"It's been hard times for the auto industry," Tibus said. "The recession has hit. People aren't out there buying new cars. It's tough for people even to service their vehicles."

Still, Tibus does little, if any, advertising. Sales have exceeded goals. "We have a great car at a great price. We've done literally no advertising except for the billboard on I-275."

Tibus' Plymouth dealership opened in 1990 but she's still getting a lot of surprised customers — especially when they realize the boss is a woman.

"It's a tough business for females to be in," she said. "You can't be a wife and mother and president of three car dealerships. I am totally dedicated to my work."

Money Management

Divorce need not be dollar disaster

With mature finacial planning, divorcing couples can save thousands in legal fees and greatly reduce their anxiety, says the Michigan Association of CPAs.

When it comes to dividing assets, the disposition of the home is often the most emotional and financially difficult decision couples face. In terms of tax treatment, property transferred as part of a divorce settlement is no longer treated as a taxable sale. A spouse who transfers ownership of the house to his or her ex owes no taxes.

When the recipient sells the house, he or she is liable for taxes on any increase in the home's value since its original purchase — not just since the transfer date. The seller can defer taxes by buying a house of equal or greater value within two years of the sale or, if over age 55, by taking advantage of the once-in-a-lifetime exclusion of up to $125,000 in capital gains on a primary residence.

Similar rules apply to the transfer of investments and other property. Either spouse can give the other any amount of property with no immediate tax consequences. But when the spouse who received the property sells it, he or she is responsible for the tax on all the appreciation before as well as after the transfer.

Therefore, you should consider the asset's true worth after taxes to arrive at a fair settlement.

After a home, retirement benefits such as IRAs, Keoghs, 401(k) plans, and pensions are generally a couple's next most valuable asset. Most states now take the position that a working spouse's pension rights are a marital asset, and can be divided as part of a divorce settlement.

If both spouses worked throughout the marriage, the easiest solution is for each person to keep his or her own retirement savings. But if one spouse did not work outside the home, some division of retirement benefits will usually take place. You may want to retain a CPA to determine the value of retirement benefits.

Today, only spouses who have poor prospects for becoming financially independent are likely to be awarded long-term alimony. The spouse who pays alimony can deduct it regardless of whether he or she itemizes deductions. The person receiving the alimony must report it as income.

To qualify for the tax deduction, alimony must be paid in cash according to the divorce agreement and must stop when the recipient dies. If your annual payment for alimony is $15,000 or less, you may deduct it without question. Annual payments of more than $15,000 must meet certain conditions to be fully deductible. Alimony payments that do not meet these conditions are subject to complex rules that allow the IRS to recapture tax revenues lost through inflated alimony deductions.

Child support, however, is not deductible for the person who pays it and is not included in the income of the person who receives it. Keep in mind, too, that although both parents may contribute to the support of their children, only one is entitled to claim dependency exemptions for them.

Once the knot has been officially untied, be sure to change the name of the beneficiary on bank accounts, mutual funds, brokerage firm accounts and insurance policies. You should also update your will. If you still have joint credit cards, change them so that they are in your name alone.

You may want to revise your budget. Without a spouse's salary as a safety net, CPAs stress that it is especially important to create an emergency fund to cover three to six months of living expenses.

Teacher spreads music all over methods for my major, then I got into child issues. So I went back and got my master's in child counseling.

"But with music being my real love, I wandered back to that."

Now that she's achieved a balance between counseling and music instruction, she finds that the two tend to go hand in hand. With the counselor's penchant for careful listening, Oberts feels she can offer students better instruction.

"Most people believe that the common situation is where the parent wants the child to take the lessons while the child does not," she said. "I find that very infrequently. You just have to listen and be flexible.

"The teaching is what I like best. Those things can be so rewarding. I enjoy seeing the growth in the students and seeing the excitement as they learn.

And that excitement isn't only found in the eyes of a child. Many of Oberts' home students are adults as well.

"When adults say, 'Learning piano was something I always wanted to do, and now I'm doing it,' it's great," Oberts said. "To see a grown-up sit and sweat over it never ceases to amaze me. It becomes a human outlet."

The college students that she teaches at EMU don't get quite so intense, but then, they don't need to. Oberts teaches a freshman-level course in the performing arts whose aim is to get future elementary school teachers to incorporate music in their lesson plans.

"We don't approach it like they're going to Juilliard," she said. "It's a recreational outlet.

"We do a lot of peer teaching where the students teach each other. The fun part is getting them to do interdisciplinary things like incorporating music and science, or music and math."

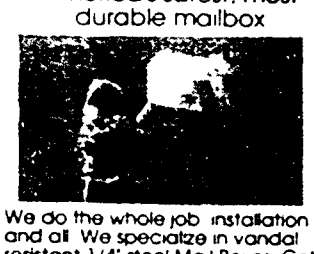

Oberts finds fulfillment in her work with the Novi Arts Council in that she feels it gives the community choices not found elsewhere. And Novi has proven receptive to the arts

Through her EMU connections, Oberts helped arrange for two performances of plays for elementary school students this year. In addition, the EMU Youth Theater will present two productions for older students next year.

The Arts Council also arranges for the best music students to perform for audiences at the Civic Center.

"Because we can develop such a wonderful athletic program, it's nice to develop the aesthetics too," she said. "It's nice to have choices in your community."

Little ATM crime reported locally

Recent laws in New York City requiring tougher security measures at automated teller machines are not likely to be adopted in metro Detroit.

In recent years, several people were murdered after they were abducted from or taken to cash machines in New York City. The new laws, both stringent and expensive, call for the use of surveillance cameras and other security measures.

Closer to home, two teenage assailants, after murdering a Rochester Hills couple in their home two years ago, used a magnetic card they found in the home to operate a local cash dispenser. But the criminals were soon apprehended and are now in jail.

"Unless there's an outbreak of automated teller machine crimes, or some heinous act involving a cash machine which gets a lot of media attention, I don't see tougher security measures being passed," said Ray Van Hoeck, vice president of the retail banking group for the National Bank of Detroit.

The bank operates 206 cash machines in the state, 25 percent of which have surveillance cameras. Another 10 percent have locks that check the cards of people entering a cash machine vestibule against computerized bank records. Overall, there are 4,000 automated teller machines in the state.

"These types of crimes are few and far between. We haven't had one incident involving a cash machine," said Chief Robert Scoggins of the Plymouth Police Department. "Of course, we have a small area to patrol, and we're very visible."

Across the state, there were 240 bank robberies last year, up from 200 in 1990. The records division of the Michigan State Police Department does not categorize such crimes by type. Both the city of Rochester and Rochester Hills reported no robberies involving cash machines have been committed since the murder incident two years ago, and even then, the cash dispenser was a case of one crime leading to another.

In use since the mid-'70s, automatic teller machines, or ATMs, have steadily proliferated, and can now be found at most bank branch sites as well as large office buildings, grocery stores and retail outlets. Although security measures such as surveillance cameras and card-access locks are in place at area cash dispensers, their presence is far from universal.

The new laws in New York City, adopted two weeks ago, are blanket restrictions. In addition to requiring cameras at all machines, either a card-lock or security guard must be in place. Better lighting, large windows in at least one wall, mirrors to let customers see behind them and electronic surveillance signs are also called for.

Because the improvements will cost tens of millions of dollars to implement, banking officials here say it is highly unlikely any new laws would be so restrictive. What's more, there is no guarantee the laws would curtail such crimes.

"Most of our machines are in 7-Eleven stores, and as such there are people around when someone uses them," said William Yaw, senior vice president and director of marketing for Standard Federal Bank in Troy. "I don't know how you can get any safer than that."

Yaw said the bank has 186 ATMs, 127 of which are operated independently from the institution's 119 state branch locations. He declined to reveal the number of machines with cameras, citing security reasons. Cameras are concealed.

In seeking legal redress for an ATM crime, Patrick Burkett, an appellate lawyer for Sommers, Schwartz, Silver & Schwartz in Southfield, said it was highly unlikely victims could sue a bank for not providing adequate security. "Michigan law is clear on this issue, unless a plaintiff relies on a bank's security guard to their detriment, or the manager of a bank has knowledge of criminal activity and refuses an immediate request for help, then there's no case," said Burkett.

Police officials recommend people refrain from writing the access code on the card.

Mary DiPaolo/Focus: Small Business

Ask right questions when buying

Q: I am thinking about buying a small business that has been in existence for over five years. What are some of the questions I should be asking the seller to obtain important information that will significantly influence my decision to buy?

A: Simply stated, you want to find out "everything" you can about the business under consideration. When buying a compny there is no unimportant information.

Unfortunately, many prospective buyers rely primarily on finacial statements, data and other available documentation the seller offers to make "informed" purchase decisions. Although all of this may be very useful, it is not where one should start and stop.

You should feel free to probe and investigate every aspect of the bperation. Ask the seller if you may speak with some of the firm's past and present customers. You may also ask to conduct a random sample survey among company employees. Other key questions directed at the seller would relate to the major areas of the business such as production, marketing, finance, and personnel. This may be done during the first few meetings with the seller; after that time, you will be in a position to ask the following questions:

- 1. What aspects of the business do you enjoy the most? (The answer should take a while.)
- 2. What aspects of the business do you find the most challenging? (Wait for the answer, and don't stop probing until you get it.)
- 3. If you had to do it all over agin, what would you do differently? (This one works to identify all the "lost opportunities" as well as any "mistakes" the seller feels personally responsible for.)
- 4. If money was not a constraint at times, what could you have done with this company? (He or she will probably tell you in the next five minutes everything that's wrong with the business.)

Q: Should an independent audit be used to reveal problems with a company?

A: An audit is a verification of financial data using procedures and tests known as GAAS (Generally Accepted Auditing Standards). While these procedures are the best known for checking the reliability of financial data, they have not been designed to uncover fraud and acts of collusion on the part of company management.

Neither does GAAS purport to test every single business transaction. As a result, there will be a certain degree of statistical error inherent in every audit.

Q: What are hidden liabilities?

A: The term "hidden liability" is used to decorate any eventuality that might arise later and cost you, as the new owner, money to fix. Examples include unpaid taxes, unfunded pensions, a judgement against the business, or a structural defect in a wall.

How to avoid pre-wedding jitters

By Debra Lee Baldwin
Copley News Service

"I can't wait until our honeymoon," Maria told a friend at work. "Maybe I'll finally get some sleep."

Maria wasn't trying to be funny; she was simply dog tired from lying awake at night, worrying about what might go wrong at her wedding.

Sound familiar?

Relax. Pre-wedding jitters can be avoided. The following nuggets of advice will help any nervous bride preserve her peace of mind.

First and foremost, be realistic. Nothing in life is perfect, and your wedding probably won't be, either. Promise yourself you'll cherish the best parts and laugh at the worst.

If your brain is abuzz with things to remember, write them down. Keep checklists of things that must be done, and make deadlines for doing them.

Comfortable using a computer? "The Wedding Planner" from Ninga Software can help you keep track of everything from invitations to thank-you notes to caterers and flower girls.

If you feel overwhelmed, get help. Ask your mother, siblings, best friend, a party planner or a professional wedding consultant for assistance.

Don't hesitate to delegate. A calligrapher can address invitations, a travel agent can make honeymoon arrangements, your fiance can make phone calls.

Resist the temptation to do your wedding planning at work. In fact, it's a good idea to reassure your boss that your performance won't slide as the big day approaches.

Reserve weekends to visit clergy members, scout reception sites, compare florists — or, if your hours are flexible, work a later shift and do these tasks on weekdays.

As much as possible, involve your fiance in the decision-making. If a bridal fair is scheduled for your area, both of you should attend; it's a great timesaver and opportunity to compare numerous wedding services.

Should you invite your boss and coworkers to the wedding?

"Only if your relationship is particularly cordial," advises Modern Bride magazine. "Unless you socialize with them for lunch or outside of the office, they should not expect an invitation."

You needn't try to please everyone.

"Those who are underwriting the cost frequently believe that their wishes should be fulfilled in direct proportion to their contribution," says Modern Bride.

"Wrong! They should be taken into consideration, but not at the expense of the couple's friends or taste in terms of wedding style."

Worried about divorced parents? They may dislike each other, but chances are they'll make an effort to get along for your sake at your wedding (especially if you ask them to).

"Anticipate feelings," advises Bride's & Your New Home. "If your mother will be facing your father's new wife, ask her to bring a date, seat her with close family and friends at the reception."

Also, explain your parents' marital status to wedding professionals (caterer, photographer, clergy), and you'll avoid awkward situations.

What if his relatives are abrasive?

"Settle disputes between yourselves first," advises Bride's and Your New Home. "Then, let him deal with his relatives; you negotiate with yours."

Cultivate the skill of viewing situations from other people's perspectives. If your future mother-in-law (or an attendant) resists wearing what you want her to, it may be she can't find it in her size, or the color makes her look awful. You're queen for the day, be a compassionate one.

Ethnic and interfaith marriages are not problems, they're opportunities. Friends and relatives may need to be reassured that the two of you are not blinded by love, but are totally committed to the future you will share together.

Rather than playing down your diverse religious or cultural upbringings, emphasize them—beautifully and meaningfully — at your wedding and reception.

Keep in mind that invitations, location, ceremony, music, food and even the cake can symbolize the harmonious blending of your backgrounds. These personalized touches also will enhance the wedding and make it memorable.

You might wear different colored ribbons in your hair, for example, to acknowledge your Italian ancestry. If his heritage is Chinese, you might use red—which symbolizes love and joy—for an accent color.

Short on money? Focus on priorities. Narrow down your guest list; opt for a single-entree buffet and simple hors d'oeuvres; have an afternoon rather than evening reception; serve punch instead of cocktails; rent silk flowers or potted plants from a florist; reduce the number of musicians.

But don't skimp on the photographer and/or videographer.

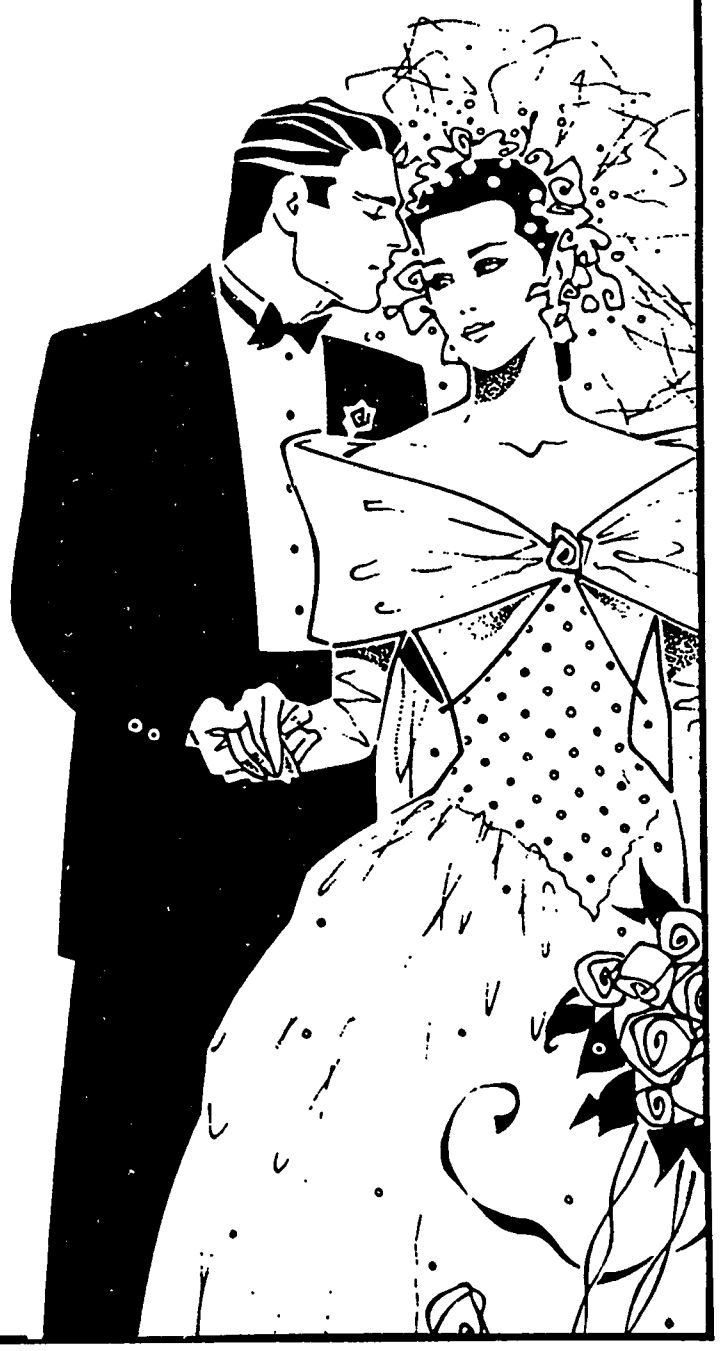

"Since your pictures and video will be all that's left of your wedding once it's over, this is one area where it pays to hire a professional," advises

Bridal blooms for him and her

By Tershia d'Elgin
Copley News Service

All weddings are, in their way, garden weddings. Adam and Eve gallivanted in Eden. Juno made a blossom offering to Jupiter. Pungent bundles of herbs, designed to fend away evil, were part of medieval marriage ceremonies.

By now the floral tradition is as inherent to weddings as white dresses. From altar through reception, everywhere and everybody is studded with fragrant arrangements and bouquets. All contribute to an atmosphere of ritual and celebration.

In this, our broad-minded present, couples are not locked into a limited style. Every trend since prehistory avails itself - from the traditional ensembles of white roses and stephanotis to branches from flowering trees.

Floral aspects of your wedding will dovetail more easily with gowns and decor if you research first, make decisions later. Collect tear sheets from bride's magazines and fabric swatches. Paging through wedding guides such as Martha Stewart's "Weddings" (Clarkson Potter) will help brides visualize the possibilities.

To achieve a real hothouse effect, you'll need a good florist or a very gifted and dedicated friend or relative. It's a lot to ask. Wedding experts recommend either professionals of your own experience or referrals. Be sure to ask for references as part of your consultation.

Your chosen tone and color scheme can help determine your flowers. Will your wedding be normal, country, contemporary, traditional or ethnic? Experiencing fresh combinations at your florist may redirect your thinking.

Getting an accurate count of floral needs can involve a pretty complex equation. Immerse yourself in a comprehensive how-to such as Edith Gilbert's "The Complete Wedding Planner" (Warner) or Yetta Fisher Gruen's "Your Wedding: Making It Perfect" (Penguin).

A realistic assessment of both the ceremony and reception sites will determine the extent of flowers you'll need. For example, efforts for a garden wedding would differ greatly from a hotel reception room.

You'll need to settle on pew and altar arrangements or the huppah if the ceremony is Jewish, centerpieces for the reception, the bridal and attendants' bouquets, groom, groomsmen, and father-of-thebride boutonnieres, plus smaller bouquets or corsages for mothers and grandmothers.

Many brides elect to decorate their wedding cakes with live flowers or petals, then tie a flower to the cake knife.

The all-important bridal bouquet is dictated by the style and fabric of bride's dress. Full, ornate gowns look better with a smaller more understated bouquet. Sleeker, simpler gowns seem to demand a more dramatic cascade. Florists construct wreaths and even stoles of flowers for brides.

One no longer needs a June wedding to assure an abundance of fresh blossoms. A global economy and modern transportation put blooms at the ready year-round. But varieties in-season on your wedding date will be less expensive. Carnations, hybrid roses and alstroemeria are available all year, whereas peonies, delphinium and canterbury bells are seasonal.

Brides who wear contemporary gowns will love simple bouquets of exotic blooms.

Greenery, ribbon and tulle can help "fill out" bouquets so you'll need fewer flowers. Growing your own flowers is another way to cut espenses.

In our wedding, we used flowering potted plants fresh from the nursery which we later planted in our garden. Some nurseries will rent large potted plants and often provide pickup and delivery. Skirt the pots with baskets or fabric knotted with ribbons or cord.

Don't think your arrangements need be lavish to be elegant. Simple, spare centerpieces can be esquisite. Most florists will rent vases that will further reduce the cost.

Many churches book more than one wedding a day. You may want to consider sharing pew and altar with other brides to save money.

Today's environmental focushas loosened the constraints on carefully constructed bouquetsand arrangements. We're seeing more loose, natural looking bouquets of long stemmed garden or wildflowers, herbs and grasses.

Some centerpieces are arranged in flat containers and covered with moss so they appear to have been dug up.

Flowers have their own language, developed over time. Forget-me-nots mean true love, daisies imply innocence, violets promise faithfulness and so forth. By doing a little research, you can convey a romantic message with your floral combinations. This Persian custom was popularized in Victorian England.

Posy-giving doesn't stop when the bride tosses her bouquet. Many couples send flowers to their parents the next day to thank them for their generosity or arrangements to close relatives who weren't able to attend.

Avoiding the pre- (and post-)wedding jitters

Bride's and Your New Home.

The magazine also says that bridal consultants can sometimes double as financial managers — helping couples fight the "urge to splurge."

If you and your fiance need to work out financial arrangements concerning children from a previous marriage, are putting each other through school, or if one of you owns large assets, a prenuptial agreement might provide peace of mind.

What if you love each other and are committed to your relationship but you have trouble agreeing? You've heard the statistics on divorce, how can you make sure it doesn't happen to you?

Pay attention to warning signs: frequent, unproductive arguments; not sharing important decisions; finding little pleasure in each other's company, feeling isolated and lonely; verbal or physical abuse; dependence on drugs or alcohol.

Next, take action.

"Real-life couples argue, negotiate, compromise, even go to therapy sessions," advises Bride's and Your New Home. "In fact, more and more couples are signing up for outside help — from prenuptial counseling to long-term marital therapy."

Bear in mind that the greatest stress-reliever of all is to know help is available when and if you need it. Z

Choose gifts that reflect your style

By M.R. Bradford
Copley News Service

Centuries ago in Europe, it was customary for village neighbors to outfit a newlywed home. Today the responsibility has been passed on to family, friends and coworkers.

In the past, choosing gifts was relatively simple; the couple had nothing and needed everything. The changing demographics of the bridal scene have had an impact on gift-giving and have made the gift registry a necessity.

The bridal gift registry was created to help couples request essentials needed for their new home together, and to give guests direction in finding the perfect gift.

Use of bridal registries has increased steadily in recent years. Today an estimated 65 percent of engaged couples are coordinating wedding gifts through department and specialty stores.

Some couples feel that registering makes them appear predatory or greedy. Nothing could be farther from the truth. Guests want to send the right gift, and registries make things easier, especially for those who are not sure of the couple's tastes. The days of six toasters and three blenders are over.

WHEN TO REGISTER

It is important not to wait too long to register.

The best time is three to four months prior to the wedding. This allows for the names of the stores in your registry to circulate among the guests. It also permits people to choose engagement and shower gifts from the registry, too. Well-mannered brides-to-be know that registry information should be spread by word of mouth, not printed in the invitation.

WHERE TO REGISTER

Anywhere you want to. Most engaged couples register with one or two specialty shops and at least one department store for convenience. Major stores have everything from china to juicers to vacuums, and they may make it easier for family and friends in other cities to select the perfect gift.

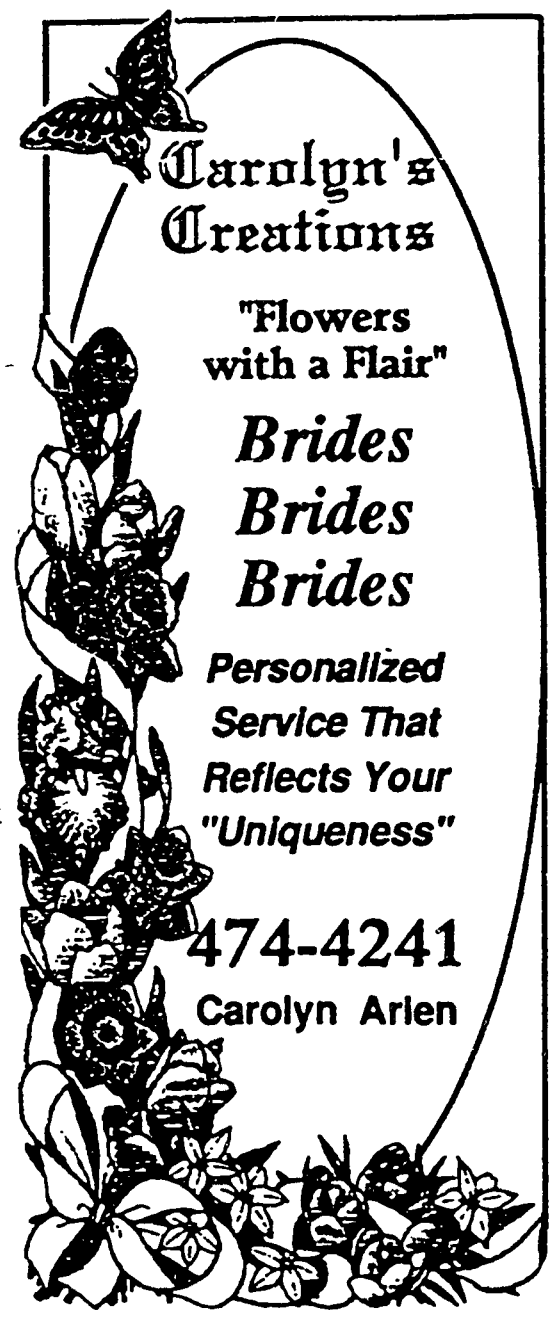

A special service that is catching on is purchasing gifts by phone. Guests simply request a copy of the registry via fax or mail, and phone in a order billing their credit card.

Specialty shops are fun. They offer unusual, upscale items that department stores may not carry; they include gourmet cooking shops, high-tech electronic dealers or stationers. Because outdoor adventures and fitness are a part of today's active lifestyles, sporting good stores are a hot registry spot.

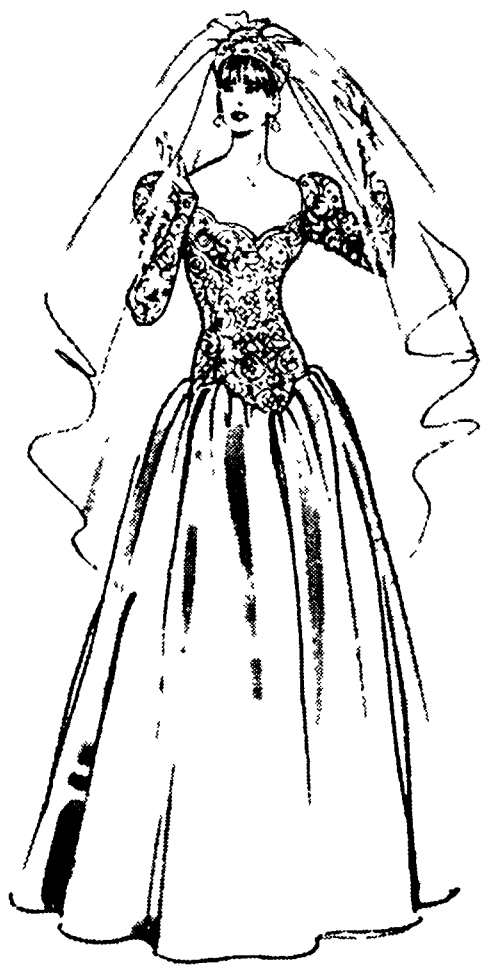

HOW TO REGISTER

Today every department store and many specialty shops have registry services. Most department stores have bridal consultants who will assist in putting a list together.

The consultant attempts to get an idea of the tastes and needs of the bride and groom and recommends gifts that will be right for them. Managers and clerks in specialty stores that do not have bridal consultants offer excellent knowledge about items in the store.

Stylish gift ideas for the bride and groom for their day

Set aside a weekend to scout out registry items. Go to the mall, visit all the stores that have items of interest, and take notes on potential must-haves. For those who don't have the time or patience for a whole weekend, a few focused hours can do the trick.

Stores have forms that make registering easy. Simply fill in the blanks with brands, patterns, sizes and colors of desired items. The consultant enters the information into a computer, and guests are able to get copies of the registry at any store in the chain. Gifts purchased are eliminated from the computer.

WHAT TO CHOOSE

There are three rules to follow when deciding what to register for. First, be practical. There is no rule of etiquette stating "Thou shalt register for fine china, silver and crystal." If you will not have 8 need for a formal table, don't register for these items.

Second, be sure to register for a variety of gifts in a wide price range to offer your guests the best selection possible. Don't be afraid to place expensive gifts on the list, but alternately, don't exclude the less expensive items.

Third, register for what you want, because that will be what you get. Your wedding is one of the few times in your life you get to create a wish list. Nothing is taboo.

Today's bride, with an average age of 24, is older than any previous generation, and second marriages are on the rise. Remarriages comprise almost one-third of all weddings. Because of the changing demographics, many couples already have the basics— everyday dishes, cookware and household appliances. This is their chance to get what they are missing or to upgrade to higher quality, upscale items.

Society an alternative to traditional funerals

With the ever-rising cost of traditional funerals, cemetery products and services, more and more people are looking for alternatives. As seniors have become more mobile and independent than in the past, their needs have also changed.

Overall, consumers simply want to have more say concerning their final wishes and the arrangements made. People today prefer to be made aware of any and all available options; they wish to be educated about the choices they make. Care Memorial Society, headquartered in Novi, has provided many families with just the answers they seek.

Fully licensed with the state of Michigan, Care Memorial Society offers complete cremation planning, as well as low-cost traditional funeral services. We participate in arbitration for business and customers thru the "Better Business Bureau" of Detroit and Eastern Michigan.

The main difference between Care Memorial Society and traditional funeral homes is keeping overhead costs as low as possible. Offerings do not include extended viewings, a hearse or limousine; nor a funeral procession. In this way, Care Memorial Society provides the most personal and professional service at a realistic price.

All of the services provided by Care Memorial Society are in strict accordance with all applicable state laws and all service providers are fully licensed professionals.

Our society members come from all social, religious and economic backgrounds, finding comfort in the simplicity and dignity of our programs.

At Care Memorial Society, the approach to pre-planning is to educate the consumer about their options and the costs of these alternatives. In most cases, this is done years in advance of the actual need, before the time of crisis occurs.

When approached under the best possible circumstances, intelligent, informed decisions can be made with the opportunity for thought and reflection as well.

Plans and decisions arrived at together help to avoid the emotional overspending that accounts for millions of dollars spent per year that quite possibly would better serve those left behind.

When a pre-need program is arranged for today, 100 percent of the trust amounts are fully refundable plus any interest earned. This is state law. Care Memorial Society also has the ability to have these arrangements made irrevocable through the Department of Social Services so that the monies are not considered as part of one's asset base when qualifying for Medicare or Medicaid benefits.

Most importantly, when you establish a clear path for your next of kin to follow through Care Memorial Society, help is just a phone call away. Your wishes are clearly spelled out and there are not unexpected surprises or expenses. Care Memorial Society maintains an emergency 800 number around the clock, 365 days a year. The number is on the membership cards that members are issued.

Is Care Memorial Society for everyone? Simply, no. For those families who require a full-service funeral home with three days of visitation, hearse or limousine service, or a funeral procession, Care Memorial Society is not for them. However, for the families wishing service with the utmost dignity and respect, Care Memorial Society can provide a condensed funeral or memorial service at a reasonable cost.

Best travel bets for seniors on the go

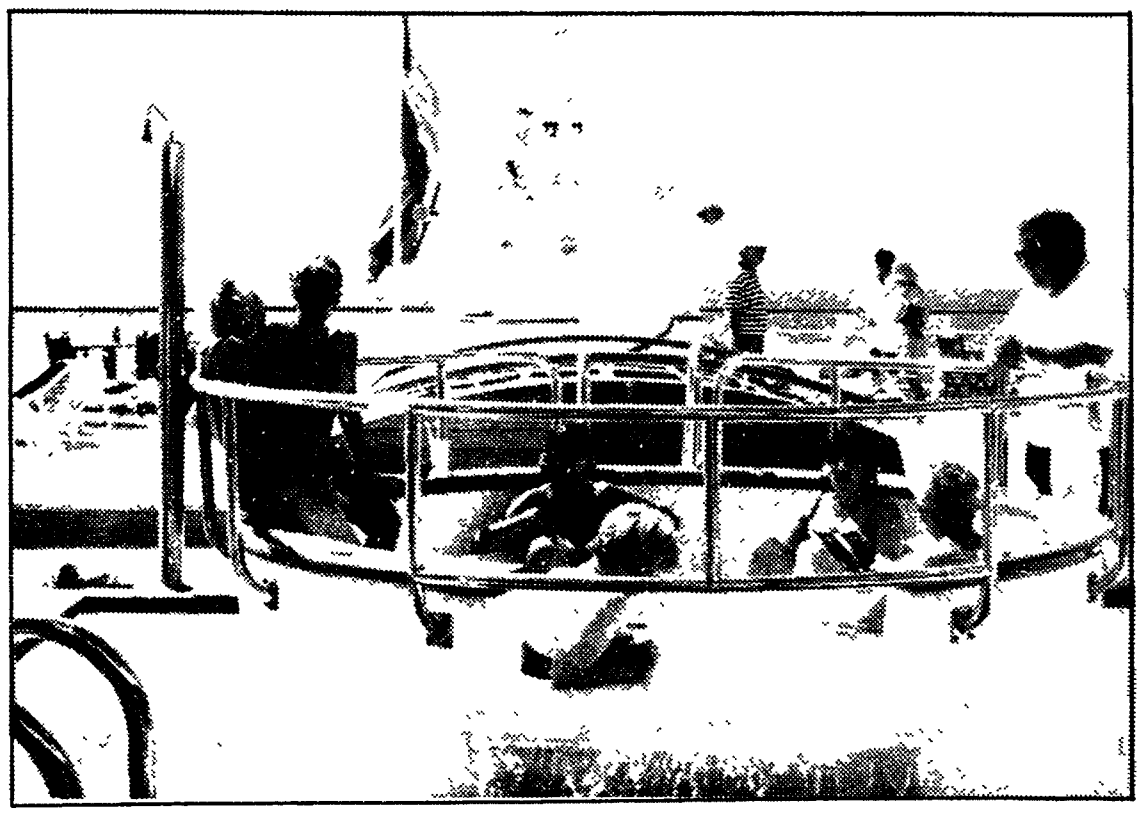

By Mike Dale
Copley News Service

If discounts and special offers —from hotel accommodations to airline fares—get much more enticing for mature travelers, then folks under age 50 will want to doctor their birth certificates.

As people live longer and prosper, the tourism industry is stepping up discount programs to appeal to older people.

The "first wave" of baby boomers—who turn 50 in 1995— may want to begin making travel plans now.

More seniors than ever are enjoying trips to exotic destinations.

ASK TO RECEIVE

Most hotels/motels, airlines, restaurants and other amusements offer senior rates and special privileges for mature travelers.

But if you don't ask, you may not receive.

Make it a practice to ask about senior rates. They're available on everything from movies and museums to hotels, ski resorts and cruise ships, both in the United States and abroad.

Keep in mind that senior rates change quickly. Ask about restrictions. Always carry identification to prove your age. And request the discount when making the reservation or checking in.

DISCOUNT PROGRAMS

Perhaps the best-known discount arrangement for the older traveler is the Purchase Privilege Program. Administered by American Express for the American Association of Retired Persons, the program offers airfares, car and recreational vehicle rentals, sightseeing and lodging with participating companies at substantial reductions—sometimes up to 50 percent off.

There are "soft" adventures, including white-water rafting the Colorado River, along with escorted tours of Europe and South America. There are 100 itineraries and you must be an AARP member to participate.

Folkways Institute, located in Portland, Ore., promotes travel with learning for 55-plus seniors on the go. Its Senior Studies trips take in sights as diverse as Kenya or India. Trips are overseen by a Folkways representative or local guides.

Grand Circle Travel (Boston) offers 100 itineraries for the 50-plus traveler. Sample tour: A 14-day Portuguese trip might include one week in a fishing village near Lisbon. Tours are relaxing and as unstructured as possible.

Courtesies include no-fee traveler's checks, travel insurance and a booklet, "101 Tips for Mature Travelers."

Mature singles also have an outlet for travel. Golden Companions, based in Pullman, Wash., has expanded its

Fashion and cosmetic tips for seniors

Practical fashion also can be sophisticated and stylish.

By Debra Lee Baldwin
Copley News Service

Do you remember, when you were younger, admiring older men and women who looked especially attractive?

You probably told yourself that you also would look that good at that age—and possibly wondered why more people didn't make the effort.

Now that you're older yourself, you know just how easy it is to "let yourself go." Do nothing, and the years take their toll.

The good news is that thanks to advancements in everything from cosmetics to clothing, it's easier than ever to hold the years at bay —and to look great—no matter what your age.

GO FOR THE GLOW

You also can diminish the effects of wrinkles, give your eyes a lift and make your lips look fuller with the right makeup and cosmetics.

Consult an expert at "creative camouflage." A makeup artist can show you precisely which colors are right for you, plus how to apply cosmetics so that you look years younger. For a recommendation, ask your hairdresser or a friend whose appearance you admire; department stores occasionally offer demonstrations. too.

If you're wary of Retin-A, face creams containing liposomes offer a kinder, gentler alternative. These smooth wrinkles by enhancing the skin's collagen and elastin. New from France are cosmetics containing "second-generation" liposomes, purported to be three times as effective as similar products currently on the market.

Anyone of any age can have a radiant, youthful smile. If your teeth have gaps or irregularities, a specialist in cosmetic dentistry can make them good as new. Procedures include bonding, veneers, caps and bleaching to remove stains.

HAIR TODAY, GONE TOMORROW?

You've probably noticed that men and women who visit a salon or barbershop regularly have an edge on those who don't. Just as a freshly waxed car seems to drive better, a haircut or perm can brighten your outlook on life—as well as your physical appearance.

Do you color your hair? You're certainly not alone—nor are you the only one to have dry, coarse, dull hair as a result. L'Oreal's new Colorvive Technicare may help; it's designed to help color-treated hair retain radiance, softness and shine.

William Shakespeare may have said, "What he hath scanted men in hair, he hath given them in wit," but you still may prefer not to go bald. If your hair seems to be thinning, Minoxidil may help (and, ladies, it's no longer just for men); consult your doctor.

Other hair-raising alternatives include transplants and scalp reduction—and, of course, a toupee or Wig.

You don't think people wear wigs nowadays? They look so natural you probably didn't notice. New synthetic fibers are so lightweight they make wig-wearing a breeze; today's wigs also are more durable and hold their styles well.

CLOSET ADVICE

If you have the body of a teenager, read no further.

Have you ever wondered why, even though your size and shape are average for your age, you can't wear clothes right off the rack? Or why the few that fit are tricky to take on and off?

You'll be glad styles are changing.

Clothing for both men and women has begun to emphasize comfort as much as fashion. Look for softly constructed mix-and-match separates made of cotton chenille, and new microfibers that feel like silk but are much more durable.

If comfort is a priority. go for the simple, practical and true-blue.

Denim spans the generations with unequaled ease and style," says New Choices magazine. Stores that specialize in jeans will help you get a perfect fit — whether you need pants that are loose, big on top, baggy, full or slim.

Women seeking couture appropriate for the over-40 set will want to browse magazines such as Mirabella and Lear's. And even mainstream women's magazines, such as Harper s Bazaar, are showing fashions worn by 'seasoned" models.

If you're big and beautiful, you'll look terrific in fashions that favor flowing lines, substantial shoulder pads and rich fabrics. Look for gowns that drape and coats that slim in boutiques that specialize in large-size women's clothing.

Arthritis sufferers no longer need to live in muumuus and pull-on pants. JC Penney offers fashions for women who cannot wear clothing with traditional closures, including buttonless. zipperless Chanel-inspired suits.

If you have special needs, there's a book about creating clothing just for you; it's "Design Without Limits," by Delores Quinn (published by Drexel Design Press and Simplicity Pattern Co.).

A mail-order source of wearables designed for 'chair-users" is Avenues (3233 E. Mission Oaks Blvd., Camarillo. CA 93012); items have elastic waistbands, longer fly fronts, conveniently placed pockets and shorter jackets.

Pick up retirement pace with hobbies

By Sharon Achatz
Copley News Service

Retirement means more time to pursue hobbies and other activities.

Retirement generally is viewed as life relegated to the slow lane — a time to settle down in the rocker and watch blades of grass grow.

While some retirees enjoy the relaxed pace of, say, a hammock swaying in the breeze, others see the slow lane as a dead end and lament that their life is over.

But it doesn't have to be that way.

From hobbies to volunteer work, from college course work to renewed relationships, retirement is full of opportunities to rev up the engine and enrich a person's life.

At a loss at how to begin to pick up the pace?

Modern Maturity magazine suggests you 'give yourself permission to pursue an old dream."

"Try something you've always loved, had a talent for or wanted to do, but never attempted for one reason or another. It can lead to a satisfying hobby or a second career."

Consider, as examples, the 70-year-old man who started making pottery and now sells it. Or, the woman in her 60s who enrolled in evening acting class and has performed in community theater. Or,the 70-year-old former professional who's living out her dream of working with children by volunteering at a children's hospital.

As these examples suggest, while hobbies may be pursued solo, they often become a springboard to membership in a larger community of people with the same interests. Perhaps groups of fellow actors or volunteers, perhaps special interest clubs — which range from plain-and-simple fun such as bridge, bingo and square dancing to social support groups such as those for the divorced and widowed.

Hobbies generally are categorized into amusements that cover the spectrum of human interest— from astronomy and baking to photography, and from coin collecting and dog breeding to ham radio — but altruism can be an important senior hobby as well.

HELPING OTHERS

Some 15.5 million people 60 and older did volunteer work in 1990— that's 41 percent of the people in that age group, according to a survey by Marriott Senior Living Services.

Most donated time to churches and other religious assemblies or social service organizations such as a library for the blind. Some worked for civic and cultural groups such as a public broadcast TV station or a museum. Others used their talents to help out schools, nursing homes and hospices, hospitals and political groups.

Services rendered by seniors range from making telephone calls and serving on committees to teaching classes. Mature adults also frequently give assistance with fund-raising, clerical work, counseling, cooking and housekeeping, according to the survey.

While your church and local library are two good sources of potential volunteer assignments, you may find the perfect position in other ways. Ask friends and their friends, consult the phone book or a local senior center or consider joining established volunteer organizations such as the Peace Corps and the International Executive Service Corps.

Both of these groups provide living allowances for the men, women and couples they send to developing nations to serve as advisers, educators and workers — but since they do not pay a salary, they still qualify as volunteerism.

IESC, based in Stamford, Conn., is made up exclusively of retired executives and technical workers. The Washington, D.C.-based Peace Corps is known primarily for its younger volunteers, but people over 55 now make up about 10 percent of volunteers.

While volunteer work often is based on sharing accumulated knowledge with others, retirement also can be wonderful opportunity for a mature adult to expand his or her knowledge.

INCREASING KNOWLEDGE

In most communities, schools and colleges advertise free or low-tuition classes in everything from writing poetry to auto mechanics and from swimming to woodworking.

Some mature adults take education even more seriously and head for institutions of higher learning to pursue first-time or additional degrees

For adults over 60 who want to combine education and travel. Boston-based Elderhostel offers courses at universities throughout the world.

Generally speaking, Elderhostel programs consist of three courses and last from five days to four weeks. The costs average $275 a week for domestic programs, including meals and lodging, and range up to about $7,000 for a four-week wilderness experience in Australia.

Most of the programs include excursions related to the courses and free time for sightseeing.

Whether you fill retirement hours with classes, hobbies or charity work, an additional benefit of active retirement is the opportunity to meet people who share your interests.

With an open mind this can lead to new friendships—or love interests for the divorced or widowed.

Retirement not only is a time for creating new relationships,but also for strengthening current bonds.

The average career couple spends only about 10 minutes a day talking to each other, according New York psychologist Allen Elkin, so retirement can be a time to make up for lost time—finding common interests again and ways to enjoy time together.

Mutual interests not only help keep you mutually interested in each other but also, according to New Choices magazine: "A loving relationship is the best aphrodisiac."

Retirement is a time to cherish not only your mate, but old friends as well. When was the last time you contacted your high-school best friend? College roommate? Favorite cousin? Army buddy?

And don't forget the pleasures of active and involved grandparenting—all the fun of parenting without the fuss.

Minimize Financial and Emotional Stress Through Thoughtful Pre-planning

Many people are of the mistaken impression that their funeral and cemetery estate is all taken care of because they own their cemetery property, or there is property available in a family plot. The cost of a cemetery space is very small, compared to the total cost incurred, when faced with a death in the family. Many, if not most people are simply overwhelmed when, in a crisis situation, they are required to select and purchase the rest of their estate.

Many years ago grave spaces could be purchased for $50 each and a large life insurance policy was $5,000. That policy was not only going to pay all funeral & burial expenses but also going to be enough to provide living expenses for a surviving spouse for the rest of her or his life.

So much for living in the past. The reality we are all faced with is that there are only two ways to learn these lessons. Either we learn about funeral and burial expenses in a crisis situation or we discuss our final arrangements ourselves, years ahead of time under ideal circumstances. When a clear state of mind prevails we can reflect and allow intelligence rather than emotion to guide us. Many of life's most difficult decisions can and should be made intelligently, we must possess the facts regarding requirements and costs.

Church or city-owned & operated cemeteries, because of state law, can not and do not offer their families the opportunity to complete their burial arrangements. They don't sell vaults, markers, caskets or allow for the prepayment of interment fees or openings and closings. The cost of these and other necessities continues to escalate year after year.

Today, through Memorial Guardian Company, we can freeze the cost of completing your cemetery estate, regardless of the site of your final resting place. Fully funded and licensed with the State of Michigan, we can help you eliminate emotional overspending and the general confusion of making tough decisions in a crisis situation. To learn more about your options, without obligation, call toll free 1-800-624-6565 or complete and mail the certificate below for more information mailed to your home.

Fitness tips and trends for seniors

By Orlando Ramirez
Copley News Service

Aging is changing. That's the word from a group of gerontological professionals in Denver whose goal is to improve our already-changing perceptions of aging. Seniors these days are fitter and more active than in previous generations.

The main reason for this is improved health care. People are taking better care of themselves through exercise and diet.

In the past, exercise was thought to be just for the young, but more and more people are realizing that keeping fit is a lifelong commitment.

Just because you pass a certain age doesn t mean you have to commit yourself to a recliner and remote control. The kind and quality of exercise you do changes as you age. You may no longer feel up to running a 10K marathon, but walking is a beneficial substitute.

Most important is the change in attitude toward aging. As Jo Murphy says in "Keys to Fitness Over Fifty" (Barrons), "Getting older is not a disgrace or ailment. It is just another stage of growth and development. Our lives are changing every day, and we should 'think positive' as we age."

In other words, age is not a negative. True, we are bombarded with advertisements and television programs focusing on the young and active, but the post-World War II baby boom is rapidly graying, and many are predicting that being in your golden years will soon be chic.

But that is hardly consolation when you're panting your way through an exercise video. Nonetheless, according to experts, the most important aspect of being fit is having a good mental attitude. Being depressed does make you more susceptible to disease.

Fitness for seniors, according to Murphy, means finding and maintaining a balance between the physical, mental, emotional and spiritual aspects of life. Finding that equilibrium in life is different for different people.

For some, being active has always been part of life, while they may have been lagging in spiritual knowledge. Just the opposite can be true for somebody else who has always been in touch with the spiritual side but needs help getting motivated to work out.

As wise men have noted, life is a journey. And no matter where you are on this path, it is never too late to start getting fit!

BENEFITS

In "Keys to Fitness Over Fifty," Murphy includes a list of some of the benefits to be gained through exercise put together by Scott Roberts, the director of the Sacramento, Calif., YMCA:

- Improvement and maintenance of cardiorespiratory fitness.
- Improvement and maintenance of muscle strength, endurance and flexibility.
- Regulation of metabolism and weight gain.
- Regulation of blood pressure.
- Prevention of loss of bone mass.
- Lowered concentration of fatty substances in the blood, thereby preventing or reducing the effect of heart disease.
- Improved self-image.
- Thinner and more elastic blood vessels.
- Maintenance and improvement of maximal oxygen intake.
- Maintenance of glucose regulation.

Besides these benefits, Murphy notes that you will also sleep better, have more energy, increased productivity and faster reflex time.

Angela Lansbury demonstates how some stretching, walking, weight lifting and regular moderate exercise can keep seniors in good shape.

NUTRITION

There is no one nutritional plan perfect for everybody. You have to gauge your own needs and metabolic rate to find plan right for you, preferably with the help of a doctor or nutritionist.

However, according to Murphy. health experts agree on some rough guidelines such as eating from all four food groups and never exceeding more than 1,200 calories per day.

Also, fat should total no more than 30 percent of your daily diet. Other suggestions are eliminating or lowering your salt intake, adding more fiber to your diet and drinking at least two glasses of milk a day.

Murphy recommends that you not eat an hour before strenuous exercise and that you include high-energy foods from the complex carbohydrate group in your daily diet. These include fruits. pastas and whole-grain foods.

Also, drink at least eight glasses of water per day if your are exercising vigorously.

EXERCISE

Before beginning a strenuous exercise program it is a good idea to have a check-up by your physician. This can help prevent any injuries or diagnose problem areas before starting.

Also, begin your exercise program slowly. Don't try to accomplish too much too soon. The benefits of exercise accumulate over time and overexercising can have disastrous results.

It is important to follow the correct warming-up and cooling down periods before and after exercising. This helps cut down on the number of both major and minor injuries.

Murphy includes this list of dos and don'ts regarding exercise.

- Do an appropriate 30- to 45-minute routine at least three times a week, although she suggests older adults attempt some form of exercise every day.
- Do resistance exercises with light weights and stretch bands to maintain muscle tone.
- Do exercises that build the upper body to help maintain good posture.
- Don't do head circles because they may cause neck injury.
- Don't do deep knee bends. They may harm the joints.
- Don't do any movements that make your round your shoulders forward.
- Don't do any excessive side or back arching.
- Don't bounce into any of your stretches.
- Don't exercise outdoors when it is too hot or too cold or the air quality is poor.

WALKING

More than 100 million Americans list walking as their primary exercise acuvity. And for good reason. It is the cheapest form of exercise one can get. All you need is a good pair of shoes and no particular place to go.

When walking, it is important to maintain good posture to get maximum results. According to Murphy, "the head should be erect, the stomach pulled in, eyes straight ahead if possible, toes pointed straight and arms loose and swinging. "

Pacing is also important. A normal pace is one mile or so in 15 to 20 minutes. Any slower and you will not be reaping the full rewards of the exercise.

When it comes to breathing, you should not be so winded as to be unable to carry on a normal conversation while walking. It is suggested that you begin walking slowly, then gradually build your pace, then slow back down as you come to the end of your walk.

How far you walk depends on you personal capability. It is important, however, to set goals. adding a little more distance each day.

Also, to keep your walks interesting, vary the routes or walk with a friend.

Adapt your home to meet special needs

By Sharon Achatz
Copley News Service

As time goes by, it's fundamental that a senior's senses won't be what they used to be~

Vision and hearing may be impaired, arthritis or shaking may loosen the grip, reflexes may slow and balance may totter.

Such circumstances can lead to severe at-home accidents, but not necessarily so. While World Book Encyclopedia reports that nearly 10,000 adults over 65 die each year from accidents in the home, there's a houseful of devices and ideas for making homes more livable for seniors with special needs.

These home, safe home goodies range from devices as simple as nightlights to major mechanisms such as an in-home sprinker system. And smart design tactics range from simply placing decals on glass doors to constructing ramps in place of steps.

BETTER LIGHT

In adapting any home for seniors, good lighting is one of the best places to begin the transformation.

Older people need three times as much light as young people do, according to the John Hopkins Injury Prevention Center, so replace bulbs with the brightest wattage each fixture will take—preferably 100 watts.

Decorative mirrors and lightcolored wall paint or coverings will help brighten up the home as well, but in some cases even that might not be sufficient illumination.

High-traffic areas such as hallways and stairs can be made safer with the installation of low-level lighting — even near baseboard level for those with seriously impaired vision.

Since stairways have an especially high potential for mishap, extra caution is called for—such as the placement of light switches at both the bottom and top of a stairway and a sturdy railing on both sides of the stair.

Nightlights can be a real asset in two other accident-prone areas, the kitchen and bathroom. That little extra light can pay off big in accident prevention during those times when a senior gets up to use the bathroom or take a drink at night. The best are nightlights with photosensors that automatically turn on when it's dark.

AROUND THE HOUSE

Other design ideas for the bathroom include putting grab bars next to the toilet and over the tub, and making sure that tubs and shower stalls have a rubber mat or non-skid strips or appliques. Be sure to use only non-skid rugs in the bathroom.

In the kitchen, keep a small ladder or step stool handy to reach upper shelves instead of a chair, table or box. And spruce up the galley with fun small appliances that are also senior-smart. Cordless appliances, from mixers to can openers, are easier to maneuver. For those with weakened grips, there are even openers that, once engaged, fully open cans without having to press a handle or lever—an-i they stop automatically once the can is opened.

Complete lines of gadgets are available at specialty shops for people with limited hand strength or disabilities, from self-clamping breadboards and jar grippers to plastic handles that enclose knobs for greater turning leverage.

And there are entire cookingutensil lines devoted to comfort. Tools from potato peelers to pizza cutters and from bread knives to scissors have fat handles made of rubber that provide comfort as well as a good grip.

Other ideas and devices apply throughout the senior-safe household.

To begin, remove hazards that can trip up mature adults, such as loose carpets and scatter rugs. Keep carpet edges firmly in place with adhesive tape. Move throw rugs away from stairways and well out of all walkways and secure them with tape—or, betterstill, remove them altogether.

Install smoke detectors throughout the house and replace the batteries every year. Better still, install an in-house sprinkler system—similar to those used in high-rises and hotels — that will automatically extinguish fires.

Some elderly people may not be able to escape from a fire even when alerted by an alarm.

For disabled or seriously ill seniors, an intercom system makes it easy to communicate their needs to other family members. Remote controls can be rigged up to the TV and stereo, and electronic sensors that respond to hand claps can be rigged up to just about everything else to minimize movement for seniors who find it painful.

Mechanized beds also may provide additional comfort, and make it easier for weakened adults to get out of bed alone.

Telephones and clocks both come with large-number faces to aid those with fading eyesight, and high-tech phones can be programmed to remember frequently used numbers to give seniors single-button dialing convenience.

Phones also can be modified with the addition of an amplifier for hearing and attachment hooks for the receiver that make the phone easier for frail hands to handle.

Many senior citizen centers and local libraries offer additional information and checklists for promoting at-home safety for seniors and, in some communities, trained professionals will come into a home to identify potential hazards. For more information, contact your local government department of aging, department of health or your health maintenance organization.

A conversation with the golden girl

By Glenda Winders
Copley News Service

It's no misnomer to call Betty White a 'golden girl"—with her generous spirit and easy smile, she seems to be made of the stuff. But there must be some steel in there somewhere, too.

The day of our meeting, White (who insists everyone call her Betty) was on a promotional tour for her latest book. Up since dawn, she had done interviews, a book signing, a radio call-in program and a TV talk show. In between she had signed autographs and been photographed with people and their pets.

But when we met in the early evening, she was as fresh and ready as if our appointment had been her first, as if she had been looking forward to it for weeks. Her blue eyes crinkled, her dimples flashed, and we were off.

White wrote the most recent of her three books, 'The Leading Lady: Dinah's Story" (Bantam), with musician and actor Tom Sullivan.

When Sullivan's trusted golden retriever, Dinah, developed physical problems that rendered her incapable of working as his guide dog, White took over her care. The book is the story, from both of their points of view, oi a remarkable animal and how sharing affection for her drew two people closer together as friends.

"It was Dinah who did the informing and the teaching on so many levels, not just animal-oriented, but people-oriented," White said.

She and Sullivan wrote their chapters separately and then sent them to each other to read.

"They triggered all kinds of questions that I would never have thought of asking him under normal circumstances," White said. "If I learned nothing else, I learned how I was wasting so many of the senses I have. I will never be the same."

She said the point they most wanted to make with the book was about communication.

"The more you communicate with another creature, whether it's a beautiful golden retriever or a close friend you think you know, the more you get back and the wider the scope becomes," she said. "Also the adaptation to change. When things are going well, I want them to stay that way forever and ever, and change is always a threat. But when I watched Dinah come into a new situation and say 'OK, here's another opportunity,' I learned an awful lot."

When Dinah could no longer negotiate the stairs to the bedroom, White and her other animals, dogs Timothy and Cricket and cat T.K., slept in a downstairs den to be close to her. Dinah lived to her 15th birthday and saw the book completed before she died.

White's involvement with animals is legendary, but she eschews the title of animal-rights activist.

"I'm into animal welfare and animal well-being," she said, "and I've been that since the womb because my folks were as big or bigger animal nuts than I am. I don't get militant about it for the simple reason that you polarize people on both sides. I just try to preach whenever I can get anybody to listen about personal responsibility for animal wellbeing. "

Since Dinah's death, White has added another dog to her household. Named Panda, this one was housed at the SPCA pending the outcome of an animal cruelty case. When the trial was over, her keepers asked White to find a good home for her.

"I said, 'Let me make some calls,'" White recalled. "But I didn't make any calls. I sat there for a few minutes and then called them back and said, 'When can I pick up Panda?'"

White has worked with the Morris Animal Foundation, which develops vaccines for animal diseases, for more than 20 years, and she's on the board of the Los Angeles Zoo.

Betty White

She sponsors the training of a guide dog each year through Guide Dogs in San Rafael, Calif., as a holiday gift to her friends.

"I write them a note and tell them their gift is a little hard to wrap," she said.

Nearly 70, White is at the pinnacle of her career. She's already beginning to work on a children's version of Dinah's story, and she recently realized her dream of playing the lead in a romantic movie with "Chance of a Lifetime," a TV movie of the week that co-starred Leslie Nielsen.

She said that while she had the most fun with a television show called "The Pet Set" that she wrote, casted and hosted, perhaps her greatest accomplishment has been with "Golden Girls."

"It's a draw between 'Mary Tyler Moore' and 'Golden Girls,'" she said, 'but I favor 'Golden Girls' a little bit because I get to play with them every week. With Mary the most I ever did in one year was 12 shows."

And she said "Golden Girls' broke new ground in the way maturing people were perceived: "I think it was the first time in a continuing series that you saw that just because you had passed a certain age you didn't fall off the planet. The body may have fallen apart, but the same person is still inside. '

She said much of their mail comes from children, teenagers and men.

'The biggest compliment is from people who write that they all gather to watch us as a family, ' she said.

White said she has no plans to leave the show, and she credits the show's success to the chemistry between herself and co-stars Bea Arthur, Rue McClanahan and Estelle Getty.

"I think one of the reasons we get on so well off-stage is that professionally there was never any question about it," she said. "We all came to the show with careers in place. Nobody was just starting out and counting lines to see whose part was bigger. We didn't expect to really love each other as much as we have continued to do. I think it's because we are as different off-screen as we are onscreen. We're like four points of a compass."

She said the show also offers a look at aging women who are selfreliant, since the characters live together for companionship rather than out of economic need.

White said there is more of her own personality in Rose than she cares to admit.

"It scares me to death!" she said, and laughed. "I find that there is an awful lot of Betty in Rose, but I like Rose because she's very positive, and in this day of negativity, I think to have somebody believe in happy endings is kind of nice. I do believe everything's going to turn out all right. The glass is always half-full, not half-empty, and I try to find the good stuff to hold onto when I'm going under for the third time. Rose loves animals, Rose gets nervous and upset when other people are fighting."

She said her husband, late "Password" and "G.E. College Bowl" host Allen Ludden, also claimed she had a lot in common with her highly sexed homemaker character, Sue Ann Nivins, on "The Mary Tyler Moore Show": "When people would ask Allen that question, he'd say, 'Betty is exactly like Sue Ann except that she can't cook.' "

White divides her time between the Los Angeles home she shared with Ludden and the ocean-view home she built with him in Carmel, Calif.

"Everyone says don't build a house together; it's instant divorce," she recalled. "But we had a ball. We were in the middle of building it when we found out he wasn't going to make it. We talked it over and said, 'Nuts! We're going to go ahead and finish it.' "

Ludden lived to stay in the house two nights.

"That was a good closure for me," White said. "Now the house is complete and he's part of it. If I'd lost him before it was quite finished, I'm not sure it would have worked. Now that's where I go and recharge the battery."

One of White's charitable activities is hosting the annual Allen Ludden Memorial Party at Rancho Los Amigos Hospital in Downey, Calif. Each year she rounds up a group of celebrity pals to spend time with trauma and burn patients during the holiday season, an occaslon once organized by Ludden.

On the subject of aging, White said, "What's the alternative? You either laugh or cry. so you'd better laugh. My mother was great at that. She really got disgusted by men and women who pass 30 and say, 'Oh, my god, I'm going to turn 40.' They ruin the whole decade worrying about the next big number and then they begin to worry about the next big number, and then they look back and say, 'Boy, my 20s (or 30s or 40s or 50s) were the best.' Enjoy it while it's going by."

White does little to enhance her ageless good looks, except to change the color of her hair.

"Oddly enough, I used to have brown hair," she said with her characteristic twinkle. 'But I was suddenly struck blond. I don't know how it happened. It must have been in the water or in something I was eating. That's about the si~e of it. I'm too chicken to get facial surgery."

Her philosophy on living a full life into ripe old age: "My contention i. that if you're a dull young person, you're going to be a dull old person. If you ever had any vitality, the vitality will still be there if you let it."

service to reach more single adults. It helps mature singles, 45 and older, to find travel mates for their trips across the United States and Canada.

Also of special interest to senior wayfarers is the newsletter The Diabetic Traveler, which focuses on travel tips for diabetics.

Other agencies worth checking out: Grand Travel (Chevy Chase, Md.), Interhostel (Durham, N.H.), Saga International Holidays (Boston) and AIS Travel Consultants (Rockaway Park, N.Y.).

DESTINATIONS

Pick a spot just about anywhere in the United States (overseas requires a bit more digging) and a discount should be waiting.

A handy paperback called "The Senior Citizen's Guide to Budget Travel in the United States and Canada" (Pilot Books) will help. It lists how to contact tourism bureaus, hotel/motel chains, recreational vehicle companies, wilderness outfitters, bus companies, even American Youth Hostels and Elderhostels.

Other recommendations:

• Hotel Condado Beach in San Juan, Puerto Rico, offers a 25 percent year-round discount on room rates to those 60 and over. Daily rates for seniors range from $134 (double occupancy) to $95 per day during the off-season.

• Loews Ventana Canyon Resort in Tucson, Ariz., gives 55-plus travelers rooms for $230 per night (normal cost: $305).

• Best Western International gives 10 percent discounts at about 1,600 of its hotels and motels for those 55 and older.

• Ramada International gives patrons 60 and older a 25 percent break at its hotels and resorts.

• Senior Vacations of Florida has a specially designed bargain for travelers over 60 at predetermined hotels in the St. Petersburg area.

• The Fairway Villa in Waikiki, Hawaii, boasts a large senior clientele. Its studio and one-bedroom condos overlook the Ala Wai Canal and are three blocks from the beach. The condos, featuring all modern amenities, rent for up to $1,100 per month.

• In the Mammoth Mountain area of Southern California, the Sierra Nevada Inn is offering senior snow skiers at powdery deal: free skiing for those over 65. Also, the inn hosts the second annual 70-Plus Mammoth Mountain Ski Fest, Feb. 23-28.

GETTING THERE

The airlines and railways have been very happy to accommodate mature travelers. Trans World Airlines offers a 10 percent discount to passengers 62 and older who present proof of their age—via a driver's license, a passport, a birth certificate—upon boarding.

American Airlines and others have travel coupon books that folks 62 and over can use to save on fares.

Amtrak has a discount program for intercity rail passengers 65 and older. Its 25 percent discount is good on coach seating and full-fare tickets, but not the MetroLiner or the Auto Train.

Parents assist their aging parents

By Mike Dale
Copley News Service

Things change.

The adage in the 1960s was, 'Never trust anyone over 30."

But as Americans reach their 60s, 70s and 80s in record numbers, the new maxim might be, "Never abandon anyone over 65."

Every year, according to U.S. Census Bureau statistics, the number of those over age 65 increases by half a million persons per year. By the year 2010, they will represent 15 percent of the total population.

Today, the over-85 age group is the fastest-growing population, as the graying of America continues unabated.

Health care experts, therefore, see the "Sandwich Generation" (76 million Baby Boomers) as caregivers for not only their own children but their parents, as well.

But watching parents suffer the vagaries of age—illness, loneliness, widowhood, physical frailty, memory loss—can be emotionally devastating and financially burdensome.

HOME CARE

It isn't easy. Families who take elderly parents into their homes find that there are rewards and frustrations. But with the high cost of nursing homes, the multi-generational family is popular again.

Spouses must make the commitment together, according to experts. Giving up independence is difficult. In some cases a separate entrance and telephone line could be installed.

Couples, or families, must also discuss who's going to do what. Research shows that in most multi-generational households, women take on much more responsibility than men.

Men confine their contributions to transportation and family management. Women generally take care of hygiene, shopping, cooking, day-to-day care, social life, laundry, etc.

Breaking down emotional barriers can be painful, but it's necessary. When elderly parents join a household, lifetime roles must change. Open doors of communication that have been closed for years.

In addition, look for ways that each adult can contribute to the household. An elderly parent, for example, might cook dinner three nights per week while husband and wife can pursue their hobbies.

FINANCIAL PLANNING

Nothing may be more basic than arranging for the continuing financial support of elderly parents.

The trick, say authorities. is to give parents a sense of control for as long as realistically possible.

Preparing budgets, keeping copious financial records and simplifying financial dealings can be a shared responsibility.

But when mental or physical incapacity begins to interfere with financial management, then legal arrangements—such as power of attorney, trust arrangements, conservatorships and wills—must be enacted.

COMMUNITY RESOURCES

Securing a safe home environment for elderly parents, be it a convalescent facility or the cottage behind your home, is a must.

Important, too, are the social service amenities that afford a better quality of life for dependent seniors.

There's an impressive array of community services available.

"Meals-on-Wheels," shopping and house cleaning assistance, escort services, "friendly visitors," continuing education and volunteer programs are but a few of the services ready to assist.

PERSONAL CARE

Some seniors aren't as mobile as others. That's where personal care in the home must be arranged.

Home attendants provide help with day-to-day responsibilities (grooming, bathing, shopping, cleaning) that working couples can't fit into their schedules.

Some guidelines in choosing an attendant:

- Pick someone compatible with your parent's disposition, not yours.
- Choose someone reliable.
- Be firm about what's needed
- Include your parents in the decision process and selection.

NURSING HOMES

Of all living alternatives, being placed in a long-term institutional setting is a sensitive issue for two reasons.

It calls into question your feelings (perhaps guilt-ridden) of abandonment and lack of devotion to elderly parents.

It's downright expensive.

Nationwide, the average cost of a nursing home is about $25.000 per year. In New York, it can be as much as $75,000 per year.

Emotional issues aside, placement in a nursing facility should be considered if elderly parents need supervision 24 hours per day. They may also require proper medical supervision (physical or mental) that can't be provided at

PREVENTING NEGLECT

Nursing homes, unfortunately. don't offer a perfect world. Neglect and mistreatment charges surface from time to time.

Don't assume your loved one is getting needed care, say experts. Take an active role.

Choose a facility that's convenient and visit often, at least twice a week. Establish a relationship with key people at the home. Introduce yourself to the administrator, medical director and head nurse.

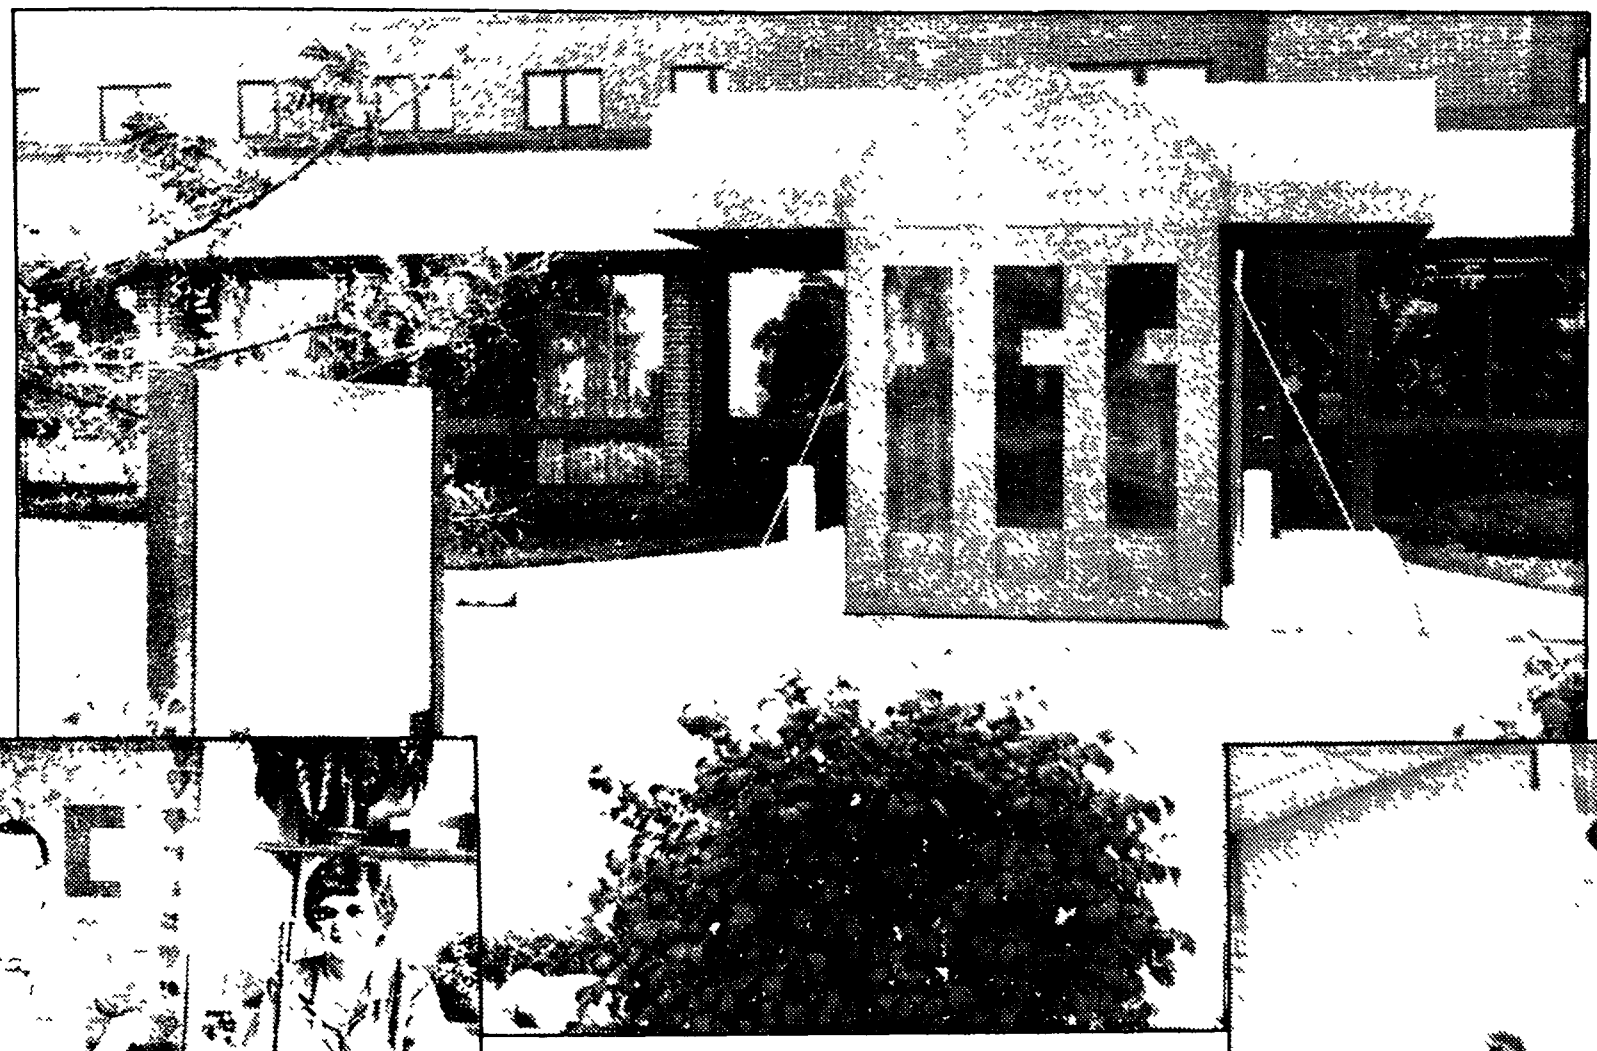

Also speak to the nurses on duty. And document any problems with an informal, ongoing written record of any instances of negligence. Include dates, times and names of the persons involved.

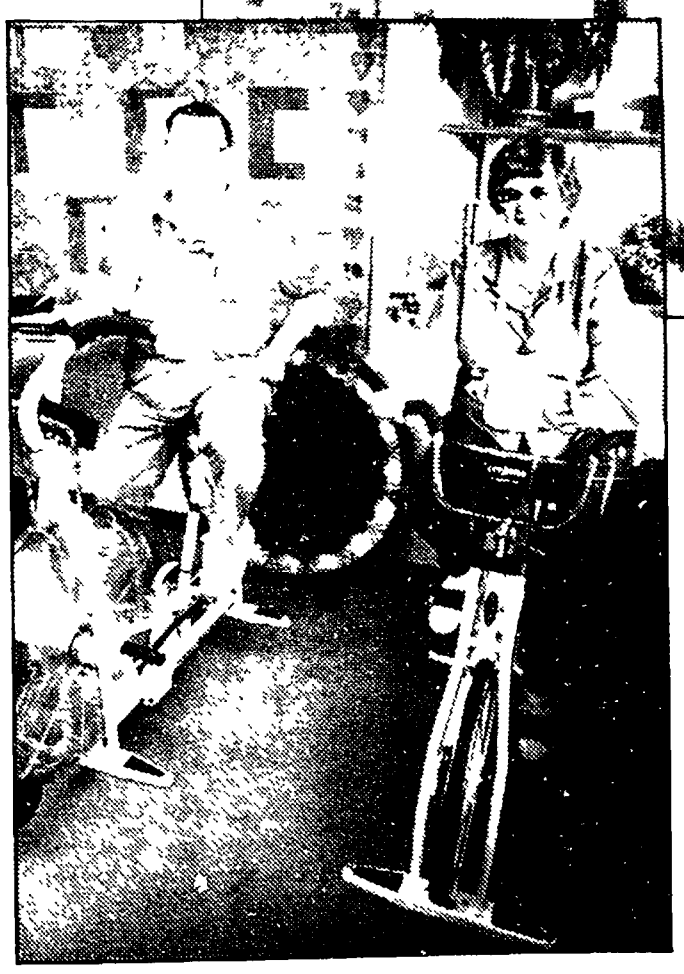

Protecting assets from nursing homes can prevent financial potboilers, as well.

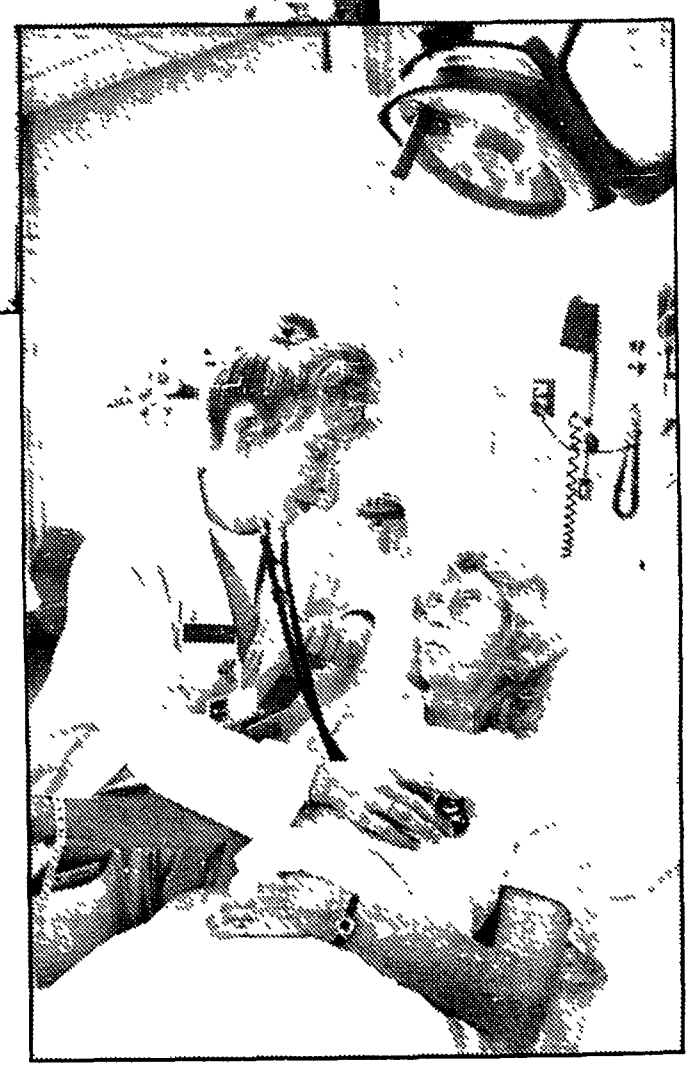

Dependent seniors who don't plan for management of their assets can cause court interventions and delays in providing care if a person becomes incompetent.

Simple ways to secure assets include working out a comprehensive estate plan, assigning a durable power of attorney, establishing a trust fund, appointing representative payees and arranging direct deposits of pension checks

Business people go 'Networking' at show

A report from the national Trade Show Bureau estimated that more than 145,000 firms participated in trade shows last year. This figure has increased dramatically in the past decade and is largely attributable to increased participation in local shows like Networking '92.

Networking '92 is the Farmington/Farmington Hills Chamber of Commerce's third-annual business show scheduled for Oct. 27-29 at Mercy Conference Center in Farmington Hills.

"Networking '92 is designed to bring together business owners and professionals from throughout Farmington, Farmington Hills and southeast Michigan so that they can exchange knowledge, ideas, and do business with each other," said Jonathan Grant, the show's chairman.

For many of the show's exhibitors the reason for participating is clear: The opportunity to gain new business prospects without the cost and uncertainty of cold calls. According to TradeShow & Exhibit Manager, it costs approximately $133 for a lead generated at a trade show versus $252 for a lead generated by a field sales call.

"Networking continues to be a valuable tool in today's business world. Regardless of your line of business, it's a critical element in gaining the competitve edge," added Grant, who is president of Reliance Forms & Supplies, Farmington Hills.

"As a business owner, I know the value and results of participating in a show like Networking '92. In two days, you can accomplish the equivalent of weeks of cold calling. From a business standpoint, it's very cost effective.

"It's a great opportunity to demonstrate your products or service and speak face-to-face with potential customers. In most cases, they actually come up to you. So it's an unbeatable opportunity to reach a targeted, captive audience on a relatively low cost per contact basis." At the show, Reliance Forms & Supplies will be showcasing its line of recycled advertising specialties and business forms.

Business shows like Networking '92 are equally attractive from a visitor's standpoint. Reports show that more and more business leaders and key decision-makers are attending business shows for the opportunity to gather information on the marketplace, discover new products/services and meet new contacts.

"Several thousand business leaders from throughout the area are expected to attend Networking '92. We're very careful to maintain a business-to-business environment so that the show is focused and beneficial for our audience," explained Jody Soronen, executive director, Farmington/Farmngton Hills Chamber of Commerce.

This year the show has over 60 exhibitors from all areas of business including financial, municipai, computers, healthcare, promotional services, telecommunications and a variety of others.

"One of the attractions of our show is its diversity of exhibitors. It's one-stop shopping for all your business needs. A visitor can take care of his or her printing, financial or computer needs all under one roof," said Soronen.

"In addition to taking advantage of the show's business atmosphere, visitors can enjoy the show's parties, luncheon and other activities," added Soronen.

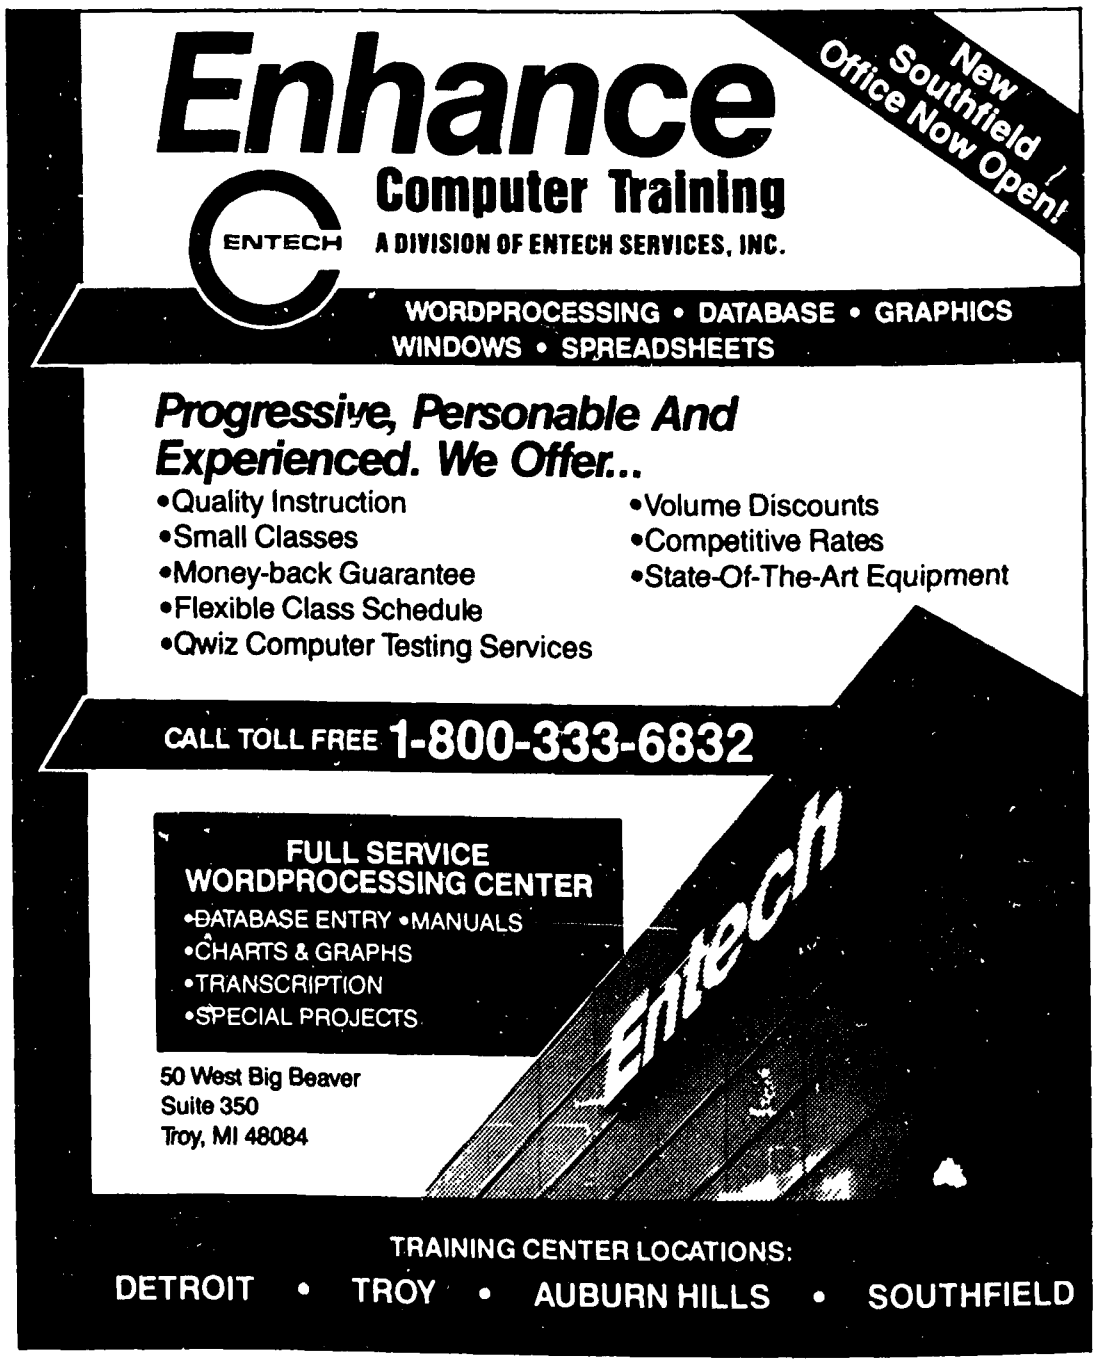

The Chamber will launch Networking '92 with a "Taste of Farmington" previewparty on Tuesday evening. Then on Wednesday, renown Michigan business Heinz Prechter will be the guest speaker at the show's luncheon at 11:30 a.m., and a Business After Hours Mixer, sponsored by Nissan, is scheduled from 5:30-8 p.m.

Jon Grant: "Networking continues to be a valuable tool in today's business world."

'Be creative,' says luncheon speaker

Heinz Prechter — one of Michigan's most influential and forward-thinking business leaders — is the guest speaker for the Networking '92 luncheon, scheduled to begin at 11:30 a.m. Wednesday, Oct. 28, in the Mercy Conference Center, Farmington Hills.

Last January, Prechter was chosen to accompany President Bush on his trip to Japan in an effort to seek trade concessions and new business. Prechter was among 21 U.S. executives including Lee Iacocca, Harold Poling and Robert Stempel.

The trip made headlines around the world. At the luncheon, Prechter will share his experiences and insights from that excursion.

Prechter is chairman, chief executive, founder and owner of ASC Inc., a Southgate, Mich.-based supplier to the worldwide automobile industry. His company was started in a two-car garage in 1965.

Today, it has more than 30 facilities worldwide and employs nearly 3,000 people. It has evolved into a design, engineering and manufacturing company that supplies the automobile industry with vehicle conversions and specialty components including sunroofs, convertibles and vinyl tops.

Prechter's accomplished life and career includes being honored and named the Harvard Business Club's Entrepreneur of the Year, the 1986 Michigan Industrialist of the Year, Automotive Hall of Fame's 1990 Automotive Industry Leader of the Year and the Detroit News Michiganian of the Year, 1991.

Luncheon guests will undoubtedly be fascinated by, as well as learn a great deal from, the man that once said, "There are great opportunities for those willing to take risks. You just have to be creative and flexible — and keep an open mind."

Tickets are $15 per person. Reservations can be made by calling the chamber of commerce at 474-3440.

Local library can help business folks

Businesses, large and small, make the best decisions based on the best available information. The problem is finding the information.

The Farmington Community Library offers many solutions to that problem with a sophisticated and comprehensive collection of business resources and trained staff. The library wants to increase awareness and use of these resources. That's why it is exhibiting at Networking '92.

"We're trying to inform business people of how much useful and essential business and financial information is available at our libraries," said Beverly Papai, executive director of the Farmington Community Library. "This will be the third year we've participated in the show, and it's been very beneficial in helping us to reach a targeted business audience."

The library's booth at Networking '92 will feature a computer terminal with F&S Predacast softward that provides an index of information from over 400 business journals, newspapers, trade and internal corporate publications. Visitors to the booth will be able to get on line and access this wealth of information.

Right now, the Farmington Community Library has more demand for its computerized reference services than any other public library in the Detroit area. In 1988, it was the only public library in southeastern Michigan to be selected to participate in the University of Michigan M-LINK — a five year pilot project to demonstrate that public library resources can impact a community's economic growth.

"We want to have a positive impact on this area's economic climate by acting as a resource that is easily accessible and helpful for local businesses. We also want to become more globally-oriented as more and more of our local businesses are involved in international trade," said Papai.

Information on patents, trademarks, forecasts, demographics and foreign market representatives can all be compiled at the library. A 10 K report from the Securities & Exchange Commission is readily available for about $15. Or a mailing list of potential clients can be created for a company's specific needs.

The library offers a free mini-seminar for business staffs on effective use of its information as a strategic and operating resource — emphasizing the print and electronic sources currently available.

The library has also assisted local companies that are downsizing by conducting workshops for career planning and development of job search strategy for displaced employees. These career services are available on a individual basis as well.

■ 'We want to have a positive impact on the area's economic climate by acting as a resource that is easily accessible and helpful for local businesses.'

A major Farmington Hills EDC project is the improvement of the Grand River/Halsted area and the M-102 overpass.

EDC aids business in Farmington Hills

Over the past decade, there have been tremendous, ongoing business, road and community resource improvements throughout Farmington Hills.

A good deal of the progress in these efforts can be credited to the Farmington Hills Economic Development Corp. (EDC).

In 1979, the Farmington Hills City Council established the EDC as a public corporation to encourage the development of businesses beneficial to the community. Ever since, the EDC's efforts have been tremendously important to the community's business vitality.

"Our primary purpose is to help commercial and industrial businesses to locate and expand in Farmington Hills. We're committed to supporting incoming and existing businesses in every way possible," said Robert McConnell, EDC's chairman, as well as CEO of Farmington Hills-based MCP Sales and Luckenhaus North America, Inc.

Originally, the EDC had the authority to issue limited obligation revenue bonds to accomplish its purpose. Since forming, it has issued about $140 million in bonds. This was done independently by the corporation, so there was no obligation on the part of the city. However, Congress has since changed the tax laws and these bonds are no longer available.

"Now we spend much of our time trying to make sure that existing companies stay here," said McConnell. "These companies make up the tax base of the community. Today it's around 40 percent of the SEV (state equalized value)."

Several years ago the EDC developed a brochure attracting Fortune 500 companies to this area. Now it is working on a brochure to assist the retention and enhancement of existing businesses.

"We use all of our own funds — which are non-taxpayer's funds generated strictly from costs and fees from new businesses that have moved here and worked with us — to help finance projects around the area," explained McConnell.

"Our major project right now is the improvement of the M-102 and Grand River overpass and intersection. We're trying to get that off the back burner. We've offered to fund the right-of-way and environmental studies at a cost of about $90,000.

"The traffic problems in that area are a major constraint on businesses in both Farmington Hills and Farmington, particularly in the industrial parks," said McConnell.

"When we put this committee together, our main objective was to keep a project going and ensure that it's accomplished. We've been to Lansing on several occasions to talk to Pat Nowak, director of the Michigan Department of Transportation, Sen. Jack Faxon and Rep. Jan Dolan.

"We finally feel like we're making headway on that project," said Keith Deacon, chairman of the EDC's community improvement subcommittee.

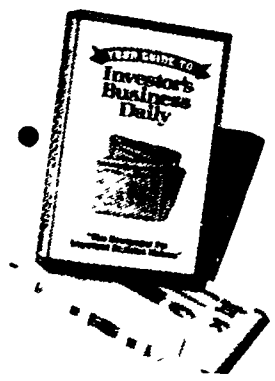

The EDC is participating in Networking '92 to inform visitors of the many projects it as been involved with, including:

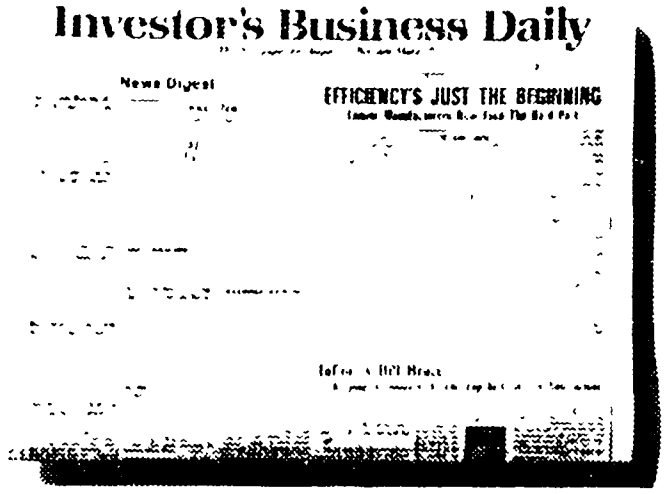

- Funding the right-of-way study to establish 12 Mile Road as a boulevard and the beautification study for Northwestern Highway, which the corporation hopes will be widened by the year 2000.
- Assisting the development of an association of businesses on Orchard Lake Road, between 12 and 14 Mile roads.
- Working to establish the Haggerty Road connector off I-275 to help relieve traffic on Orchard Lake Road.

"We're also trying to address what we can do to promote the excellent resources we have right here in Farmington Hills. I feel that Oakland Community College is a tremendous resource, and I'm trying to develop relationships with local businesses and OCC from an entrepreneurial standpoint," said McConnell.

In September, the EDC sponsored a business seminar with the chamber of commerce and OCC intended to assist local businesses with their development. It was the first of a series of seminars to be held at the Orchard Ridge Campus Business Technology Center. The EDC is also promoting the resources of the Farmington Community Library, and was instrumental in getting the University of Michigan to establish its M-Link program at the library.

Taste of Farmington now part of Networking '92

The Farmington/Farmington Hills Chamber of Commerce will host the Taste of Farmington on 5:30-8 p.m. Tuesday, Oct. 27, at Networking '92, in the Mercy Conference Center, Farmington Hills.

"This is the 10th year we've coordinated Taste of Farmington. It's always been a popular event because it's a chance to sample all the great food in this area," said Jody Soronen, executive director of the Chamber of Commerce.

"This is the first year we're hosting it at our Networking business show. We thought it would add a great deal to the show's preview party. Plus, it's a chance for participating restaurants to increase their exposure among a business audience — and that's the major purpose of Networking '92," Soronen said.

Taste of Farmington will feature a sampling of appetizers, specialty dishes and desserts from some of the area's most popular restaurants. Participants include Blue's Place, Caterrific Deli, Cottage Inn Pizza, Gourmet to Go, Hotel Baronette, It's Greek to Me; Lox, Stock & Barrel; Marco's, Matt Brady's, Metro Musicafe, Mountain Jack's, Periwinkle's, Wyndham Garden Hotel and more.

"We've done the Taste of Farmington ever since we opened. It's always been good for us from a public relations standpoint. We're looking forward to it this year, especially since it will be appealing to an even broader audience," said Marco Conte, owner of Marco's in downtown Farmington. Marco's will serve its famous cherry hazelnut chicken.

"Taste of Farmington is a great opportunity for resturants to show off their best food Being held at the trade show and in a larger facility will give restaurants even more exposure," said Diane Risko, director of catering sales for Matt Brady's Tavern in the Farmington Hills Holiday Inn.

Matt Brady's display will have a fall theme, featuring an ice carving, chocolate pate with raspberry sauce and a pasta station.

"As an independent hotel, we appreciate all the exposure we can get. This is a good opportunity for us to let people know that we also have an excellent restaurant and bake shop," said Andrea Miller, director of sales for the Hotel Baronette, Novi. The hotel's bake shop will serve miniature eclairs, cheesecake and honey nut bars.

Tickets are available for $15 per person at the door or by calling the Chamber of Commerce at 474-3440.
