To the Editor:

As a retired University of Michigan professor, I was very pleased to see "Putting Politics in Perspective," by Gangopadhyay, in the November 22nd issue of Hometown Life. The author, an associate professor of political science at the University of Michigan, brilliantly illuminates the politics of the "National Magazine" and the "Tea Party:" sensitive topics as these days are.

Don, Gangopadhyay, who lives in Northville Township, is an accomplished writer. His accomplished writing has received numerous awards, including a best book award and the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Prize. His work has been translated into 11 languages and has appeared in a variety of prestigious journals, including the American Behavioral Science Journal. His book, "Putting Politics in Perspective," has been hailed as a "brilliant and illuminating" work that "brings far-sighted perspectives in our complex political landscape to life in a manner that is both engaging and insightful." The author is a frequent contributor to political and academic journals and has been a guest on numerous radio and television programs. He has also received several prestigious grants and awards for his research and writing. His work has been translated into 11 languages and has appeared in a variety of prestigious journals, including the American Behavioral Science Journal. His book, "Putting Politics in Perspective," has been hailed as a "brilliant and illuminating" work that "brings far-sighted perspectives in our complex political landscape to life in a manner that is both engaging and insightful." The author is a frequent contributor to political and academic journals and has been a guest on numerous radio and television programs. He has also received several prestigious grants and awards for his research and writing.

Don, Gangopadhyay, who lives in Northville Township, is an accomplished writer. His accomplished writing has received numerous awards, including a best book award and the Robert F. Kennedy Human Rights Prize. His work has been translated into 11 languages and has appeared in a variety of prestigious journals, including the American Behavioral Science Journal. His book, "Putting Politics in Perspective," has been hailed as a "brilliant and illuminating" work that "brings far-sighted perspectives in our complex political landscape to life in a manner that is both engaging and insightful." The author is a frequent contributor to political and academic journals and has been a guest on numerous radio and television programs. He has also received several prestigious grants and awards for his research and writing. His work has been translated into 11 languages and has appeared in a variety of prestigious journals, including the American Behavioral Science Journal. His book, "Putting Politics in Perspective," has been hailed as a "brilliant and illuminating" work that "brings far-sighted perspectives in our complex political landscape to life in a manner that is both engaging and insightful." The author is a frequent contributor to political and academic journals and has been a guest on numerous radio and television programs. He has also received several prestigious grants and awards for his research and writing.

Sincerely,

[Your Name]

---

Continued from page A1

superintendent Mary \[a\] and is survived by her grandchildren: Dal-...